S[illegible]Y.

0 2007 0486554 8
California State Library

Accession No. 12532 Jun 1917

Call No. fc 051 C15

Dec 2 1865 - May 17 1866 4

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 1.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 2, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, December 1st, 1865.

RAT, tat, tat! Do you recognize that double-knock at the door, and the shuffle of peculiar feet on the staircase of these columns, my frieuds?

Alas for "feet," what a change has come over the "spirit," or rather the "sole" of our feet since last we met! My own are gouty, and, with the many that have been floating about the street of late, the possessors are degouté. so that I have abundant company. And as misery loves company, I am prepared to take everybody into my heart, mutually bargaining beforehand that we do not tread upon each other's toes.

As a general proposition I defy any one whom I take into my heart to tread upon my toes; it is au absolute as well as an anatomical impossibility.

I have often been called "sensitive to the extreme," but I never fairly deserved the title until now, when I cannot put a foot upon the ground without pain. For the future they may call me tender-toed, if they please, which amounts to about the same thing

Having pains in both head and feet, were a friend to ask me how I am to-day, I should reply: Middle-ing well, I thank you..or I might say: Extremely ailing..either reply would be consistent with truth.

For a pain in the toes I suppose one ought to consult Dr. Tozer.

But the idea of paying for advice is very repuguant to my feelings. I remember that I once gave a little advice to a friend, and came near getting my head punched iu consequence..and I didn't ask anything for it either.

And I remember that from my boyhood I have been accustomed to receive so much more advice than I could possibly follow for nothing..it always went for nothing..that the idea of paying for it now, in my old age, seems preposterous.

When I employ a doctor, I am always willing to pay him for his medicines, and return his visits..what could be fairer?

In this case I have had recourse to a medical friend who drives a couple of chargers, but is not one himself..at least, he never charges me anything.

I told him how much I resembled Noah's dove, in not being able to find rest for my feet..expecting of course that he would refer me to Arrow-root. But no, he prescribed Iodine.

As gout is supposed to come from dining, you will infer that he is a homeopathist, and acts on the old principle of like curing like.

The principle I believe to be a true one, for I notice if a girl likes me and finds out that I like her, it cures her liking at once, and this, I think, is a peculiarity of human nature.. iuhuman nature it might better be called.

I have said you may think my friend is a homeopathist. He is not..he is very seldom at home..his path does not lie in that direction.

O I dine! is the cry of him who beckoneth gout to his embrace, and I O dine is what the doctor prescribes when it comes.

You will observe that he merely thinks it necessary to produce a change of vowels.

Imagine au elderly but respectable gentleman sitting in an easy chair, supported by pillows, and painting his feet as though he were an Indian preparing for the war-path. Imagine that and you have a picture of me in your mind's eye, Horatio.

Perhaps you do not think that I am an artist..perhaps I am not..but I have an excellent understanding of art at present. I have painted birds and trees and flowers on my feet..no fox-gloves, because they would be out of place, and no lady-slippers, because they wouldn't fit..but I have painted other devices.

Had I been historically inclined, and disposed to portray what brought me to this condition, I should have painted some d-d.vices.

Fancy a flaneur in flannel—a back-slider in slippers.

The worst of it is, my medical friend will not allow me to have the gout..he says I am a gentleman of gout, but insists upon a Frenchification of the word. He declares that I am only suffering from a bruise, aud will be as graceful on foot as a bird in a few days.

I suppose I shall be about as graceful on foot as the bird called an elephant before that time, if this thing goes on.

If, after all, it be but a bruise, I must apologize to the reader for offering him a bruised read to-day.

What does Cherrylips think of my sudden desertion of her, I wonder. It is an age..two ages, in fact..since I have seen her. Because I cannot plant my feet on the ground am I to be supplanted in her affections? Because I can get on only slippers is some one else to stand in my shoes? The thought is distraction..madness.

But it boots not to complain.

I commenced this article with the intention of saying something pretty and pathetic.

I intended to tell my friends how glad I was to be with them again, what pleasure it gave me to take their hands once more in warm greeting, and again sit down in the comfortable corner where we used, of old, to so often meet, interchanging kindly sentiments..if not ideas..with each other, rattling on for our own amusement only; seldom stopping to inquire whether or not it amused others.

But I never was pretty and I cannot be pathetic.

My heart always warms to my friends, and among the readers of these columns I have many tried aud true ones.. who assisted in founding this paper, stood by it through all its early vicissitudes, and even persisted in identifying me with it, long after my connection with it had ceased. It is pleasant for me to address these true and tried friends once more through these familiar columns..I feel as though I were clasping their honest hands and looking into their truthful eyes..and this is what I set out to say when my eccentric feet led me in another direction, and I forgot myself in toe-toe.

Feet, feet, feet! I am not the only one who is tender on that score. More lame ducks are waddling around the streets than I had ever expected to see in this thriftful country.. though it was once visited, if not discovered, by a Drake.

To be put in the stocks was once considered a punishment, but what a fearful woe has overtaken those who went into them voluntarily.

The fate of the steamer Washoe was typical. Her uame was suggestive of stocks, she was built on stocks, and launched from stocks.

The consequence was she was always getting run down, and finally blew up, ruining her owner and playing havoc with every one who trusted in her.

Is there no resurrection for stocks, or are they buried beyond the reach of auy human power to raise them. Have we no Saul among the prophets, to summon some Witch of Endor to his aid, and, waving a wand above the grave where so many hopes and homesteads lie buried, raise the dead to life again..alas! no, not a Saulitary one. There is no resurgam written upon the tomb.

Music has no charms to soothe the breasts of those who own in Savage, Exchequer is overdrawn, Moscow has burned the fingers of all who meddled with it, Imperial has fallen beyond a Precedent, Yellow Jacket has stung those who held it like a wasp, Confidence is shaken, and Alpha is about as near to Omega as it well can get.

People had about as soon have cholera as Chollar.

And this reminds me that it is reported that cholera is indeed among us.

They tell me that Dr. Bowie says so. Now I think a deal of Dr. Bowie..one reason of my thinking of him so much, is a well defined impression upon my mind that I owe him a fee for services rendered me months ago.

I have never tendered him the fee because it would be simple to do so, and I permit no one in life to hold me in fee simple.

He administered chloroform to me once..moral reform was more needed, but he had none about him..aud he thought ether would answer..how happy. said he, can you be with ether. All my recollection of the experience is of a delicious languor that crept over me, and of a magical flute that seemed playing me to sleep..it was ouly the doctor's silver voice.

As I was saying, I think a good deal of Dr. Bowie, but he deceived me once to such an extent that I shall never put implicit confidence in him again. At a bal costumé, he made me think he was a Frenchman when he wasn't.

Consequently I refuse to believe that the cholera is in town. It is the rule of my life to never believe anything that is unpleasant, so at the risk of having a bowie-knife drawn upon me, I discredit the report. It is time enough to hand in one's checks when called upon for them, without stepping forward in unseemly haste.

Understand I do not defy death..it is a rather serious thing..too serious at least to be laughed at. But I do not think it a good plan to claim a coffin as yours until you see your name on the plate, or to shudder when a carriage stops at your door unless you are sure it is a hearse.

I know not which is the greater coward, he who lives in constant fear of the great change inevitable to all, or he who affects to treat it as a jest.

We do not go from our familiar homes to a strange place without a certain feeling of apprehension, nor can we part from friends even for a day without regret.

And none but a fool could launch his shell of a soul upon the great shoreless ocean which rolls beyond our vision, from whose unfathomed waters no voyager has ever returned with map and chart, without an indefinable awe and dread. Certainly no one with human feelings in his breast could take leave of friends forever, without a feeling of pain and regret.

I often think of the cavaliers and dames of the Decameron, who retired to a garden when the plague came and held its horrors at bay with story and song. And I sometimes regret that a few of the stories were not more delicate—not to say decent.

If the cholera come here, might it not be a good idea for a select club of ladies and gentlemen to retire to the country and play Arrah-na-Pogue. We have no Boccaccio in these days, but we have a Boucicault.

Apropos of theatricals, the quarrel of Bandmann at the Opera House occurs to me.

Without intending to take sides at all, and certainly without meaning to do violence to the feelings of the two talented young actors who were banded against Bandmann in the affair, I think that to a certain extent, the tragedian was right.

If the gentlemen annoyed him by talking upon the stage while he was rehearsing, it was competent for him to request them to retire.

From what I have seen of rehearsals in California, I think there is a gigantic screw loose in the system. Elsewhere a piece is rehearsed as it is played..here it is not. Behold! I have seen actress and actor come upon the stage with knitting and peanuts in their hands, and much, and much, while they mumbled over the text.

To my thinking, if they do not catch the spirit of their parts, and know precisely what they are to do, at rehearsals, the public will suffer when the piece comes to be played.

As it is, the first production of a piece here is nothing more than a properly conducted rehearsal. The sooner that this fault is corrected the better.

I cannot leave this subject without calling attention to one fact in connection with the emeute which illustrates a local vice. Aside from the moral which it points as regards a preservation of the proprieties as well as the properties at rehearsals, the quarrel was strictly a private one. Never a day passes that several Johns Smiths do not snap their fingers in any number of faces, or pull a great many Johns Joneses' noses..if the newspapers chronicled them all, they would have much more than their hands full, and be even less interesting than they now are. The disagreement between Bandmann and Aldrich was of a similar nature precisely, but it was published as widely as news of a suspension of diplomatic relations between the United States and England would be.

If this vice progresses much further, it will only be necessary to look to the morning newspaper for a thorough insight into our neigbor's affairs. We will know at what hour he returned home the previous night, and whether or not he had any trouble with his latch-key..any slight coolness which his wife manifests towards him at the breakfast-table will be known and accounted for, and everybody will enjoy that Fool's Paradise of dabbling in everybody else's business.

Let us hope that the completion of the Pacific railroad, and two or three more lines of telegraph, will place us more in connection with the outside world, and give newspapers a wider range of more interesting topics to discuss.

INIGO.

DARA.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

WHEN Persia's sceptre trembled in a hand
Wilted with harem-heats, and all the land
Was hovered over by those vulture ills
That snuff decaying empire from afar,
Then, with a nature balanced as a star,
Dara arose, a shepherd of the hills.

He who had governed fleecy subjects well,
Made his own village by the self-same spell
Secure and quiet as a guarded fold;
Then, gathering strength by slow and wise degrees,
Under his sway, to neighbor villages
Order returned, and faith, and justice old.

Now when it fortuned that a king more wise
Endued the realm with brain, and hands and eyes,
He sought on every side men brave and just;
And having heard our mountain shepherd's praise,
How he refilled the mould of older days,
To Dara gave a satrapy in trust.

So Dara shepherded a province wide,
Nor in his viceroy's sceptre took more pride
Than in his crook before; but envy finds
More food in cities than on mountains bare;
And the frank sun of spirits clear and rare
Breeds poisonous fogs in low and marish minds.

Soon it was whispered at the royal ear
That, though wise Dara's province, year by year,
Like a great sponge, sucked wealth and plenty up,
Yet, when he squeezed it at the king's behest,
Some yellow drops more rich than all the rest
Went to the filling of his private cup.

For proof, they said that, wheresoe'er he went,
A chest, beneath whose weight the camel bent,
Went with him; and no mortal eye had seen
What was therein, save only Dara's own.
But, when 'twas opened, all his tent was known
To glow and lighten with heaped jewels' sheen.

The king set forth for Dara's province straight,
Where as was fit, outside the city's gate,
The viceroy met him with a stately train,
And there, with archers circled, close at hand,
A camel with the chest was seen to stand;
The king's brow reddened, for the guilt was plain.

"Open me here," he cried, "this treasure chest!"
'Twas done, and only a worn shepherd's vest
Was found within. Some blushed and hung the head;—
Not Dara; open as the sky's blue roof
He stood, and "O my lord, behold the proof
That I was faithful to my trust," he said.

"To govern men, lo, all the spell I had!
My soul, in these rude vestments ever clad,
Still to the unstained past kept true and leal,
Still on these plains could breathe her mountain air,
And fortune's heaviest gifts serenely bear,
Which bend men from their truth and make them reel.

For ruling wisely I should have small skill,
Were I not lord of simple Dara still:
That sceptre kept, I could not lose my way."
Strange dew in royal eyes grew round and bright,
And strained the throbbing lids; before 't was night
Two added provinces blest Dara's sway.

[From "Good Company," in Press.

A Cow that Helped to Conquer the Rebellion.—The New Albany (Ind.) Ledger gives the following: At the agricultural fair at Charleston, a certain cow, decorated with blue and red ribbons, was the observed of all observers. She was captured from the rebels by Sherman's army near Corinth, Miss., in the summer of 1862, and has accompanied the army in all its marches, countermarches, raids and expeditions from that time up to the final disbandment of the army at Washington. She is the property of Gen. Clark of New York, who, expecting to go on duty at New Orleans, had this cow sent westward, with a view to taking her to this new field of duty. But the General being ordered back to New York, the cow will be sent thither and placed in the Central Park. This cow, during all her journeyings through Mississippi, Tennessee, Georgia, South and North Carolina, and Virginia—a period of three years—has never ceased to give milk, averaging three gallons a day, which she still gives. She is certainly a noble animal, and wears her ribbons gracefully. She is now in the care of Mr. George W. Lee, of Clark county.

In Russia, "freedom of the press" has been established. It may be defined as "freedom with a vengeance." The editors of newspapers are allowed the option of having their leading articles pruned, in manuscript, by the authorities, or of publishing them in all their naked simplicity, thereby subjecting them, if offensive, to the clauses of a very horrifying code of pains and penalties. An editor found guilty, under the new system, of "undermining public confidence in the justice and efficiency of the laws, or of the decrees of government officials or judges," may be fined five hundred roubles, or sent, for an indeterminate period, to the house of correction.

A MYSTERIOUS COLLISION AT SEA.

BY C. L. R.

IN the year 184– the writer went out to Bombay, for the purpose of joining the fleet which was stationed in the East Indies, in the good ship Amphitrite, when a somewhat mysterious event occurred to vary the monotony of an ordinary voyage round the Cape.

It was a lovely day early in the month of February, and the ship was bowling along "close hauled," with a splendid breeze. We were nearing the Line, and had lost the north-east monsoon which blows with varying force all the year round north of the equator, and were fortunate in having fallen in with a good steady southeasterly wind, that promised to last some time, and carry us perhaps into southern latitudes; for we had experienced a long run of bad weather in the "chops of the Channel." The winter had been unusually severe, and the gales during the months of November and and December very frequent. After a great deal of knocking about, we felt the more pleased with the change. As I was saying, there was a fine, spanking breeze—what is called by sailors a "topgallant breeze;" that is, when the ship can just carry well her topgallant sails. The beautiful morning had given place to as beautiful an afternoon; the sea was smooth, with a long swell; and the dancing waves, with their crests just ruffled by the wind and tipped with foam, came tumbling one over the other in a joyous way, as if running a race to meet the ship; but, on encountering the opposition of the bows, these "white horses" speedily succumbed, and, after an angry buffet against the stern, disappeared in the black depths under her bilge.

The Amphitrite was a new ship, marked A 1 at Lloyd's, of 1800 tons burden, and this was her first voyage; she was clipper-built, and the fastest vessel I ever sailed in. We never looked out for ships astern, but whenever a sail was sighted, it was always ahead, and before night we were certain to leave her hopelessly behind. Many a storm and gale have I experienced on board her, and right nobly she always behaved in them, riding over the waves in spite of the immense weight aloft of the heaviest and squarest spars ever fitted to a ship of her size. Once in a hurricane, when we were lying-to quite snugly, a large China trader went down before our eyes. On the 10th of February, the day of which I am writing, the Amphitrite was sailing with her yards "braced sharp up" on the port tack, and every stitch of canvas was drawing, she having all "plain sail" set. The passengers (myself among the number) were all standing on the poop, talking and joking, and looking forward to doing justice to a good dinner, for which this pleasant sea-breeze gave us an appetite. On a long sea voyage dinner is the great event of the day, to which every one looks forward as breaking the monotony in an agreeable manner. The heat of the day had been great, although tempered by a double awning spread over the poop, under which we had placed our easy-chairs, and, with our books in our hands as a make-believe, we enjoyed the sweets of the dulce far niente. Conversation naturally turned on crossing the Line and its attendant ceremonies, which were pretty generally spoken of as follies, especially by some young cadets going out to join the army, who were looking forward, half with feelings of curiosity and half of dread, to the advent of Neptune with his motley crew and bucket of slush. Of all senseless customs and traditions, this Line folly is about the most unreasonable. There can be no harm in the sailors dressing up and blundering through a performance, but the manner in which passengers often are ill-used is monstrous. This nuisance is now considerably abated, and it is hoped will soon entirely cease to disgrace the mercantile marine. Few respectable merchant-captains allow their passengers to be insulted. The practical joking is frequently used as a means of extorting money from timid people, who would pay anything rather than be subjected to ill-treatment.

Three or four of the cadets had expressed their determination to join together for the purpose of resisting any attempt to make merry at their expense, when suddenly the look-out man on the foreyard sang out, "Sail ho!"

"Where away?" was the query from the officer of the watch on the quarter-deck.

"On the port bow," was the rejoinder.

The mate then asked what he made her out to be; and the reply was that she looked like a full-rigged ship, but, as she was coming down before the wind, he could not make out for certain what her rig was. The captain, being informed of this, soon came upon deck, with his long glass, and tried to find her. We, all of us who possessed telescopes, went on the forecastle, and swept the horizon forward, but could see nothing; but this was to be accounted for from the fact of her not having yet appeared above the horizon. However, in a few minutes we made the white sail out, like a speck in the far distance. The ladies now came upon deck, and the remainder of the passengers; for it is wonderful what an interest the sight of a ship creates among people wearied of seeing nothing but sea and sky—only "water, water everywhere." It is always an event to be marked in the log-book, and duly chronicled in the diaries of the "cuddy" passengers, and we had seen nothing lately on the waters except the ordinary sea-birds that follow in the wake of a ship, picking up whatever will fill their maws, and which, sometimes settling on the waves, are at first a source of amusement, and give rise to discussions as to where their home among this wild waste of waters may be.

The breeze was freshening, and soon we were gratified by a nearer inspection of the stranger. We found that she was a square-rigged ship, with all sail set, royal and studding sails below and aloft and on both sides. She "walked the waters like a thing of life," and came down before the wind like a race-horse, with the foam curling away from her bows. There are few more beautiful sights than a fine ship heeling over under full sail, with the copper on her weather side showing, and every stitch of canvas bellying out to catch the favoring breeze. The ladies were admiring her beautiful proportions, and the fine effects of the setting sun as it lit up her sails and glistened along her sides, painted black, but relieved with white ports. All hands now crowded up as the word was passed that the strange ship wished to speak; for she appeared as if steering to intercept us. Nearer she came and nearer, and, now that we could see her so well, the passengers retired to the poop, there to be out of the way, and the better to hear all that was said. The captain sent his boy down to his cabin for the speaking-trumpet, and we began speculating as to her nationality, for we could not see any flag flying. Some of the young cadets, having probably more money than they knew what to do with, began laying bets as to whether she was English or Swedish; for the quartermaster, an old salt, said she was a Swedish-built ship. To induce her to show her colors, we hoisted the ensign, and then eagerly watched for a response. But no "bit of bunting" fluttered up to her mizzen-peak; and one of our number, the doctor, who was rather romantically inclined, conjectured she might be a "rover free."

The wind was now blowing freshly; but the ship still carried her royals and studding sails, and still came bearing down on us. We altered our course a point, just to see if she really did wish to speak, and the stranger appeared to follow suit. This seemed to decide the captain as to the ship's intention of communicating with us, but yet she persisted in not showing her colors—a most unusual thing on the high seas, where common courtesy dictates an exchange of flags; and, what was still more strange, we could see no indication of life on her decks, for there were no heads peeping above the bulwark or the rail of her forecastle. The look-out man, who had a bird's-eye view of her, on being hailed, said he could see no men on board.

There is a "law of the road," at sea, as there is on shore among drivers of vehicles; and it is this: ships on the port tack, sailing near the wind, give way to vessels on the starboard; and ships running before the wind yield the pride of place to any they may encounter close-hauled on either tack. Now, we being "full and by," that is close-hauled, it was the duty of the stranger, in case of an accident, and to avoid a collision, to put her helm a-port and get out of the way. I mention this to exculpate us from all blame as to what followed. We, not expecting anything, but being still under the impression she had something to communicate, kept on our course; but it soon became evident that her captain intended passing almost too near us for safety. If he had his ship well in hand, however, he might with ease prevent any disaster arising from our proximity. Some dark clouds were rising up, the wind blew now strong and in gusts, and we could not imagine how the other skipper could be so insane as to keep his topgallant studding-sails set.

Being seen within hailing distance, our captain raised the speaking-trumpet to his mouth, and shouted out, in a stentorian voice, "Ship ahoy! What ship's that?" No answer. "Ship ahoy!" again rang over the waters. Still no reply to the summons. "What does this mean?" said the captain to the first mate and a knot of passengers, myself among the number. We were standing by him on the break of the poop.

We all looked at one another, and then at the ship anxiously. What, indeed, could be intended by this silence? Was it a ruse to carry out some diabolical purpose? It was dusk, and stories that I had read, when at school, of the "Flying Dutchman," and other old sea legends, involuntarily recurred to me and raced unbidden through my brain. Not a soul could be seen on her decks, which were now distinctly visible. "Ship ahoy!" for the third time Captain H—— bellowed out, and then ran off the poop to the quarter-deck, for it was now awfully certain there must be a collision. "Put the helm hard up!" he shouted out to the quartermaster as he descended the ladder; but it was too late. I saw how it was to be, and caught hold of the cross-jack lifts to steady myself. Like lightning the huge mass of wood and tall spars and towering canvas struck us full on the port bow, a blow that caused every timber and plank in the vessel to creak and groan with the concussion. So terrific was the shock that our ship seemed absolutely to stand still as if aghast; the masts and yards shook and reeled like a forest of trees when blown by the passing gale; and the sails for an instant were thrown flat, aback, in spite of the fresh breeze that was bellying them out and stretching the canvas to its utmost tension.

I saw that several of the crew and passengers were thrown down: and, as is usual on such occasions, the ladies fainted right and left. Some only wrung their hands, and screamed in an agony of terror; but the gentlemen hurried them all down indiscriminately into the scuddy—not a very safe place, certainly, if we were going to founder; but there was confusion enough on deck without its being "worse confounded," by the presence of insensible ladies, young and old When the ship struck us on the port bow her bowsprit was right over our decks. At the last moment, when it was too late to be of much service, our helm had been put "hard up," thereby paying the Amphitrite's head off. Instead, therefore, of the stranger steering alongside of us, she carried on her way, with her huge bower anchor, the flukes of which were hanging over the side, tearing all along our bulwarks, carrying away "dead-eyes," and "land-yards," and laying the ship's side open. Up aloft matters were much worse; for the yards and studding-sail booms, and all the gear, were caught in inextricable confusion, and came rattling about our ears; most of the spars, fortunately for the safety of those below, falling overboard. The noise of the creaking timber and tumbling booms and yards was terrific. Nothing could be done; for the two ships had each great way on them, and it was patent they would soon clear each other, even if the masts were to go "by the board" in the struggle. Three of our men were seriously injured by the falling debris, and had to be carried below; one poor fellow with both legs broken.

In the meantime, how had our opponent fared through all this business? One of her studding-sail yards fell on the poop with its sail, and the spar, falling "end on," dashed a hole through the deck, nearly knocking my brains out at the same time. Her foretopmast went like a reed, carrying with it the maintop-gallant-mast and the jibboom: but all this luckily fell clear of us into the water. The most singular thing of all, however, was the fact that not a soul could be seen anywhere on board her—neither on the look-out, nor on the decks, nor on the poop; and, what was incomprehensible, there was no one at the wheel. She seemed like a ship of the dead. Had we chosen, we could have jumped on board her with ease, as, in her mad career, she tore along our whole length, from the "cathead" to the "boomkin," where was fitted the "pennant" of the main brace, and which, as a parting salute, she broke short off, like a carrot. Everybody seemed for the moment paralysed, and took shelter till the storm of falling wreck and blocks had subsided.

The stranger presently dropped astern, after having done us all this mischief; and we could then see that she was a large ship of 1000 or 1100 tons burden, of English build, and deeply laden. She looked a perfect wreck, with her rigging all hanging about, and her "top hamper" trailing in the water, mixed up with gear and sails. All this happened in much less time than I take to narrate it, and in a few seconds a fine ship was reduced to this pitiable condition. However, our thoughts were chiefly centred on our own safety; and the first thing to discover was whether we were in a sinking condition or no. The captain immediately ordered the carpenter to sound the well. On doing so, he reported that there were eight inches of water; and, as this was only an addition of two inches above the usual amount, we were much relieved. A party was told off to the pumps, and all watched with anxiety to see whether the water gained on us. The boatswain piped "Hands clear wreck!" and up aloft streamed the topmen to send down the stumps of the shattered masts and clear the tangled ropes.

It was fast getting dark, and now that our immediate safety was assured, we turned our thoughts to the stranger. When she first sheered off, all her sails were flat aback, and she was evidently without guidance, and just "forging" ahead slowly through the water; but she again soon fell off before the wind, and ploughed along her watery way as before.

We could see the ship a long way astern, and, as we passengers were talking and discussing the collision, suddenly one of our number exclaimed, "Hullo! I can't make her out now." We looked, and she was gone. The spot she occupied a moment before was vacant. We went to the captain and informed him of the sudden disappearance of the strange ship; but he answered he had quite enough on his hands to occupy himself and all his crew, without lowering a boat and sending her, he did not know how far astern, on such a Quixotic erraud. He said it was getting dark, and looked like bad weather ahead, and he must make all straight aloft before the gale came on. Besides, said he, to put an end to our remonstrances, it must have been all a mistake; it was so dark that we had lost sight of her position; that she was probably all right, and we, no doubt, all wrong in our conjectures as to her having foundered. It was of no use arguing with him. We were firmly convinced that the unfortunate ship had gone down, as all of us were looking in her direction and saw her distinctly only a few seconds before her disappearance. The quartermaster on duty, whose attention was in no way taken up with the refitting of the wreck, afterwards corroborated our statements and ideas as to the end of the unlucky vessel. He expressed no opinion then, for he did not feel himself called on to express a different view of the question from the captain. Every one agreed that there was not a creature on the decks anywhere when the two ships were in collision, with one exception, and that was the above named petty officer, who declared that he saw just before she dropped so far astern as to render her wheel invisible, a man running up on deck from below to the after-part. If this were so, it would account for her sails filling again.

The whole affair was shrouded in mystery, and we never discovered anything about her. To this day I know not what was her name, her country, or whither she was bound, and probably never shall. When we arrived in the East Indies two months after this affair, the captain made no inquiries respecting the fate of the ship, and, I subsequently discovered, forbade his officers speaking about her to any one ashore or afloat. He could not stop our tongues, however, and for a long time this strange occurrence was the fruitful source of conversation. After the first shock, the imaginative young ladies launched out into all manner of romantic notions with respect to her. There was much ground for speculation and discussion, although we could learn nothing fresh thereby. Had the ship, having sprung a-leak, been deserted by the crew while becalmed on the Line, and then the unfortunate seamen, considering they had no time to "shorten sail," abandoned her with all sail set? and had a breeze subsequently sprung up and driven her in a wild unguided career over the trackless sea, until she fell athwart our hawse, and so met her destruction? Was it so? or had the crew risen in mutiny against the captain and officers, and, after binding or murdering them, abandoned themselves down between decks to drunken dissipation, and, revelling in unwonted freedom from control, left the ship to take care of herself? If what the quartermaster stated he saw really took place, the last was the more probable supposition. But whether this was the case, or whether the fresh water had given out and the ship's company taken to the boats as I have stated, we never discovered.

The whole affair was inexplicable, one of those unsolved mysteries that sometimes come across the path of those wayfarers who "go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters." How many a gallant bark has left a foreign port with her crew all full of life, and looking forward to the day when the white cliffs of their native land would gladden their eyes, and the warm pressure of the hand of loved ones cheer their hearts, before they again encounter the perils and hardships of a sea life! and then what do we hear? It is known that she sailed out of port one morning with a favoring breeze, the crew rousing up the harbor echoes with their capstan song, causing many an exile on shore to heave an envious sigh at the good luck which takes them home, but leaves him still to pine in a foreign land. But then days and weeks lengthen out into months, and we read in the papers how at Lloyd's the insurance on the missing ship has been raised to an ominous figure. Still no tidings reach the anxious home of sorrowing friends, and gradually sickening hope gives place to fell despair; and hearts fail; and mayhap one, the true and constant, whose happiness is wrapped up in the welfare of him whose body, tossed hither and thither on the cruel waves, has long, long ago been food for the fishes, slowly breaks; and the poor young wife, so lately full of love and pride, is borne to an early and untimely gave in a quiet country churchyard, far from him she loved so well in life.

This, perhaps, was one of those mysteries of the deep. Although the captain acted wrongly, as I think, on this occasion, my readers must not infer that he was unfeeling. Far from it, he was very kind-hearted to his crew, and always bore a character as a humane man; but, it was clearly his duty to lower a boat, or rather to return on the track of the stranger, and, if he could not make her out in the darkness, to lie by the spot where she was last seen till morning would enable him to prosecute his search. He was right as to the weather; for it soon came on to blow a gale of wind, and we were under double-reefed topsails before midnight. Although much strained, the Amphitrite made little water, and we repaired our damages aloft, and were soon all right again. On arriving in port the ship had her "top-sides" looked to and repaired, and all signs of the "collision at sea" were effaced.

THE editor of one of the great Parisian reviews, settling with Charles Nodier for an article he had written, which was to be paid for by the line, demurred very much at counting the spaces as printed matter. At last he came to the signature. "Well," said he. "Monsieur Nodier, you are certainly not going to make me pay for the signature?" "Of course not," replied Nodier, "you can leave it out altogether. I don't care about its being printed at all." The editor saw that he had been caught in a trap, as the siguature was what gave value to the article. He never disputed afterwards the price with M. Nodier.

PAT gave his testimony in a riot case: "Be jabers, the first man I saw coming at me was two brickbats."

"NASBY" ON POLITICAL MANIFESTATIONS

THE "Nasby Papers" continue to be unique. They are entirely original in their way, and are equal to the best things of Major Jack Downing, Artemus Ward, or Josh Billings. His last letter to the Cincinnati Commercial, he introduces as follows:

Ginral Boanerges Pogram, uv Mississippy, who demonstrated his devoshun to the grate prinsiples uv constitooshnal liberty by serving the confedrasy as a comissary, wrote me to meet him in Washinton. He hed jest reseeved his pardon, and the fust yoose he made uv his privileges wuz to cum to Washinton to meet me for consultashen on the hopes and prospex uv the Dimocrisy.

Ginral Pogram is a fine specimen uv the ginooine shivelrus sutherner. Six feet 2 inches in hite, he kin chaw more terbacker, spit with greater accooracy, and walk uprite under a hevyer lode uv strate whisky than any man I ever met. A unsofistikatid child uv nacher, he scorns the polish and sham uv wat is called civilization. Never shel I forgit the liteninglanse uv contempt he dartid at me, when I askt him to qualify his whisky with a little water.

Ginral Pogram opened by lamentin the untimely decease uv so many suthern voters, in the late diabolikle war Linkin and his helyuns made upon 'em.

I replied to-wunst, that that deficit cood be easily made up. "I hev," sez I, "bin a considrin this matter. At a triflin expenditoor uv money the tide uv emigrashun from Europe kin be turned southward, and the places uv yoor slawtered heroes be filled with the Irishmen, the German, the—"

"Liar! theef! murdrer! nigger-steeler!" showtid the Ginral, seezin me by the throte, and brandishin his cane over me.

Fallin on my knees (formin a tablow, the "Yoonyun ez it wuz") I garspt:

"Why this violence?"

"O nuthin," replied the Ginral, relaxin his holt; "I shel be electid to Congris, and ez I shel hev to mix with yoo Yankees, I wuz a practisin the old tacktix, jist to git my hand in agin. Wuz yoo afeerd? Bless yoor sole, we woodent kill a Northern Dimekrat for no money—we need 'em."

The followiug is a political document of some significance:

SAINTS' REST, (which is in the State uv } Noo Gersey.) October 11, 1865. }

Ohio, Ablishn! Pennsylania, Ablishn! Iowa, Ablishn and nigger suffrage too boot! Injiany, Ablishner than ever! Noo Gersey, not eggsacly Ablishn, but approaching thereunto.

Sich is the encouragin news I red in the noospapers this mornin! Sich is the result of my labors Hercoolian in the above-named States. What do the people mean?

The pure Dimokrasy probably will carry Noo York; but of what consolation is that to me? The two parties, the old anshent Dimokrisy and the Ablishn, ran a race into Radikalism, and the Dimokrasy beat them over a length. With a platform standin by Johnson, indorsin his anti-slavery noshens, his Suthern oppression noshens, his hangin of Mrs. Surratt, et settery, and on that platform a sojer who never voted a Dimokratik ticket in his life, who went into the war a Radikle Ablishnist, and who kum out a Radikler Ablishnist, I don't know that I hev much to choose atween 'em.

Last week I was invited in to a county in Noo York, to address a Dimokratik meetin. I accepted (ez my expensis were paid, wich is cheeper and better boardin than I get at the groceries to hum.) and akkordinly I went. I commenst deliverin the speech I had yoused all over Noo Gersey. I commeust aboosing the nigger, when the Cheerman interrupted me.

"Well," sez I, "wat is it?" rather angrily, for I git warmed up and a sweatin, and don't like to be interrupted.

"Why," sed he, "our Constitooshun allows a nigger who has $250 to vote, and most uv em hev that sum, and we make it a point to sekoor em."

"They're better off than most uv us white Dimokrats in Noo Gersey," retorted I, a droppin the nigger and goin on agin President Johnson.

"Stop," whispered the Cheerman, "our platform indorses President Johnson."

"Thunder!" remarked I, droppin President Johnson and sliding easily into a viggerous denunsiation uv the war.

I sed nuthin this time, but commenst denounsin the debt.

"Hold," said the Cheerman, "easy—easy—our platform backs up the debt."

"Well, then," sed I, in a rage, "why in bluzis didn't yoo send me a copy uv yoor platform when you wantid me to address you? Go to thunder and make your own speechis;" and I stawked off the platform.

Time wuz when wun speech wood do a man awl over the North; now you hev to hev a diffrent wun fur evry Stait, wich maiks it impossible fur me to travil, fur one effort per season is enuff for me.

But, ez I wuz sayin, we are beat agin, and beat badly—beat on issues uv our own makin—beat with taxis, bonds, war debt and nigger equality, all in our favor. Don't say to me that we redoost their majorities. What diffrence does it make to a defeatid candidait, whether the majority agin him is wun thousand or wun hundred? A needle will kill a man as effectnally as a broadsword, ef it's stuck in the right place. So a majority uv wun is enuff. I have known men to hold orfises for years, and have good appetites on a majority uv wun. Its the orfises we wuz a goin fur—its them our patriots wantid, and its no consolation to them to say they mist by a small majority. Its holler mockery—the same ez tho you'd show a starvin man a loaf of bread just inside of iron bars—his fingers are not an inch from it, but so far ez his cravin stomach is concerned, it mite as well be across the boundless ocean.

We may recover from this backset, but I hev my fears. The people is ez stoopid ez ever, and our leaders is ez akoot ez ever; but alas! the fact that we hev failed in everything we hev undertook, for four years, is gettin throo the hair uv thousands, and they look askant at us.

Be it ez it may, it makes but little diffrence to me. A few years, at furthrest, and I shel go hentz. Ef the Bible is troo, I shel go where I will find a heavy Dimokratik majority, shoor; ef it is not, and there is no hereafter, why, then, at least, I shel be on a level with the rest.

"So, let the wide world wag as it will,"

I'll keep on the even tenor uv my way, takin my nips ez often ez I kin find a confidin sole who hez more money than diskreshun.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY,
Lait Paster uv the Church uv the Noo Dispensashun.

NEW BOOKS.

WE are indebted to A. Roman & Co., No. 417 and 419 Montgomery street, for the following new books:

History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Death of Elizabeth. By James Anthony Froude, M.A., late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Vols. III. and IV. New York: Charles Scribner & Co.

Mr. Froude has selected an epoch in English history, which, although frequently written about, seems to have been less thoroughly analyzed and less accurately discribed than any other. We have Lingard, Burnet and Hume—histories taken from conservative, political and ecclesiastical points of view, but none as impartial, truth-loving and healthy in style as this of Mr. Froude. Mr. Froude himself confesses that he had to overcome his own prejudices. "When I commenced," he says in his preface, "the examination of the records, I brought with me the inherited impression, from which I had neither any thought nor any expectation that I should be disabused. I found that it melted between my hands, and with it disappeared that other fact so difficult to credit, yet, as it had appeared, so impossible to deny, that English parliaments, English judges, English clergy, statesmen whose beneficent legislation survives among the most valued of our institutions, prelates who were the founders and martyrs of the English Church, were the cowardly accomplices of abominable atrocities, and had disgraced themselves with a sycophancy which the Roman Senate imperfectly approached when it fawned upon Nero." Honesty like this cannot fail to awaken sympathetic feeling in the mind of the reader. He disabuses them of their old prejudices in his calm, philosophic reasoning. Theologians might object that he does not prominently recognize direct Divine interposition in this epoch of religious reformation; that he does not dwell particularly on the influences of Romanism or Protestantism in any denominational or partisan spirit. Yet the imputation of infidelity or materialism cannot rest upon this calm historian, who recognizes so distinctly the progress and purification of morality and true religion under Divine tuition.

Mr. Froude, departing from the opinions of predecessors, attributes those changes to Henry VIII. He does not make him a God, nor whitewash his character of those blots which all writers and historians have affixed upon his royal robes. Yet, like Henry V., the levities and frivolities of youth being laid aside, Mr. Froude intimates that he grew in moral stature, and rose equal to the emergency of affairs. He was passionate and obstinate, but those qualities were necessary and became virtues in the vexed and veering troubles of the kingdom. His inconsistency is accounted for as the inconsistencies of the nation, at whose head he marched. But like the tacking of a ship in adverse wind, Mr. Froude believes his course to have been always true, and in the line of reform and progress.

From Mr. Froude's view-point, Henry VIII. was king of England in all that makes kingship noble and powerful. He was a leader. He brought the commonwealth out from the despotism of Papacy and avoided European domination. He consolidated the kingdom; made Scotland and Ireland submissive to the central power; brought to the Commons a knowledge of its rights and privileges, and used the community against the exclusiveness of the nobles. Under Henry, England began to have recognized power in European councils. France, Germany and Spain would have prevented it if they could. Mr. Froude makes a point of Henry's act ordering the clergy to exhort the people to read the English Bible. He says: "In this act was laid the foundation stone on which the whole later history of England, civil as well as ecclesiastical, has been reared." Mr. Froude's style is simple and manly as his thought. He tells his story well; his natural and unaffected sentences and climaxes are in agreeable contrast to the rhetorical and elaborate periods of the classic English historians. The appearance of this book, and Forsythe's Cicero, seem to foretell a characteristic change from the abstract stateliness, and cumbrous, though magnificent ornamentation of the great English historic writers. The triumphal marches of Macauley, Hume, Alison and Gibbon partake somewhat of the characteristic conveyances of the epochs of which they wrote. They move in ornamented gilded coaches, in formal trains and processions, in liveries of scarlet and blue. The young English historians adopt more comfortable locomotion, or do not scruple to avail themselves of an omnibus occasionally as a vehicle for their thoughts.

The volumes are handsome specimens of the art of bookmaking and binding, and, as an American edition, are worthy of the highest praise.

The Gulistan, or Rose Garden. By Musle-Uddeen Sheik Saadi, of Shiraz. Translated from the original by Francis Gladwin, with an essay on Saadi's life and genius by James Ross, and a preface by R. W. Emerson. Boston: Ticknor & Fields. 1865. 12mo.; pp. 379.

Americans are much indebted to Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson, for introducing to their libraries this contribution from Oriental literature. This volume is a pleasant response to the wishes of our people for an introduction to the works of genius which we know abound in Persian literature. We have heretofore known but little more than the names of some of the greatest poets of the East, of Nizami, of Firdausi, and of Saadi; and the presentation to American readers of a just translation of the "Gulistan" of the latter great poet is most commendable, and deserves our gratitude. The German literature has been enriched heretofore by translations of specimens from two hundred Persian bards by the genius of Von Hammer Purgstall. While, heretofore, comparatively little attention has been given by American students to the study of the Oriental literature, mainly owing no doubt to the forbidding difficulty of the original languages, it is pleasant to know that there is a prospect that this neglect is about to be retrieved, from the presence in our colleges of good Semitic and Sanscrit scholars.

The present volume does not need any special words of commendation from our pen. The poet, who has been longer or better known in the Western nations than any of his countrymen, was a man of such rich and varied experience as to free his writings from all provincial tone, and to facilitate his speaking to the universal heart and mind. He was "by turns a student, a water-carrier, a traveller, a soldier fighting against the Christians in the Crusades, a prisoner employed to dig trenches before Tripoli, and an honored poet in his protracted old age at home." Says Mr. Emerson, his American editor: "Saadi, though he has not the lyric flights of Hafiz, has wit, practical sense, and just moral sentiment;" "he has the instinct to teach, and, from every occurence, must draw the moral, like Franklin; "the poet of friendship, love, self-devotion, and serenity." The Gulistan is divided into eight chapters, respectively, upon the Morals of Kings, of Durwaishes, upon the Excellency of Contentment, the Advantages of Silence, Love and Youth, Imbecility and Old Age, the Effects of Education, and Rules for the Conduct of Life. "A learned man without works," says Saadi, "is a bee without honey. Say to the austere and uncivil bee, 'When you cannot afford honey, do not sting.'" There is a rich aroma about his philosophy, and, in remembrance of his varied experience, and in his contemplative solitude, he has spoken many wise things. "It is not the part of a wise man to box with a lion, or to strike his fist against a sword. Neither fight nor contend with one more powerful than yourself; put your hand under your armpit." In the preface to this work, the author, after a pleasant allusion to the compliments which his countrymen have liberally bestowed upon him, ascribes his own popularity not to his own merit and eloquence, "but it is owing," he adds, with Oriental superlativeness, "to the monarch of the earth, who is the axis of the revolution of time, the representative of Solomon, the defender of the faithful the mighty king of kings, the illustrious Atabuk Mozuffaruddeen Aboobukr, the son of Sad, the son of Zungy, the shadow of God on earth," who has regarded him "with the eye of kindness." The spirit and tone of the author is devotional, and he acknowledges that his work has been brought to a conclusion "through God's assistance;" he has "not followed the custom of authors by inserting verses borrowed from former writers," in that, "it is better to be dressed in one's own old garments than to ask the loan of a new vest." In a volume written in the early part of the thirteenth century, by a poet of Persia, it would not be strange if occasionally we should meet with passages which would be held exceptionable in works of to-day. The present volume does not differ from our expectations. What a finical taste might have elided in this volume has been allowed to remain by the American editor, undoubtedly that the work of the poet might have unity and completeness. It is a book for the educated; the crisp wisdom that characterizes the whole, will shine clearly above the flickering morality of a part.

Good Company for Every Day in the Year. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Good Company is the apt and apposite title of one of Messrs. Ticknor & Fields' new volumes of prose excerpts and selections. The design of this work is to furnish an engraved portrait of celebrated writers and poets, accompanied with a characteristic selection from their writings. Southey is represented by a love story from the pages of the Doctor, printed for the first time in America. The portraits are excellent, that of Hawthorne—to which is attached "Little Pansie,'" an exquisite fragment from an unfinished novel—is somewhat younger-looking than the photographs of a year previous. The counterfeit presentment of Longfellow is quite unlike his former pictures—bearded and flowing-haired, like Tennyson—and bears little resemblance to the smooth-chinned Professor of other days. We give an extract—"Dara," by Lowell—in another column. The volume is handsomely bound, and makes an excellent gift book.

The Metropolites; or, Know Thy Neighbor. A Novel. By Robert St Clair. New York: American News Company.

Under the disguise of handsome covers and a respectable exterior, this book offers the reading public about as pitiable trash as ever circulated under the title of "Dime Novels," or in the pages of fourth-rate weeklies. The first chapter describes the shipwreck of the hero—on Coney Island—and is the only coherent statement in the volume. The following is a fair example of the style:

"The harp of revelry is hushed, the gridiron is hung up, the bowl of mirth is broken, the saucepan is mute; cold winds sweep though lofty corridors to sigh a parting requiem over sullied honor, fallen grandeur, and dilapidated fancy shirt collars. Will you, will you, William, weep for this decline in starch? A rumor has gone forth to overcome her as a summer compliment in a special train. It is whispered in hymn-books, it is muttered in Hoyle, and a jews-harp caught faintly the sound as it fell."

Or:

"These angels, you must know, are in strict communion with each other, in the hope of reviving a society suitable for their dark ages, which set in severely with black silks, somber velvets, and dismal shawls, after forty years' run in single harness, in a one horse concern, with some occasional fast driving clandecently [the spelling is the author's] which. O no, we'll never mention now, it's name is never heard at the four o'clock of their afternoon of life, when they are walking up to settle at the captain's office of Mrs. Grundy's establishment."

In addition to the above, the following volumes are received, and will be noticed next week: Two Men, Atalanta in Calydon, Æsop's Fables, Charcoal Sketches, and The Book of Rubies.

HOMELY GIRLS.—The editor of the Cleveland Herald, having been tolerably profuse in his compliments to the pretty girls of Cleveland, has been requested to say a good thing in behalf of the homely ones, and he does it thus:

First. The homely girls of Cleveland are in a hopeless minority, but they mean well.

Second. They go to church every Sunday and are fond of their meals. They had rather have their meals regularly than a new bonnet.

Third. They understand their business, and wear No. 16 gaiters.

Fourth. They are bright, intelligent, devoid of low jealousy, fond of music, dance at Garrett's Hall as though it was the chief aim of life, and always go in when it rains.

Filth. They always thank the gentlemen for giving them seats in the street cars; never flirt with the boys—because it's out of their line—and keep out of the fire.

Sixth. They never have half a dozen young sprigs keeping company with them.

Seventh. They wash their own handkerchiefs, iron their own collars, and darn their own stockings.

Eighth. They never wear waterfalls that weigh over one hundred and fifty pounds, and have neither "rats" nor other animals in their hair.

Ninth. They don't call the young bloods, and other trash, "perfectly splendid."

Tenth. They never eat between meals.

Eleventh. They are all going to get married.

Twelfth. They will all marry well.

Thirteenth. Their children will be bright and shining lights in the world.

Fourteenth. They won't keep hired girls till their husbands can afford them.

Fifteenth. They sleep under mosquito bars when convenient.

Sixteenth. They can make coffee and nut cakes and can do chamberwork.

Seventeenth. They are O. K.

Eighteenth. They are homely, but oh Jernsalem!

Nineteenth. They know they are homely.

Twentieth. They perspire when the thermometer is at 94 in the shade, and wear gored waists.

Twenty-first. Young gentlemen don't squeeze them by the hand, and they like pea-nuts.

A BATTLE SEEN WITH THE NAKED EYE.

THE New York Citizen contains a very graphic sketch under the above caption, by a volunteer aid-de-camp. Circumscribed space allows us to make only a few extracts, although the article deserves to be reproduced entire:

GOING INTO BATTLE.

As I passed into the highway again, and riding through narrow passages, grazing officers' knees, turning vicious battery horses, winding in and out of woods, making detours through pasture fields, leaping ditches, and so making perilous progress, I passed many friends who hailed me cheerfully—here a brigadier general who waved his hand, or a colonel who saluted, or a staff officer who rode out and exchanged inquiries or greetings, or a sergeant who winked and laughed. These were some of the men whose bodies I was to stir to-morrow with my foot, when the eyes that shone upon me now would be swollen and ghastly.

Some of the privates seeing me in plain clothes, as I had joined the army merely as a visitor and with no idea of seeing immediate service there, mistook me for a newspaper correspondent, which in one sense I was; and I was greeted with such cries as—

"Our Special Artist!"

"Our Own Correspondent!"

"Give our Captain a setting up, you sir!"

"Puff our Colonel!"

"Give me a good obituary!"

"Where's your pass, bub?"

"Holloa! Jenkins. Three cheers for Jenkins!"

I shall not soon forget one fellow who planted himself in my path, (his regiment had halted) and leaning upon his musket looked steadily into my eyes.

"Ef I had a warrant for the devil," he said, "I'd arrest that feller."

Many of the soldiers were pensive and thoughtful; but the mass were marching to their funerals with boyish outcries, apparently anxious to forget the responsibilities of the time."

"Let's sing, boys." "Oh! Get out, or I'll belt you over the snoot." "Holloa! Pardner, is there water over there?" "Three groans for Jeff!" "Hip-hip—hoorooar! Hi! Hi!"

A continual explosion of small arms, in the shape of epithets, jests, imitations of the cries of sheep, cows, mules and roosters, and snatches of song, enlivened the march. If something interposed, or a halt was ordered, the men would throw themselves in the dust, wipe their foreheads, drink from their canteens, gossip, grin and shout confusedly, and some sought opportunities to straggle off, so that the regiments were materially decimated before they reached the field. The leading officers maintained a dignity and a reserve, and reined their horses together in places, to confer. At one time a private soldier came out to me, presenting a scrap of paper, and asked me to scrawl him a line, which he would dictate. It was as follows:

"My dear Mary, we are going into action soon, and I send you my love. Kiss baby, and if I am not killed I will write to you after the fight."

The man asked me to mail the scrap at the first opportunity; but the same post which carried his simple billet, carried also his name among the rolls of the dead.

COMING OUT OF BATTLE.

The battle was over. In the twilight, with the ambulances, I was returning, and expletives like these ensued:

"Sa-a-ay! Hoss! Pardner! Are you going to ride over this wounded feller?"

'Friend, have you a drop of water for a man that's fainted here?"

"Holla! Buster! Keep that bayonit out o' my eye, if you please!"

"Where's Gen. Banks? I hearn say he's a prisoner."

"I do'know!"

"Was we licked, do you think?"

"No! We warn't nothin' o' the kind. Sigel's outflanked 'em and okkepies the field. A man jus' told me so."

"Huzza! Hearties, cheer up! Sigel's took the field, and Stonewall Jackson's dead."

"Three cheers for Sigel."

"Hoorooar, hoor——"

"Oh! Get out! That's all blow. Don't try to stuff me! We're lathered: that's the long and short of it."

"Is that so? Boys I guess we're beat!"

* * * * * * *

When we had gone two miles or more, we found a provost column drawn across the road, and a mounted officer interrogating all who attempted to pass:

"Stop there! You're not wounded."

"Yes I am."

"Pass on! Halt, boy! Go back. Men close up there. Stop that boy."

"I am sun-struck, Major."

"You lie! Drive him back. Go back now!"

Beyond this the way was comparatively clear; but as I knew that other guards held the road further on, I passed to the right, and with the hope of finding a rill of water, went across some grass fields, keeping toward the low places. The fields were very still, and I heard only the subdued noises wafted from the road; but suddenly I found myself surrounded by men. They were lying in groups in the tall grass, and started up suddenly, like the clansmen of Roderick Dhu. At first I thought myself a prisoner, and these some cunning Confederates, who had lain in wait. But, to my surprise, they were Federal uniforms, and were simply skulkers from various regiments, who had been hiding here during the hours of battle. Some of these miserable wretches asked me the particulars of the fight, and when told of the defeat, muttered that they were not to be hoodwinked and slaughtered.

"I was sick, anyway," said one fellow, "and felt like droppin' on the road."

"I didn't trust my Colouel," said another; "he ain't no soldier."

"I'm tired of the war, anyhow," said a third, "and my time's up soon; so I shan't have my head blown off."

As I progressed, dozens of these men appeared; the fields were strewn with them; a true man would rather have been lying with the dead on the field of carnage, than here, among the craven and base. I came to a spring at last, and the stragglers surrounded it in levies. One of them gave me a cup to dip some of the crystal, and a prayerful feeling came over me as the cooling draught fell over my dry palate and parched throat.

THE FIELD.

At last I passed the outlying batteries, with their black muzzles scanning the battle-ground, and ascending the clover field, came upon the site of the battery which had so discomfitted us the previous night. A signal vengeance had overtaken it. Some splinters of wheel and an overturned caisson, with eight horses lying in a group—their hoofs extended like index boards, their necks elongated along the ground, and their bodies swollen—were the results of a single shell trained upon the battery by a cool artillerist. Beyond, the road and fields were strewn with knapsacks, haversacks, jackets, canteens, cartridge-boxes, shoes, bayonets, knives, buttons, belts, blankets, girths, and sabres. Now and then a mule or a horse lay at the roadside, with the clay saturated beneath him; and some of the tree tops, in the depth of the woods, were scarred, split, and barked, as if the lightning had blasted them. Now passing a disabled wagon, now marking a dropped horse-shoe, now turning a capsized ambulance, now regarding a perfect wilderness of old clothes, we emerged from the timber at last, and came to the place where I had slept on the eve of the battle. A hurricane had apparently swept the country here, and the fences had been transported bodily. Sometimes the ground looked, for limited areas, as if there had been a rain of kindling-wood; and there were furrows in the clay, like those made by some great mole which had ploughed into the bowels of the earth. All the tree boles were pierced and perforated, and boughs had been severed, so that they littered the way. Cedar Creek ran merrily across what had been the road—the waters limpid and cool as before—and when I passed beyond, I entered the region of dead men. Some poisonous Upas had seemingly grown here, so that adventurers were prostrated by its exhalations. A tributary rivulet formed with the creek a triangular enclosure of ground, where most of the Federals had fallen. To the left of the road stood a cornfield; to the right a stubble field, dotted with stone heaps; deep woods formed the back ground to these, and scrub-timber, irregularly disposed, the foreground.

Looking down one of the rows of corn, I saw the first corpse—the hands flung stiffly back, the feet set stubbornly, the chin pointing upward, the features losing their sharpness, the skin blackening, the eyes great and white—

"A heap of death—a chaos of cold clay."

Turning into the cornfield, we came upon one man with a spade, and another man lying at his feet. He was digging a grave, and when we paused to note the operation, he touched his cap:

"Pardner o' mine," he said, indicating the body; "him and I fit side by side, and we agreed, if it could be done, to bury each other. There ain't no sich man as that lost out o' the army, private or officer—with all respect to you."

It was a eulogy that sounded as if more deserved, because it was homely. There are some that I have read, much finer, but not as honest.

ORFILA, the celebrated French chemist, being examined as "expert" on a capital trial, was asked by the President whether he could tell what quantity of arsenic was requisite to kill a fly. The doctor replied: "Certainly, M. le President; but I must know beforehand the age of the fly, its sex, its temperament, its condition and habits of body, whether married or single, widow or maiden, widower or bachelor. When satisfied on these points, I can answer your question."

EARLY PIETY.—Matilda Jane (catching the pastor after Sunday school.) "Oh, sir, please what would you charge to christen my doll?"

[For the Californian.]

WATCHING BESIDE HIM.

BY FRANK SOULE.

THE leaves turn yellow on the mournful willow,
November's waves are sighing on the shore;
And there's a fading cheek upon the pillow,
That shall feel health no more.
The leaves are falling, and my friend is dying,
Comes the Destroyer nearer day by day,
And like the leaves on Autumn's breezes flying,
His poor life flits away.
But now the foliage and his life were vernal,
How soon their Spring and Summer glow hath fled!
I would have had their beauty made eternal—
Ah me! but dust instead!

The leaves have fallen! on the Autumn eddies,
The last pale spectres float and disappear,
And one poor body—there his quiet bed is—
Is all that's left me here.
All that is left me of his manly powers,
All that is left of life so good and brief,
All faded like the first frost-bitten flowers,
And Autumn's withered leaf.
In night's dark hours his spirit spread her pinions,
Left in our clinging arms alone his form—
Heaven lighted through the dark's obscure dominions,
The starless gloom and storm.

While by his faded form, so sad and lonely
I sit, oh mighty Monarch I implore:
Tell me, is life but this, this tell me only,
This and no more?
A few fair hopes that never can be real,
A few joys passing like the fleeting breath?
Is immortality but an ideal
That terminates with death?
Of all I loved so much, so dearly treasured,
His manly beauty and his comely grace,
By this dear faded form may life be measured,
And this pale, silent face?

There comes no answer, though my heart is crying,
No message from the spirit gone before,
I hear, instead, the yeasty waves replying
In sobs upon the shore.
I hear the night-winds in the branches toning,
Or rustling with the sere and fallen leaf,
Their sad responses to my inward moaning,
In pity to my grief.
And so in loneliness, and doubt, and sorrow,
I listen to each night hour's lagging tread,
And silent, wait the coming of to-morrow,
In watch beside the dead.

SOLD FOR LESS THAN COST.—George Washington Bricks, in a letter to the Mobile Advertiser, gets off the following:

I was standing quietly on the front steps of the Custom-house the other day, looking casually at the beautiful creature sitting at one of the parlor windows of the Battle House, and trying to discover whether she was an old acquaintance of mine from the country, when a strange young man, with a limp in his walk, came up and stopped near me.

"I'll swear its mighty hot walking for a lame man to-day," said he.

Whether the remark was addressed to me or to society at large, I did not think it worth while to inquire, but simply said in reply:

"I should think so really. May I ask how you came to be lame?"

This was an impertinent question, I know; but as he had provoked it I did not think there could be much harm in it.

"Certainly, sir," said he, "I got hurt, and very badly, too, in a personal difficulty I had with a northern man named Meade."

"Ah, indeed!" said I.

"Yes; the thing created a good deal of excitement at the time, and as an account of it was published in all the newspapers both North and South, you must have read something about it."

"Not a word, I assure you. When and where did it happen?"

"Why, a little over two years ago," said he, "at a town in Pennsylvania, called Gettysburg."

"Sold again, and the money received!" shouted a small newsboy, who was standing by and heard the conversation, but who now took to his heels.

"My gallant young friend," said I, "I acknowledge the corn cheerfully. And speaking of corn—do you ever drink anything?" at the same time tossing my head in the direction of the nearest drinking saloon.

"Very rarely," was the reply; but when I do, it's generally about this time of day."

"Well," said I, "as you are, doubtless, in a hurry to get to the grocery, I won't detain you any longer."

And I walked on and left him.

I shall never cease to regret that the small newsboy didn't stay there to hear the end of it.

AN old Scotchwoman having been asked her opinion as to the "new minister," said he was a particularly powerful preacher: "He had na' been in th' place a week before he kicked th' pulpit a' to pieces, and banged tho in'ards out o' sax bibles."

AFFAIRS ROUND THE VILLAGE GREEN.

BY ARTEMUS WARD.

IT isn't every one who has a village green to write about. I have one, although I have not seen much of it for some years past. I am back again, now. In the language of the duke who went round with a motto about him, "I am here!" and I fancy I am about as happy a peasant of the vale as ever garnished a melo drama, although I have not as yet danced on my village green, as the melo-dramatic peasant usually does on his. It was the case when Rosina Meadows left home.

The time rolls by serenely now—so serenely that I don't care what time it is, which is fortunate, because my watch is at present in the hands of the "men of New York who are called rioters." We met by chance, the usual way—certainly not by appointment—and I brought the interview to a close with all possible dispatch. Assuring them that I wasn't Mr. Greeley, particularly, and that he had never boarded in the private family where I enjoy the comforts of a home, I tendered them my watch, and begged they would distribute it judiciously among the laboring classes, as I had seen the rioters styled in certain public prints.

Why should I loiter feverishly in Broadway, stabbing the hissing hot air with the splendid gold-headed cane that was presented to me by the citizens of Waukegan, Illinois, as a slight testimonial of their esteem? Why broil in my rooms? You said to me, Mrs. Gloverson, when I took possession of those rooms, that no matter how warm it might be, a breeze had a way of blowing into them, and that they were, withal, quite countryfied; but I am bound to say, Mrs. Gloverson, that there was nothing about them that ever reminded me, in the remotest degree, of daisies or new-mown hay. Thus, with sarcasm, do I smash the deceptive Gloverson.

Why stay in New York when I had a village green? I gave it up, the same as I would an intricate conundrum—and, in short, I am here.

Do I miss the glare and crash of the imperial thoroughfare? the milkman, the fiery, untamed omnibus horses, the soda fountains, Central Park, and those things? Yes, I do; and I can go on missing 'em for quite a spell, and enjoy it.

The village from which I write to you is small. It does not contain over forty houses all told; but they are milk-white, with the greenest of blinds, and for the most part are shaded with beautiful elms and willows. To the right of us is a mountain—to the left a lake. The village nestles between. Of course it does. I never read a novel in my life in which the villages didn't nestle. Villages invariably nestle. It is a kind of way they have.

We are away from the cars. The iron horse, as my little sister aptly remarks in her composition On Nature, is never heard to shriek in our midst; and on the whole I am glad of it.

The villagers are kindly people. They are rather incoherent on the subject of the war, but not more so, perhaps, than are people elsewhere. One citizen, who used to sustain a good character, subscribed for the Weekly New York Herald, a few months since, and went to studying the military maps in that well-known journal for the fireside. I need not inform you that his intellect now totters, and he has mortgaged his farm. In a literary point of view we are rather bloodthirsty. A pamphlet edition of the life of a cheerful being, who slaughtered his wife and child, and then finished himself, is having an extensive sale just now.

We know little of Honoré de Balzac, and perhaps care less for Victor Hugo. M. Claës's grand search for the Absolute doesn't thrill us in the least; and Jean Valjean, gloomily picking his way through the sewers of Paris, with the spoony young man of the name of Marius upon his back, awakens no interest in our breasts. I say Jean Valjean picked his way gloomily, and I repeat it. No man, under those circumstances, could have skipped gaily. But this literary business, as the gentleman who married his colored chambermaid aptly observed, "is simply a matter of taste."

The store—I must not forget the store. It is an object of great interest to me. I usually encounter there, on sunny afternoons, an old Revolutionary soldier. You may possibly have read about "Another Revolutionary Soldier gone," but this is one who hasn't gone, and, moreover, one who doesn't manifest the slightest intention of going. He distinctly remembers Washington, of course; they all do; but what I wish to call special attention to, is the fact that this Revolutionary soldier is one hundred years old, that his eyes are so good that he can read fine print without spectacles—he never used them, by the way—and his mind is perfectly clear. He is a little shaky in one of his legs, but otherwise he is as active as most men of forty-five, and his general health is excellent. He uses no tobacco, but for the last twenty years he has drunk one glass of liquor every day—no more, no less. He says he must have his tod. I had begun to have lurking suspicions about this Revolutionary soldier business, but here is an original Jacobs. But because a man can drink a glass of liquor a day, and live to be a hundred years old, my young readers must not infer that by drinking two glasses of liquor a day a man can live to be two hundred. "Which, I meanter say, it doesn't foller," as Joseph Gargery might observe.

This store, in which may constantly be found calico and nails, and fish, and tobacco in kegs, and snuff in bladders, is a venerable establishment. As long ago as 1814 it was an institution. The county troops, on their way to the defence of Portland, then menaced by British ships of war, were drawn up in front of this very store, and treated at the town's expense. Citizens will tell you how the clergyman refused to pray for the troops, because he considered the war an unholy one; and how a somewhat eccentric person, of dissolute habits, volunteered his services, stating that he once had an uncle who was a deacon, and he thought he could make a tolerable prayer, although it was rather out of his line; and how he prayed so long and absurdly that the colonel ordered him under arrest, but that even while soldiers stood over him with gleaming bayonets, the reckless being sang a preposterous song about his grandmother's spotted calf, with its Ri-fol lol-tiddery-i-do; after which he howled dismally.

And speaking of the store, reminds me of a little story. The author of "several successful comedies" has been among us, and the store was anxious to know who the stranger was. And therefore the store asked him.

"What do you follow, sir?" respectfully inquired the tradesman.

"I occasionally write for the stage, sir."

"Oh!" returned the tradesman, in a confused manner.

"He means," said an honest villager, with a desire to help a puzzled tradesman out, "he means that he writes handbills for the stage drivers!"

I believe that story is new, although perhaps it is not of an uproariously mirthful character; but one hears stories at the store that are old enough, goodness knows—stories which, no doubt, diverted Methuselah in the sunny days of his giddy and thoughtless boyhood.

There is an exciting scene at the store occasionally. Yesterday an athletic peasant, in a state of beer, smashed in a counter and emptied two tubs of butter on the floor. His father—a white-haired old man, who was a little boy when the Revolutionary war closed, but who doesn't remember Washington much, came round in the evening and settled for the damages. "My son," he said, "has considerable originality." I will mention that this son once told me that he could lick me with one arm tied behind him, and I was so thoroughly satisfied he could, that I told him he needn't mind going for a rope.

Sometimes I go a visiting to a farmhouse, on which occasion the parlor is opened. The windows have been close-shut ever since the last visitor was there, and there is a dingy smell that I struggle with as calmly as possible, until I am led to the banquet of steaming hot biscuit and custard pie. If they would only let me sit in the dear old-fashioned kitchen, or on the doorstone—if they knew how dismally the new black furniture looked—but never mind, I am not a reformer. No, I should rather think not.

Gloomy enough, this living on a farm, you perhaps say, in which case you are wrong. I can't exactly say that I pant to be an agriculturist, but I do know that in the main it is an independent, calmly happy sort of life. I can see how the prosperous farmer can go joyously a-field with the rise of the sun, and how his heart may swell with pride over bounteous harvests and sleek oxen. And it must be rather jolly for him on winter evenings to sit before the bright kitchen fire and watch his rosy boys and girls as they study out the charades in the weekly paper, and gradually find out why my first is something that grows in a garden, and my second is a fish.

On the green hillside over yonder, there is a quivering of snowy drapery, and bright hair is flashing in the morning sunlight. It is recess, and the Seminary girls are running in the tall grass.

A goodly seminary to look at outside, certainly, although I am pained to learn, as I do on unprejudiced authority, that Mrs. Higgins, the principal, is a tyrant who seeks to crush the girls and trample upon them; but my sorrow is somewhat assuaged by learning that Skimmerhorn, the pianist, is perfectly splendid.

Looking at these girls reminds me that I, too, was once young—and where are the friends of my youth? I have found one of 'em, certainly. I saw him ride in the circus the other day on a bareback horse, and even now his name stares at me from yonder board-fence, in green, and blue, and red, and yellow letters. Dashington, the youth with whom I use to read the able orations of Cicero, and who, as a declaimer on exhibition days, used to wipe the rest of us boys pretty handsomely out—well, Dashington is identified with the halibut and cod interest—drives a fish-cart, in fact, from a certain town on the coast, back into the interior. Hubertson, the utterly stupid boy—the lunkhead, who never had his lesson—he's about the ablest lawyer a sister State can boast. Mills is a newspaper man, and is just now editing a major-general down South.

Singlingson, the sweet-voiced boy, whose face was always washed and who was real good, and who was never rude—he is in the penitentiary for putting his uncle's autograph to a financial document. Hawkins, the clergyman's son, is an actor, and Williamson, the good little boy who divided his bread and butter with the beggar-man, is a failing merchant, and makes money by it. Tom Slink who used to smoke short-sixes and get acquainted with the little circus boys, is popularly supposed to be the proprietor of a cheap gaming establishment in Boston, where the beautiful but uncertain prop is nightly tossed. Be sure, the Army is represented by many of the friends of my youth, the most of whom have given a good account of themselves. But Chalmerson hasn't done much. No, Chalmerson is rather of a failure. He plays on the guitar and sings love songs. Not that he is a bad man. A kinder-hearted creature never lived, and they say he hasn't yet got over crying for his little curly-haired sister who died ever so long ago. But he knows nothing about business, politics, the world, and those things. He is dull at trade—indeed, it is a common remark that "everybody cheats Chalmerson." He came to the party, the other evening, and brought his guitar. They wouldn't have him for a tenor in the opera, certainly, for he is shaky in his upper notes; but if his simple melodies didn't gush straight from the heart, why were my trained eyes wet? And although some of the girls giggled, and some of the men seemed to pity him, I could not help fancying that poor Chalmerson was nearer heaven than any of us all!

OUR SOCIETY AS SEEN BY A STRANGER.

MR. BOWLES, in his letters to the Springfield Republican, entitled "Across the Continent," has the courage and independence to record a few home truths in regard to our social defects, which other Eastern visitors have somewhat weakly dodged. He says:

"Society," in this representative town of the Pacific Coast, is somewhat difficult of characterization. It holds in chaos all sorts of elements; the very best, and the very worst, and all between. There is much of New York in it, much of St. Louis and Chicago, and a good deal that is original and local; born of wide separation from the centres of our best social civilization; of the dominating materialism and masculinism of all life here; of comparative lack of homes and families and their influences. There are probably more bachelors, great lusty fellows, who ought to be ashamed of themselves living in hotel or in "lodgings," in this town, than in any place of its size in the world. There is want of femininity, spirituality in the current tone of the place; lack of reverence for women; fewer women to reverence, than our eastern towns are accustomed to. You hear more than is pleasant of private scandals; of the vanity and weakness of women; of the infidelity of wives. "It is the cussedest place for women," said an observant Yankee citizen, some two or three years from home, and not forgetful yet of mother, sister and cousin—"a town of men and taverns and boarding houses and billiard saloons."

Yet there seems to be plenty of women—such as they are; and Montgomery street will offer the promenader as many pretty and striking faces, perhaps more, in proportion, than Washington street or Broadway. But the dominating quality like mercy, is not strained; it savors of the mannishness, the materialism, the "fastness" and the "loudness" of the country; and paradoxical as it may appear, by contrast with eastern society, the men seem of a higher grade than the women—better for men than the latter as women. Nor is this inconsistent with reason; the men, dealing with practical necessities and duties, are less harmed, on the whole, by the dominant materialism of life here, than the women, whose pressing necessities are lower and fewer;—as a fine, delicate blade is more roughened in cutting the way through bramble and brush than a tough and broader edge.

All which is not only natural but inevitable; in all new countries, where the first fight is for life and wealth with rough nature, the masculine quality must ever be dominant; and the feminine elements must be influenced by it, more than they influence it in turn. The senses rule the spirit. All civilization, all progress tends to the increase of the feminine element in our nature and in life; contrast the centuries, and we see it creeping in everywhere, in men and women alike, in religion, in intellectual culture, in art, in social intercourse—softening, refining, hallowing—the atmosphere of all modern life pictures. Women, who possess and represent this blossom of our civilization, are by no means wanting here—no more perfect specimens have I met anywhere; tender, tasteful, true; and gaining in aggregate influence over society day by day; but yet not to-day representing or making what is called society.

VERDI NEWS.—The Court Journal is angry that Verdi's latest opera, although well known in New York, is not yet produced in London, and says: "'La Forza del Destino' still remains a stranger to us." Apropos, Verdi has consented to allow the theatre being erected in his native place to be called after him. The mayor thereupon forwarded the maestro a deed, conveying the gift of a box for life in the theatre, to which Verdi replied in a graceful way, namely, by returning ten thousand francs to the mayor for the purchase of the box, which he would not consent to receive as a gift, and be a burden on the finances of the theatre.

AN OGRE.

THE CHILD-EATER OF HINDOSTAN.

THERE are two kinds of leopards found in India. One is the cheetah, the common leopard of the plains of Hindostan. This creature confines his attacks chiefly to small antelopes, barking deer and jungle-sheep. He is frequently caught when young, and tamed by the native shikarees, who teach him to assist them in hunting and driving game within shot of the guns of the sportsmen. The other kind of Indian leopard is the "luckabugga," a much larger and fiercer animal, who, when he has once tasted human blood, becomes an ogre, with a frightful appetite for children. He is chiefly found in the lower ranges of the Himalayas and vast jungles of the Terai.

One summer's evening, I was out with a couple of friends on a shooting excursion, from Almora into Nepal. Our tents were pitched on the banks of the Kala-nuddee, a river which parts the British possessions in the hills from those of the Nepal-rajah. We were getting our guns ready to go out after some black partridges for supper, when the head man of the neighboring British villages of Petoragurh came up to entreat our assistance in killing a leopard, which haunted some neighboring villages for many months, and had already carried off twelve children. Traps and pitfalls had been set for him in vain. He had evaded all. A poor Zemindar had come into the village with a woful story about his six-year-old boy—his only boy—who, when playing before the door of his father's hut in the dusk of the evening, had been seized by the leopard and carried off before his father's eyes. The poor man followed the animal and struck it repeatedly with an iron hoe, but it held on and vanished in the jungle. At daylight he had hunted on the track with some friends, but found only a few bones and some bloody hair, remains of his child, that a jackal was picking at, and a vulture watching. The man said he had watched the place every night, but had never again seen the leopard.

The recital of this tragedy excited us, and we pledged ourselves not to leave the district until this cruel ogre was destroyed. Ram Bux, our head shikaree, was called, and ordered to make every inquiry as to his present whereabouts, and to offer a reward of ten rupees to any native who should give such information as would give us a shot at him.

It would be endless to relate the many false alarms we had. We sat up all night in trees, with a goat tied below as a bait, near the place where the leopard had been last seen. One night, while sitting in a tree with a gun coolie, who held my weapons, I fell into a doze. A friend in a tree about twenty yards off, with a goat below, roused me by the discharge of his rifle. My coolie seized me by the arm, and shrieked:

"Sahib, sahib, luckabugga aye!"

"Where, where?" I asked, seizing the double rifle he held out to me.

"There," he said, pointing to a dark object moving through the trees about thirty yards off.

Bang—bang—went both my barrels, followed immediately by unearthly yells. We descended from our trees, and found a large, rough, yellow pariah dog, shot through both hind legs. He was yelling like a fiend, and snapping like a crockodile. I borrowed a large Ghoorhka kookrie from our shikaree, and baring my right arm, brought it down with all my weight on the dog's neck, behind the head, in the way I had seen Ghoorkhas kill oxen. The dog was at once out of his pain.

One of my friends was very fat, and as he found a branch of a tree rather inconvenient, had a common native charpoy (a sort of bedstead) fixed up in a fork of a tree. On this he reclined with a gun-coolie, and a large double-barrelled gun loaded with slugs. We were tired of the goat bait, so he got a monkey, thinking that a child-eater might be more readily tempted by its flesh. I was posted in a tree, from which I could watch the approaches to my friend's post. About midnight the moon went down, and it was almost dark. Half an hour later I heard the monkey begin to chatter, so I cocked both barrels and watched the foot of my friend's tree. The chattering increased. Then came a blaze of light and a loud report, followed by the breaking of branches and a perfect Babel of noise. I had a pine torch with me, and clambering down from my tree, lit it and rushed to the spot.

There, on his back, lay my friend, screaming out for me. He had upset his bed. On his back sat the monkey, tearing his hair like a wild-cat. A few yards off lay his coolie, with the charpoy on him smashed in half. He was roaring out—"The leopard is eating me!" A little farther on lay a jackal, writhing with a dozen slugs in him. I kicked up the coolie, and helped my friend by knocking the monkey over with the broken leg of the charpoy. After this little upset we lit cheroots and walked back to our tents which were pitched about two miles off.

Ram Bux, our shikaree, had given notice to all the natives round about, that if the leopard appeared and carried off anything, information was to be sent to our camp before any pursuit was made. One evening we were at our tent-doors after dinner, smoking, when we observed on the other (Nepal) side of the river a Ghoorkha coming down the hills at great speed. At the river bank he inflated a sheepskin which he carried, and crossed the rapid stream on it—just as we see on their wall carvings that the old Assyrians did—being carried down about a quarter of a mile by the current. On landing he was met by Ram Bux, who had run out on seeing him approach. They walked towards us, the Ghoorkha gesticulating violently, and we heard the following story.

The Ghoorkha lived in a hut about a mile from our camp, higher up the river, and only a hundred yards from the water. He had been out for the day on his duty, which was that of a government runner, leaving at home his wife, a baby in arms, and a little girl about six years old. The wife had gone to the stream for water, leaving the two children at the hut door. As she returned she heard a scream, and, throwing down her pitcher, ran forward, and found at the hut door only her baby. The little girl had disappeared, and without doubt had been carried off by the leopard. The Ghoorkha found its footmarks on a soft bit of ground, and hastened to us without attempting a pursuit in the dense jungle. Ram Bux decided that it was too late to start that night, but asked us to be ready one hour before daylight. In the mean time he sent to the next village for twenty coolies, who were engaged as beaters at fourpence a head.

On turning out in the starlight next morning, I saw that our followers and beaters had each got some instrument for making noise. There were tin kettles, tom-toms, bells, and an old matchlock or two. I and my two friends crossed the river on a plank lashed across two inflated buffalo skins, which kept our guns and powder high out of water. The beaters came over in all sorts of ways, some swimming, some clinging to inflated sheepskins.

When we reached the Ghoorkha's hut the whole of our beaters were extended in a line, I, standing in the middle, at the spot where the Ghoorkha had found traces of the leopard. The poor Ghoorkha himself, and Ram Bux, leading a Brinjarry dog in a string, were with me: each of them carried a spade. At a given signal, the whole line started. The beaters yelled, whistled, rang bells, and beat tom-toms, making noise enough to drive away every leopard within five miles. The dog kept steadily to the scent; but our progress at times was very slow through the dense bamboo jungle.

After proceeding about a mile, the dog became very eager, dashed forward, and was not easily held in. In fifty more yards we came to the place where the brute had been supping. The mangled remains of the little girl lay about, only half eaten, and the ogre must have been scared by our noise. Without losing a moment, the Ghoorkha and Ram Bux set to work and dug a trench under a tree to leeward of the child's remains, piling up some branches between them and the trench. Ram Bux and I jumped into the trench. The Ghoorkha departed with the dog in the direction taken by the rest of our party, who kept up the same discordant din as they moved along.

Ram Bux now told me that the leopard—doubtless listening a mile off—would think, from the passing away of the noise, that the whole party had gone on, and would be sure to return in an hour or two to go on with his interrupted feast. We must be quiet, for the brute was very cunning, and the slightest sound or smell would send him off and destroy our chance of getting a shot at him. After waiting an hour I pulled out my cigar-case, but Ram Bux forbade smoking by energetic gestures, neither of us speaking. I had a large double-barrelled smooth bore No 12, loaded with slugs, at full cock, in my hand. Ram Bux had my breech-loading rifle, with a large conical shell in it. In addition to these, I and Ram Bux had each a Ghoorkha kookrie, and I a revolving pistol. It was now nine in the morning. The noise of our party had died away over the hills for an hour or more. I had my eyes fixed on the movements of a regiment of white ants, that were pilling themselves over a bloody fragment of the poor child that lay about ten yards before me. Suddenly Ram Bux put one finger on my lips, both as a sign to look out and to keep perfectly quiet. My fingers sought the triggers, and my eyes were strained in every direction. I could see nothing, until, in about two minutes, I discerned that the grass waved, and the next instant, with a tread of velvet, the leopard glided in front of me. The suddeness of his appearance took my breath away for some seconds, but, recovering myself, I raised my gun to my shoulder, and in doing this snapped off a little twig from a branch of the brushwood we had piled in front of us.

The leopard turned his face full on me. Thinking that he would jump off I pulled at his chest, letting off, in my nervousness, both barrels. He sprang into the air with a yell, and fell backward. Ram Bux was out and by his side before I had risen from my knees, and had discharged the rifle in the direction of his heart. When I got up, with revolver in one hand and kookrie knife in the other, the brute was tearing up the grass and roots with all four paws, and dangerous to approach. My slugs had entered his chest and eyes, and he was blind. I discharged my revolvers at his hind quarters; but he writhed and leaped about so violently, that it was impossible to take good aim. Ram Bux, with his kookrie drawn, was dodging about for an opportunity of coming close enough to cut at the dangerous hind legs and sever the tendons. I went back to the trench to load my guns. As I was capping, the grass opened, and the Ghoorkha, with his dog, rushed up. He had evidently been waiting near, and hearing the guns fire, had hurried to revenge his child. He gave a shout of joy when he saw the animal kicking and bleeding, let go his dog, who darted at the throat of the leopard, and then himself, disregarding claws and teeth, rushed in upon him. With two strokes of his kookrie he cut the hind tendons, and the formidable hind legs were harmless. At the same moment I stepped up and discharged one barrel into the monster's gaping and bleeding mouth. This shot killed it. Ram Bux and the Ghoorkha began skinning, while I lighted a cheroot. On taking the skin off the back we came upon two fresh-healed cuts which went right through the skin, and remembered what the poor Zemindar told us a week ago of his following and hacking with a hoe at the monster, who was carrying off his child.

After a hot march of an hour or more, we got into camp before noon, and had an ovation from the people of the adjacent villages. Every one who had lost a child by the leopard asked for one of the claws, which was hung round the neck of the mourner as an amulet.

The skin now lies on the floor of the billiard-room of a castle in the north of England.

LOOKING OUT FOR SLIGHTS.—Of all people in the world the most disagreeable, and the hardest to sail along smoothly with, is that class among our acquaintances and friends who are continually looking out for slights. Not a motion, not a word, not a momentary silence, but forthwith the imagination is busily at work brooding over what they are sure is meant for some personal indignity to themselves. They cannot make a morning call, receive a visitor, meet an acquaintance on the street, or even—worst of all—carry on the daily intercourse of their own family, without meeting with some trivial circumstance which forthwith is developed into mammoth proportions, whereby they are speedily and certainly led to believe that some offence is designed. They are as touchy as hair-triggers; and their susceptible dignity, like the quills of the porcupine, is ever ready to erect itself into an embrasured attitude of scornful, though sorrowful, defiance.

This trait is quite like its twin-sister jealousy, though not so violent in its attacks, nor so deadly in its results. But take the two together, and let them loose in some quiet town where the distinction of "high and low" has already been made, and the lines of caste and aristocracy are slowly creeping in—let these two subtle forces be let loose in such a community, and the results will be more direful than if a score of the blackest crimes in the recognized list had been given the same scope; for it is not the high crimes of murder and theft that most disturb and destroy peace and fraternal security; but the continual bickerings, and suspicions, and jealousies, and piques, and heartburnings, that arise from the same degrading, unmanly, unwomanly expectation of having received a slight from some neighbor or friend who is, doubtless, utterly unconscious of any such act or intention. A fit of indigestion is generally at the bottom of all such slights and impertinences as they imagine they receive. And such people lay upon others the fault of their own irritability; and, from looking through suspicious eyes, they think everything is tinged with the same gangrened hue.

To say the least, and give the habit the least objectionable name that presents itself, it is very unfortunate. It is far wiser to take the more charitable view of our fellow-beings, and not suppose a slight intended unless the neglect is unmistakably open and direct. We should pass along far more smoothly, and have fewer irritations in our pilgrimage, that, at the best, to some of us ever winds through the paths filled with vexing stones and hedged with thorns and briars, if we did so. How foolish, then, for us to go over such ground when there is a flower-fringed and shaded highway, beautiful and fragrant enough for fairies and angels to tread in, if we only will start in the right direction, and with a spirit that a superior wisdom ever inculcates!

THE Scientific American says: The unpleasant odor produced by perspiration is frequently a source of vexation to persons who are subject to it. Nothing is simpler than to easily remove this odor, much more effectually than by the application of the unguents and perfumes in use. It is only necessary to procure some of the compound spirits of ammonia and place about two table-spoonfuls in a basin of water. Washing the face, hands and arms with this, leaves the skin as clean, sweet and fresh as any one could wish. The wash is perfectly harmless and very cheap. It is recommended on the authority of a physician.

THE drama by Martin F. Tupper, after being advertised in the London Times, and underlined in the Haymarket bills, has been quietly withdrawn, "and (says the Public Opinion) the inocuous Lady of Lyons terminated Mr. Montgomery's management, instead of lofty flights of blankest Tupperian verse."

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lohe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s, 138 J street.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY.
J. P. BOGARDUS, } Publishers.
WM. J. BINGHAM.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1865.

CALIFORNIA NOMENCLATURE.

THE predominance of masculine character and hard materialism in our pioneer civilization—which, to a certain extent, still exists in the society of to-day—is nowhere as plainly shown as in the names given to our localities. Red Dog, Murderer's Bar, Hangtown, Whiskey Diggins, Jackass Gulch, One Horse Flat, Poker Flat, Shirt Tail Bend, and Mud Springs, are not only remarkable as specimens of graphic vulgarity, but as showing more plainly than any census the preponderance of the male over the female population. The conversation of men—unrestrained by female society—is apt to be distinguished more for force than refinement, and the epithets flung out in the familiar intercourse of pioneers—not always pure or refined of themselves—have become fixed, and brand with the stigma of vulgarity some of the fairest portions of our State. Our civilization has a good many unpleasant burdens to carry before the world, without this obtrusive verbal vulgarity which defiles the map of California; and yet, it would hardly be credited, so strong are these material influences—so conservative in their barbarism are the pioneers of these localities—that any attempt to change the nomenclature is met with flippant contempt or decided resistance.

While these outright offences against public decency remain unchanged upon the map of California, it might be deemed impractical to attempt to cultivate good taste in the nomenclature of our interior towns and villages, or to point out a few minor transgressions. But it may be well to remind Californians of a fact they seem to have overlooked that there are few countries as favored with distinctive, euphonious and significant Spanish or Indian names as this. Wherever they have been retained—as in the instance of the counties, of which forty-three out of forty nine are Indian or Spanish—the effect is always pleasant and consistent. But where the power to name rests with a few individuals, too often the aboriginal or ancient title is ignored and coarse or commonplace epithets substituted, which seems to adhere in proportion as it is inappropriate and distasteful. For a long time a pleasant town in Humboldt Bay, known to the Indians as Arcata, rejoiced in the highly original appellation of "Union." There being three or four other places in the State of that name, and some inconvenience occurring through the misdirection of letters, an effort was made to change the title to the more distinct and euphonious Indian appellation. At length—through the efforts of one or two men and solely for the practical reasons already mentioned—the change was accomplished, by the Legislature, but the measure was distasteful to a majority of the inhabitants. In instances where Spanish names have been retained, liberties are taken with spelling, and euphony is destroyed. Moquelumne Hill becomes "Mokelumne Hill," and is rapidly being degraded to "Moke Hill," as it is familiarly pronounced. How universal is this disposition to uncouth contraction may be seen in the popular change of Jamestown to "Jim Town," or in up-country substitution of "Frisco" for the distinctive and historic title of our metropolis. So long as this barbarity is confined to colloquialisms we might be silent, but when interior editors gravely print them, and talk of "Frisco" and "Jimtown," it is time to interfere. If we were writing from purely æsthetic principles, something might be said about things nearer home—the beauty or appropriateness of "Lone Mountain," or the substitution of "Black Point" for Point José, might be questioned—but the subject would require distinct and separate treatment.

There is one reason for preserving the ancient and aboriginal appellations of our localities, which is paramount to all others. It is their historic and geological significance. If there is nothing due to the past generation, who have peopled these shores—if we totally ignore their claims to recognition in the building up of our new empire—we must at least respect the data from which history is made—the facts from which geology is established. It must be remembered that for many years the significance of the aboriginal names of many mountains on this continent was the only authority we had of their volcanic nature, and that its truth has been since scientifically demonstrated. An incorrect and ignorant theory of the privileges of superior races is no excuse for abolishing and obliterating old land-marks, which belong not to us but to the future historian. The man, whoever he may be, who substitutes, for the enduring significance and euphonious syllables which antiquity has given to his local dwelling-place, the ephemeral and coarse slang of the present day, commits not only a breach of good taste and good morals, but sins against science and history.

[For the Californian.]

EARLY CALIFORNIAN SUPERSTITIONS.

BY BRET.

NO one, in looking over the ancient chronicles of California, can fail being struck with the important part which the devil played in the earlier settlement of the country. Without wishing to detract from his performances during the American occupation, it must be admitted that he passed out of history as an individual, and merged into an abstract principle. In the good old days of Junipero however, he was distinguished by an active personality and a consistent malevolence. He did not compromise with sanctity as in these degenerate days. He plagued the good fathers sorely, and kept them in hot, or rather holy water, all the time. His open hostility was a matter of common report. It is true that skeptics assert that the ascetic habits, privations, and lonely vigils of these monkish missionaries prepared them for singular visions and trancelike experiences; that the bleak plains and dense forests habited only by ravenous beasts, might have easily been transformed into a lurking place for the Enemy of Souls, and that the trials and misfortunes common to the pioneer, might have seemed in this instance of special and personal origin.

The metamorphoses of the fiend were varied and startling. He had made his appearance as a bear on the rocky fastnesses of Mount Diablo. He had assumed the figure of a dissolute whaler seated upon a sandhill near the Mission Dolores, who harpooned belated travellers. He had held high revel at Point Diablo with a phantom boat's crew of Sir Francis Drake. Although most of these transformations were done with an eye to business, he occasionally unbent himself in pure exuberance of mischief.

It is related that one evening, Juanita, an old woman who dwelt beyond the present city limits, while looking after her poultry, heard the faint chirping of little chickens in the brush beyond the house. Following the sound, she presently saw on the road before her a young brood, apparently just hatched. The old woman called to them, but they fled from her and the grain she cast before them. She followed. In the eagerness of the chase, she quite forgot the lateness of the hour and the distance she was straying, and at last came upon a black misshapen figure sitting in the road, under whose bathke wings the brood quickly nestled. The figure called to her, and offered her one of a number of eggs on which it was sitting. Juanita, who was not lacking in courage or enthusiasm as a poultry fancier, made the sign of the cross, and accepted the present, upon which the figure vanished. The story goes on to say that Juanita placed the egg under a setting hen, who in due time hatched out a fine young Shanghai. As the new comer waxed in size and strength, he developed extraordinary fighting qualities. In less than a week he killed off the old Señora's poultry, and challenged every cock in the neighborhood. Extending his depredations to the neighboring hen-yards, he was finally killed and eaten by Incarnacion Briones, a luckless Indian. The most singular part of the story is to come. It is gravely stated that a few days after eating the mysterious game-cock, Incarnacion startled the worshipers at the Mission Church by flapping his arms and crowing like a cock during high mass, and that, although naturally of a timid and inoffensive disposition, he began to exhibit belligerent symptoms, and after furiously beating one-half the population, was finally dispatched by one Domiuguez Robles, a valiant soldier at the Presidio.

Equally gratuitous but less unpleasant in result, was the exploit of the Evil One at the Mission of San ——. The circumstances of the event being still fresh in the memory of many native Californians, for certain reasons proper names are omitted from this veracious chronicle. One moonlit evening as a few youthful Señoritas were lounging upon that open colonnade or gallery which is a familiar appurtenance of all Spanish adobe houses, they were startled by the trampling of horses' hoofs. The elder members of the family were visiting the home of a distant neighbor; it was too early for their return, the road was seldom travelled, and the unusual sound naturally excited fear and suspicion. As they looked across the road toward the old Mission Chapel, whose white-washed gable the moonlight brought out with vivid distinctness, they saw to their infinite horror a tall figure, mounted on a white horse, issue from the heavily barred door and gallop furiously down the road. A moment, and the horse and rider clothed in a mysterious light, were visible; the rushing wind which attended his furious progress, fanned their blanched cheeks as he passed, but in the next instant he had disappeared. One of the party avers that she distinctly saw him melt away as he crossed a little brook over which a few planks were laid, and that he never reached the other side, but when or how he disappeared, has never been distinctly settled. The popular belief that evil spirits cannot pass over a stream of running water, might seem to obtain in this instance, but as the spirit is alleged to have been that of a former ranchero who was a hard drinker, it has been argued with some show of reason that the only stream he could not pass would have been one of whiskey, and that the theory is untenable.

It is said that, in opposition to the extension of the domain of the Holy Church, the devil figured in some of the earlier land grants, but as it is doubtful to what extent superstition has become blended with cotemporary history, I am compelled to pass over certain wild legends connected with the prices paid by some land-owners for their property, and the peculiar construction of their title deeds, to come to a story which, although of comparatively recent origin, seems to possess all the features of the early California legend. The names are, of course, fictitious.

For some time after the American occupation, the lower country was infested with strolling desperadoes, who had hung on the skirts of the war, sustaining themselves by indiscriminate pillage, and who, in the chaotic state of society which followed peace, still availed themselves of the fears and weakness of the country people. The sparsely settled districts, where the ranches were leagues apart, the lonely roads over which the expressman passed but once a week, afforded these ruffians ample opportunities for lawless outrage.

The rancho of Pedro Feliz was situated in one of those lonely localities; it was a low one-story adobe, with projecting eaves and galleries. Its occupants at the time of this story consisted of the family, seven in number, and Pachita Gomez, a young senorita, who was a visitor. Pachita was a good girl and a devout Catholic. She went to Mass regularly, to matins and prime, and never forgot her saint's day. Perhaps it was owing to this conscientious fulfillment of her religious duties that her patron saint watched over her with such care—but I anticipate my story. One night Pachita retired early to her bed-room. Lighting a consecrated taper before a little crucifix, she opened her missal and began her evening prayer. She had scarcely reached the middle of her first supplicatory sentence before she felt a breath of warm air upon her cheek and her candle went out. She lighted it again and recommenced her prayer, when the same warm current swept by her cheek and—puff!—the candle was blown out a second time. Pachita rose, a little pettishly, from her knees, carefully examined the door and the window, which was covered with a strip of cotton cloth, that served as curtains by night, and moving her candle and crucifix to another part of the apartment, once more began her devotions. The candle was blown out a third time! Pachita now became alarmed, but with an inward prayer to her patron saint, she took a vase of holy water, and after sprinkling and purifying the apartment relit her votive taper and again addressed herself to her orisons. Alas for the efficacy of the blessed fluid! a rush of warm air by her cheek, and—puff! the candle was, for the fourth time, extinguished. There is a limit, however, to human confidence, even in holy water and prayer. Pachita dropped her smoking taper, and hastily wrapping a shawl around her head, rushed from the house. She did not stop to take leave of its inmates. Perhaps she felt that a tenement, in which the devil was so much at home, was no place for a virtuous young woman. The night was dark and windy, but still Pachita fled onward. Buoyed up by faith, which seemed to return to her proportionably as she increased her distance from the house, she actually reached, otherwise unassisted, her own home, at least ten miles away. Pachita did not disclose her diabolical experience, but assigned as a reason for her sudden departure the presence of two rough looking and mysterious strangers, who had claimed her friend's hospitality for the night. A few days passed and the returning courier from San Luis Obispo brought fearful news. A traveller, passing by on the morning after Pachita's midnight flight, found the door of the house open, and entering, discovered the lifeless bodies of the murdered family. The house had been pillaged and stripped, and the mysterious strangers had fled.

What connection there was between the evil spirit who blew out Pachita's taper, and the material villains who achieved the massacre, cannot be distinctly ascertained. There are skeptics who, in the face of these notorious facts, sneer at the experience of the young girl as illusive and fabulous. But as these heretical losels go even so far as to disbelieve in the existence of the devil altogether, their opinions can weigh but little in comparison to the convictions of consistent Catholics.

The Morning Call entered upon its nineteenth volume on the 1st inst.—a fair example of the success which attends piquant journalism.

DRAMATIC.

AT the Opera House last week, the Sea of Ice was rather coolly received; Bandmann's benefit on Friday evening chiefly benefitted the management, and Camilla's Husband and the Quiet Family passed off very quietly on Saturday evening. The Old Corporal, an adaptation by Ned House from the French, was brought out by Bandmann on Monday. The audience was an excellent one; the piece went off with a percussion of applause, and it has drawn well during the week. The scenes are of course sensational, and the plot is improbable--otherwise it would not be French. Some very excellent theatrical effects are produced, and the sudden restoration to the "Old Corporal" of speech by the explosion of a pistol, is a capital coup de scene. The chief fault of the piece is that it is talky and plays a little too long. Judicious pruning would benefit it vastly. Baudmann's pantomime is graceful and expressive--to borrow a phrase for the occasion from the repertoire of the lobbies, it is "dumb fine." In speech we think it would be to his advantage were he to tone down that rising inflection of voice which falls not pleasingly upon the ear. The battle tableau which ends the first act, is so effective that one regrets it could not have been economized for the closing of the piece. The Old Corporal will be played this afternoon and evening, and all should avail themselves of seeing it, as the probabilities are that next week it will give place to other novelties. On the Opera House bills, we notice that "Kathleen Mavourneen has arrived"—we trust that, unlike others who have visited us, she was not sold to arrive—and Janet Pride—a piece upon which Boucicault specially prides himself—is underlined for speedy production. The Jacksons and Boniface will appear in it.

We also observe that ☞ FIFTY RESPECTABLE YOUNG LADIES ☜ are advertised for at the Opera House. Stress seems to be laid upon their respectability. We trust that the number will easily be found, and that they will not think it necessary to cease being respectable after going upon the stage.

At the Academy of Music, on Friday of last week, Mrs. Saunders was the recipient of a rousing benefit, Babes in the Wood and a Day After the Fair constituting the performance. The house was well filled. The beneficiary never played better, and Setchell volunteered an address in her behalf, which must have been funny, as it made everybody laugh. Babes in the Wood was repeated, with Arrah-na-Poke, on Saturday, to a house which suffered from the benefit passed and the one to come. Monday evening Arrah-na-Poke was played for the last time, the occasion being the author's benefit. Sketches in India, under the nom d'occasion of Stage Struck, formed the prelude, and a solo by Setchell the interlude—the latter reading a note from the author, and accompanying it with a few brief and appropriate remarks in his usual chaste and ornate manner. The house was well filled by an unusually select audience, and Mr. Webb has every reason to congratulate himself on a successful termination to the run of his burlesque. Tuesday evening, Pocahontas, prefaced by California Diamonds, was brought out. Apropos of the latter piece, it suffered on its first representation here, some weeks ago, from the mistaken impression on some sides that it was of Californian origin. One of John Oxenford's most successful farces, under the name of Bristol Diamonds, it won him a reputation in London. To give it local point, San Francisco streets and surroundings were substituted for the London ones of the original—no other alterations being made—in consequence of which it was merely alluded to by one of critical calling in a morning paper as "an original piece of amusing pleasantry—authorship unknown." To return to Pocahontas—it was cleverly localized, well put upon the stage, and better played than one would have supposed it could be to a small and irresponsive audience. Miss Thorne, as "Pocahontas," dressed in white satin, with beads and bracelets of pearl, and other ornaments of gold. The dress was becoming, inasmuch as it was in keeping with her blonde beauty, but the traditional dress of Indian maidens would have been better for stage effect. As she danced her in-turned-toe dance, the string which held her beads gave way, so that pearls dropped around her in a way that reminded one of the princesses in fairy tales, who could not open their mouths without filling jewel caskets. The Worrel Sisters had left the Academy because of there being no parts in the piece but "Pocahontas" suited to their talents, and the vacancy had to be filled by an advertisement. The management had previously prided itself upon its "gallery of beauties," but the last comers were scarcely an addition to it. As "Powhatan," Setchell was about as unlike an Indian chief as possible, which is always good burlesque; as "John Smith," Harry Wall, who undertook the character for the first time, was very good indeed. Mrs. Saunders, as usual, was perfect in her part and excellent. The other parts of the piece are not of sufficient importance to deserve much mention, but they were generally well done. Thursday evening, Babes in the Wood and Toodles—two pieces that should never be yoked together, the former being too Toodlesy to give the latter the benefit of contrast—occupied the stage: and last evening Setchell took a benefit, the pieces being "Poor Pillicoddy," "A Quiet Family," and "Box and Cox." As THE CALIFORNIAN will go to press before the Academy doors are open, it is perhaps scarcely worth while to say much about the number present, or to closely criticize the performance. One thing, however, may be said of the beneficiary; he always makes people laugh, and if this is not the perfection of low comedy, what is? It may be that he deserves no praise for being funny, because he cannot help it, and that credit should be withheld from him until he undertakes high comedy or tragedy, and makes a dismal failure, but here we differ from some critics. His "Beetle" is a performance hard to beat. This evening "The Dutch Governor," and "Pocahontas" will be played, and on Wednesday the company go up country—Miss Thorne taking her benefit on Tuesday evening, when an excellent bill will be presented. A word here for the beneficiary; an excellent actress, a sweet singer, and altogether an accomplished woman, she deserves as good a benefit as it lies within the power of San Francisco to bestow. Owing to unpropitious weather, unusual attractions on all sides, and the popular impoverishment, her engagement thus far has netted her far short of what it should, and the best benefit will only bring it up to a respectably paying point.

The Irish drama not proving very drawing at Wheatleigh's Metropolitan, the Anglo-Hungarian Hebraic was substituted on Monday, Vestvali appearing as "Gamea." This is decidedly the best role of the Magnificent, being the most even of her performances, and the only one in which she displays real genius unmarked by glaring faults. In the card scene with the peasants, the play of her countenance when she turns from her dupes is a perfect study. She had the advantage of being supported by Mrs. Judah, Mrs. Brown, and Miss Hinckley, as well as assisted by Mr. Wheatleigh, who undertook a character decidedly out of his line. Gamea ruled to bad-weather audiences until Thursday evening, when it gave place to Love, the Conqueror—Vestvali appearing in a male character. It is a pity that nature has not endowed her for male parts throughout as well as in voice, for certainly the latter is about as near an approach to a heavy baritone as could be made without touching. But her idea of the male character seems to be rant and gesture, and "asides" to a most confusing degree—the more especially when her imperfect English renders it difficult to understand what she says. Mdlle. Vestvali should by all means cultivate a slight repose of manner if she intends to plunge herself permanently into the imminent deadly breeches. In the wild whirl of words—the accent always upon the most unimportant ones, as is the rule with foreigners—it is rather difficult to catch the plot of the piece, but it is indicated by the title, and peeps out occasionally when a lull comes. As the hero of the piece, Vestvali (the Marquise) wins over all the women, cajoles all the men, and eventually carries every point that he wishes to. If the piece is intended to convey a moral, it certainly is, that one should kiss every woman—old or young—that comes in one's way, and lie to all the men. The star was well supported by the regular members of the company, but a good many of these latter were cast by the exigencies of the occasion a little out of their line. Last evening was announced for Vestvali's benefit, her cousin Mdlle. Elisa Vestvali Lund, opening with "Die Waise aus Lowood"--Dutch for "Jane Eyre." In addition, Mdlle. Lund is to appear in the third act of the original "Leah," "introducing the great curse scene"—which certainly ought to be warming to the blood. The comedy of "Love, the Conqueror" coming in between "Die Waise," and the swearing scene may be called an incursion. This afternoon "Gamea," and in the evening a repetition of last night's bill is announced.

THE present number of THE CALIFORNIAN is the first of its fourth volume. We purpose at another time to call more particular attention to its prospects and progress, but want of space compels us to confine ourselves at present to a notice of the change in the first page of the paper. The piquant "Mouse-Trap," which has been so ably edited by "Trem" during the past six months, gives place to the weekly feuilleton of a gentleman too well known to the earlier patrons of THE CALIFORNIAN to need commendation here. In the theatrical columns an equally competent pen is substituted for that of "Touchstone." The other contributors retain their usual places, and the editorship remains unchanged.

A GRAND CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL is to be given by the young ladies of the Second Congregational Church at Dashaway Hall, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Dec. 18th, 19th, and 20th. The proceeds will be applied to the payment of the pastor's salary, and patrons will have the satisfaction of ministering to religion while female youth and beauty will be ministering to them.

THE State Guard have their second annual anniversary on the 7th inst., comprising a target practice at Alameda, and a social party at their armory in the evening.

FOR review of new books, see fourth page.

[For the Californian.]

INDOOR GARDENING.—No. 3.

THE Druids, with their sacred herbs and flowers, are almost forgotten; the worship of Friga or Freya, the Saxon Goddess of Fertility, is laid aside; the orgies of Flora, the Roman May Queen and goddess, have been suppressed; yet the love of flowers still exists; that which God has made beautiful, no law of man, no wilful perversion of mind, can destroy. The infant craves for flowers, children deck each other with them, and woman places them on her bosom and in the sick chamber, perhaps because they are the most innocent and pure of God's children, for she feels deeply, and her feelings often lead her aright, when man's reason carries him astray.

The Druids have left their holly and mistletoe in the castle and the cottage; the flowers used at the Easter revelries of Friga and Flora, have been consecrated to the service of the church; but whatever may have been the enjoyments of our ancestors at the opening of the season of flowers, we have no reason to envy them, for their flowers, though sweet, were wild and not at all profuse in blossom. Whatever was done by them, was little more than a replantation from the broad forest or moorland home, to the enclosed weedy space in the castle termed a garden. Now those who love flowers may have them all the year round. Chained to the desk by labor, or lashed to the bed by disease, or tied to home by the bonds of love, neither man nor woman need forego the love of flowers. There are now flowers for all seasons, for all tastes, for all temperatures, and by ordinary and at small expense, any one desirous of adding to the enjoyments of home, the tranquility, vivacity, and brilliancy of a garden, has it in their power to do so. They have but to follow out the directions of those who have studied the subject as a profession, watch the health of the plants, note their likes and dislikes, and their home will become to them the Kew of their heart, and the Chatsworth of all their desires, so that it may be said of them as Xenophen said of Cyrus: "Wherever he resides, or whatever place he visits in his dominions, he takes care that his paradises shall be filled with all that is beautiful and useful which the soil can produce." The greatest of our scientific discoveries have generally been the results of small means; had large resources been at command, probably it would have taken larger periods to accomplish the same ends. Necessity is truly the mother of invention, and this holds equally good of the cultivation of flowers and even greater matters. Not only do we often find these beauties of Nature cultivated in places and under circumstances the least likely, but we also frequently find them grown most successfully in such cases, simply because the cultivators are led through the dangers to which their favorites are exposed to pay greater attention to their requirements. The culture of plants requires observation, it is far better in the beginning to commence with one or two favorites, and having been successful, to ascend the scale by increasing the number and variety, than at once to possess a large number and fail. Plants, like birds and other pets, suffer from the least neglect, their appearance at once bears witness to the treatment they have received, but on the other hand they cheerfully and gratefully acknowledge the kindess and attention bestowed upon them.

The management of your indoor plants must be a labor of love. Let it be seen that a loving hand supplies every want, and then their happy appearance and luxuriant growth, the brilliancy and the perfume of their flowers, will be your reward, and a never-ending source of the purest pleasure.

As an indoor flower, none are more showy or give a greater variety of flowers than the crocus; they can be admirably grown either in moss and sand, or in soil, and when arranged in groups with hyacinths, they form a splendid object. The little snowdrop, both the single and double varieties, are very beautiful and easily grown. The jonquils are very desirable, both for the beauty of the flowers, and the delicate perfume; also the tulips with their rich markings. There are many ways of growing these bulbs which produce a pretty effect; if a variety are placed in a fancy dish or vase filled with bright green moss, the bulbs carefully placed in and covered over by the moss, and then filled up with water so that all the moss is saturated, they will grow and bloom in great perfection. They can also be arranged very prettily in moss and wire baskets for suspending in the windows; by dipping occasionally in water will afford them sufficient moisture. In fact, there is no arrangement of them but will be pleasing, and suggest other ways and means of growing them.

The crocus is said to have derived its name from a beautiful youth named Crocus, who is said to have been consumed by the ardor of his affection for Smilax, and afterwards metamorphosed into the plant which still bears his name. Others suppose it to be taken from Coriscus, a city and mountain of Cilicia. Ovid mentions the > "Crocus and Smilax may be turn'd to flowers,

> And the Curetes spring from bounteous showers;
> I pass a hundred legends stale as these,
> And with sweet novelty your taste will please."

Homer says:

> "And sudden Hyacinths the turf bestow,
> And flowery Crocus made the mountains glow."

The snowdrop has been celebrated by almost every writer of note, and its praises are sung by all the poets:

> "The Snowdrop, Winter's timid child,
> Awakes to life bedew'd with tears,
> And flings around its fragrance mild;
> And where no rival flowerets bloom,
> Amid the bare and chilling gloom,
> A beauteous gem appears."

IRIS.

CAN A HUMORQUS PERIODICAL SUCCEED IN AMERICA?

[From the Round Table.]

THIS is a question which has occupied the attention of a good many people for a good many years, and much diversity of opinion has resulted from their cogitations and experiences. The first Yankee Doodle, Judy, the John Donkey, the Lantern, the Young America, Vanity Fair, and Mrs. Grundy form a sabbatarian series of experimental data upon which might be founded an exhaustive discussion of the merits and requirements of humorous publications in this country.

In common with all men who have been "behind the scenes" of comic journalism, and aided in conducting the experimentum crucis, my convictions have undergone a complete transition from a hopeful affirmative to a despairing negative. Competent theorists will tell you, and with reason, that a really good humorous and satirical paper ought to achieve an immense success in a country like this, where so many and such various types of nationality and character are assembled; where a vast and exhaustless field for satire is offered in public and private life: where sectional peculiarities and individual idiosyncrasies stand out with such angular prominence; and where, by the rapid gains and losses attendant upon our speculative tendencies, odd figures are constantly advancing and receding in the social scale, like the shifting phantasmagoria of the magic lantern. But ask the experts—the publishers who have sunk thousands of dollars in such enterprises; the editors who have wearily toiled to separate exceptional wheat from general chaff; the writers who have spun their choicest brain-webs for the public blue-bottles; ask these men what they think of the possibility of such an undertaking, and you will get from one and all the same response: "It ought to succeed; but it won't."

In an article entitled "The Last American Punch," published in the third issue of this paper, the writer gives several reasons for the failure of Mrs. Grundy and her congeners, which, at first sight, seem plausible enough, but whose inefficiency may be easily shown by a brief consideration of actual facts. He says:

"The trouble with Mrs. Grundy, as with all its predecessors, was that it conformed to the type of comic periodical which would suit an English, not an American, audience. John Donkey, the Lantern, Vanity Fair, were all obviously modelled upon the London Punch, even to the size and make-up of the forms."

Now, as far as "size and make-up" are concerned, the similarity to those of Punch is undoubted; but this is simply due to the fact that that particular size has been found most convenient for immediate reading and ultimate binding, and that the "make-up"—the distribution of wood-cuts on the "outside pages"—hinges on the mechanical exigencies of the press-room. No size could be adopted which would not be open to adverse criticism as an apparent imitation of that of some one of the numerous periodicals at home or abroad, and that engravings must be placed in what printers term the "outside form" is a rule which applies to all illustrated papers. So much for the manner. With regard to the matter, even were it the fact that the style of the papers alluded to was "obviously modelled upon the London Punch," this would not detract from any intrinsic merits they might possess. Punch himself is an avowed imitator, and prints his own alias of "The London Charivari;" but the English public have never thought of denying merit to a style confessedly borrowed from the French. To a certain extent, every new literary enterprise must be a more or less close copy of some antecedent model. One successful periodical having been established in any special walk of literature, whether scientific, musical, humorous, satirical, or critical, all subsequent labors in the same field necessarily bear a strong resemblance in general character to their prototype. But this resemblance is only generic, not specific.

The same article I have quoted above states:

"Had the projectors of Mrs. Grundy carefully studied and reproduced in better forms and higher types the successful specimens of purely American comic humor, both in matter and illustration, they would to-day have a prosperous and popular journal."

To this I reply, that "better forms and higher types" would, in most instances, do away with the essential characteristics of "purely American comic humor," which owes its identity to a rude, grotesque sense of the broadly ludicrous, and whose stamp of coinage is manifest in coarseness of phraseology. Vanity Fair attempted to quarry the vein of Americanism, and was for some time edited by "Artemus Ward," whose cacographic absurdities are to-day recognized as the most successful specimens of national humor; but Vanity Fair failed.

If, however, these "higher types" are to be found in the literary productions of cultivated Americans—if, as I deferentially submit, the highest instead of the lowest forms of composition should be taken to form a national standard—then have all our humorous papers since the Lantern been American in the best sense of the word. It is admirably said in a recent editorial in The Round Table that "as far as relates to what is timely and novel, the journalist must consult popular feeling, and it is well to select popular topics; beyond this, to popularize journalism is to vulgarize it;" and a serious impediment to the cultivation of public taste in this country is erected by those who dwell upon the notoriety of Artemus Ward, Orpheus C. Kerr, et id genus omne, rather than the genuine excellence of Irving, Holmes, Lowell, Mitchell, Hawthorne, and other elegant authors, as giving tone to cis-Atlantic literature.

With the exception of Messrs. Barber and Shanly, both of whom have resided here long enough to become naturalized in style (as is sufficiently proven by the letters of the "Disbanded Volunteer,") all the regular contributors to Vanity Fair and Mrs. Grundy were Americans pur sang; American in turn of thought, in educational training, in all things which tend to the development of nationality; nor is it true that "the publishers of Mrs. Grundy complain that they could get neither writers nor artists capable of making a first-class paper." Their complaint referred to a dearth of readers, not of writers. A circulation which would return large profits to the publishers of a simply literary journal is inadequate to the support of one whose outlay for drawings and engravings amounts to two or three hundred dollars on each number. The actual expense of publishing Mrs. Grundy averaged $600 per week, and when it is considered that forty per cent. discount must be made on all sales to "the trade," it will be seen that a circulation of six thousand copies would barely suffice to pay the current expenditures. As each purchaser of a paper represents five readers, we find that thirty thousand appreciative people must co-operate to establish a first-rate illustrated paper; and, humiliating as the statement may be, the really cultivated class of this community has not hitherto manifested its sense of refined humor to anywhere near that extent.

The next difficulty encountered by the projectors of such an enterprise arises from a want of esprit de corps among literary men—a lack of unity of action in the common cause. In England, men like Thackeray, Dickens, Jerrold, Hood, A'Beckett, Albert Smith, the Mayhews, Blanchard, Shirley Brooks, and others eminent in literature, worked with interest and vigor for the success of Punch; but here the case is different. Either from apathy, or the requirements of professional or professorial pursuits, the very men who should take leading parts hold aloof from all participation, and the circle of available contributors is consequently narrowed down to some six or seven, who are overtasked by the amount of labor forced upon them. No kind of mental effort is so difficult and exhausting as theirs under the most favorable circumstances; but when, despite disinclination or physical suffering, a certain quantity of matter must be furnished every week, then is the worst condition of the slave enviable when compared with that of the humorist. As Dr. Holmes once said to the present writer, when speaking of the difference between a publication like the North American Review and one like Punch, "One lives by the work of wits; the other by the play of scholars."

Another, and at present an insuperable, obstacle to success in comic journalism here is met with in the artistic department. True, we have many artists who "satisfy the public taste," so far as the mass of the uncultivated public is concerned, and some few who address themselves to a more select audience; but we have none as yet who combine skillful manipulation with a high order of humor and keen perception of character, as did John Leech, to whom is chiefly due the popularity of Punch. No matter how good the literary contents of such a paper, its estimation depends mainly upon the illustrations, which first attract the reader's attention; and these cannot be procured in America equal either in conception or execution to those of European periodicals.

Again, the influence of the press, which elsewhere is lent in aid of light literature, is here withheld or thrown into the adverse scale. Minor "exchanges," to be sure, publish conventional, unmeaning puffs; but the more influential journals either pass by a humorous contemporary unnoticed, or print captious, unfair criticisms, apparently prompted by the malice of "rejected" contributors. Except in the Commercial Advertiser, no rational, candid review of an existing "comic" paper has appeared in any of the daily journals.

Still another drawback arises from the fluctuations of political life in America. Our public men seldom remain long enough in office for the people at large to become familiar with their features and peculiarities. Caricatures of Palmerston, Russell, "Dizzy," and other prominent Englishmen are at once appreciated by every reader of Punch; but not one person in a hundred would recognize the portraits of more than two or three living American statesmen. In addition to this, less interest is felt in politics by the refined, educated class in this country than in Europe. Gentlemen here, as a rule, take but little part in public affairs, and are careless concerning legislation, save when it affects their own pockets.

Though laboring under none of the disadvantages I have mentioned, Punch struggled on, almost against hope, for several years before attaining a permanent position. In 1846, when Messrs. Bradbury & Evans assumed the publication, it was on the brink of dissolution, and was only revived by a large expenditure of money and an untiring energy in its business management.

Perhaps one of these days, when speculation in gold and petroleum shall have enriched the entire population, and further money-making yielded to the cultivation of belles lettres, some enterprising publisher may yet succeed in establishing on a remunerative basis an American humorous periodical; perhaps not.

A. L. CARROLL.

THE Dublin papers publish a burlesque Fenian proclamation, said to have been posted beside the proclamation of the Lord Lieutenant, which indicates that the witty Irish are inclined to regard the proceedings of the authorities with a degree of ridicule bordering on contempt. The following is the document:

BY THE LORD-LIEUTENANT-GENERAL AND HIS MAN OR ANY OTHER MAN.

PROCLAMATION—Woodlouse—Hurroo! Whereas certain persons styling themselves Finnigans have been endeavoring to obtain what they consider their right, and by so doing have disturbed and frightened the loyal and peaceable old stay-at-home subjects of the old lady over the water; and whereas they have evinced a determination to have the same at all cost, and appear to have plenty of men, money and war material to carry out their wicked design of making war on us, the aforesaid loyal and peaceable stay-at-home subjects, by which we are put in great bodily fear of our precious loyal lives, and the lives of our fat oxen and sheep, which would be a great calamity—greater than the cattle plague; and whereas we are reliably informed that one of the aforesaid Finnigans, named D. O. N. T. Youwishyoumaycatchum, has been prominent in disseminating this spirit of independence and patriotism in the breasts of his countrymen, and has been most instrumental in making us afraid of our aforesaid lives and ill gotten goods—It is ordered that if the aforesaid D. O. N. T Youwishyoumaycatchum does not deliver himself up to the nearest beak or beaksman or other functionary of British misrule in Ireland, within five minutes after the posting of this notice, he shall not be allowed to sneeze or say, "How's your mother?" during the remainder of his natural life; and it is further ordered that any person delivering up to us the said D. O. N. T Youwishyoumaycatchum will be entitled to a reward of 100 pounds, to be paid in scoppers, on the next change in the moon, each bearing a true likeness or impression of the rum-looking mug of the aforesaid old lady who lives over the water; and it is further ordered that if any person shall knowingly or wilfully harbor or conceal the said D. O. N. T Youwishyoumaycatchum, he shall be compelled to contribute the sum of twopence halfpenny to the aforesaid 100 pounds of scoppers.

Given at our Castle at Dublin this 20th day of September, 1865, being the last year of our precious reign in Ireland.

THOMAS A. LARKEM.

"God save the green."

ONE of the most remarkable phenomena presented by contemporary science, is the tendency to unity of all sciences. An additional instance of this tendency has just been given by a memoir by Mons. Matteucci on that power which gives action to the nervous system. You know that a great many physiologists have insisted upon the identity of electricity and this power: it is not, however, accepted for absolutely true, although it is admitted there is a great analogy between them. Mons. Matteucci agrees there are serious objections to this theory, and he holds them to be different agents, but he shows there is a similar analogy between them as exists between light, heat, and electricity. He instances the tourmaline which developes electricity when heated, and he shows there is a like relation between electricity and the nervous power. Reminding the reader that the essential characteristics of imponderable bodies, such as the immense rapidity of their motions, the ease with which they escape defection and observation, and the transformation of each into the other belong to this nervous power as well as to electricity, light, and heat, he goes on to represent this nervous power by ether. "This nervous power, he says, consists in a particular motion of ether. Ether diffused throughout the nervous system as it is diffused throughout the universe assumes the characteristics of nervous power by the modifications which are introduced into the relative disposition of its atoms by the organization of the nervous substance." When the ether is directed from the extremities towards the brain it produces sensation. When it is directed from the brain to the extremities it produces contraction. Thus you will observe that this hypothesis of ether which has long been admitted in astronomy, natural philosophy, and chemistry is invading physiology, and electricity, heat, light, and nervous power obey the same laws, and are produced and may be transformed each by the other. "Spiridion," in the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

In a late number of the Athenæum, five new translations of Homer's Iliad are noticed: two in English hexameter, by Edwin W. Simcox and J. Henry Dart, and three in blank verse, by Ichabod Charles Wright, William Selwyn, and W. C. Green.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to France, 15 cents for each ½ ounce. Prepayment optional.

Letters to other foreign countries vary in rate according to the route by which they are sent.

Letters to any part of the United States, 3 cents for each ½ ounce or part thereof.

Advertised letters, 1 cent in addition to the regular rates.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO
No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.
In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.

First and Highest Premium
TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.
In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.
First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,
AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,
11 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!
CLOSING OUT SALE
—OF—
Fine Clothing,
TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.
$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD,
AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.
If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on
J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets,
San Francisco.

NEW MUSIC.
THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc23) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDly taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.
Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS
Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN
HORSE-POWER
FOR SAWING WOOD.
Also, the
SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER
Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.
ALL WORK WARRANTED.
☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜
E. O. HUNT,
No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,
jy29-3m San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.
Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.
Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.
A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

HUNT'S PATENT
Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,
For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.
HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER
Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by
E. O. HUNT,
jy29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

THE MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.
F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.
CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,
$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3 500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - - -	6.500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.
The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.
Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."
Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.
ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.
Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.
Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.
The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of
H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.
W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14-3m

OVERSTOCKED!
AND MUST SELL!
Goodwin & Co.,
Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO
UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET
Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.
Our stock of
Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,
Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a
GUARANTEE
OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!
Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.
TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS
—AT—
LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!
GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS
TO
Red Bluff.
ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company
WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO
FOR RED BLUFF,
ON SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY,
UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.
se23-tf J. WHITNEY, JR., President.

CALEB M. SICKLER,
DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,
422 KEARNEY STREET,
BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,
SAN FRANCISCO
AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES.
se23 3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME!
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.
ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.
Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M
jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,
Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
de17-3m

TRIAL IS THE BEST
AND
Surest Test of Merit!
OVER TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND
(200,000)

HAVE BEEN SOLD
Since they were Introduced to Public Notice.
F. L. TILESTON, Agent,
Corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets,
se30 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

R. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Importing and Wholesale
DRUGGISTS,
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO,
AND
SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,
To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND
SAN FRANCISCO.
IMPORTERS OF
Dental AND Surgical Instruments,
Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short,
EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION
☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.
BOOKS.
We have constantly on hand all the
STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.
Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.
The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.
The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:
You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.
To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.
Alias H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled. } Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 no11 3m Merchant street.

THACKERAY MEMORIALS.

THE New York Weekly Review is republishing a series of interesting personal recollections of Mr. Thackeray in Philadelphia, which were originally printed in a small pamphlet for private circulation among the friends of the author, Mr. William B. Reed. They are full of pleasant memoirs of the illustrious humorist, and contain many of his characteristic letters. We regret that our space enables us to make only a few extracts :

In the winter of 1855, Mr. Thackeray made his second and last visit to this country, and gave us the first fruits of his new lecturing experiment—"The Georges." I met him in New York, and heard his "George IV."—to my mind the least agreeable of the course—delivered before a literary society in Brooklyn. He thence came to Philadelphia and renewed his old intimacies and associations. His friends were glad to see him, and he them. The impression we all had was that two years had emboldened him more than they should have done; but there was no change in other respects. "The Georges" were, if possible, a greater success than the "Humorists," though I confess I had, and have, a lurking preference for the genial communion with Steele and Fielding (his favorites,) and Swift and Sterne (his aversions,) to the dissection of the tainted remains of the Hanoverian Kings. But there was in one of these lectures a passage familar to every listener and every reader, which I reproduce here, not merely from an association presently to be referred to, but because it seems to me that, in transcribing it, I have the dead again before me, and hear a sweet voice in the very printed words :

"What preacher need moralize on this story; what words save the simplest are requisite to tell it? It is too terrible for tears. The thought of such a misery smites me down in submission before the Ruler of kings and men, the Monarch Supreme over empires and republics, the inscrutable Disposer of life, death, happiness, victory. O, brothers! speaking the same dear mother tongue—O, comrades! enemies no more, let us take a mournful hand together, as we stand by this royal corpse, and call a truce to battle! Low he lies to whom the proudest used to kneel once, and who was cast lower than the poorest—dead, whom millions prayed for in vain. Driven off his throne; buffeted by rude hands; with his children in revolt; the darling of his old age killed before him untimely; our Lear hangs over her breathless lips and cries: 'Cordelia. Cordelia, stay a little!'

> 'Vex not his ghost!—O let him pass.—He hates him
> That would upon the rack of this tough world
> Stretch him out longer!'

Hush! strife and quarrel, over the solemn grave! Sound, trumpets, a mournful march! Fall, dark curtain, upon his pageant, his pride, his grief, his awful tragedy!"

Was it this, or was it the other passage about the princess Amelia, and the old King praying for returning reason, which Thackeray referred to in the following note, written to me from Baltimore in answer to one sending an adverse criticism in a small newspaper in Philadelphia :

BALTIMORE, January 16, 1865.

My Dear Reed: Your letter of the 9th, with one from Boston of the 8th, was given to me last night when I came home. In what possible snowdrift have they been lying torpid? One hundred thanks for your goodness in the lecture, and all other matters; and if I can find the face to read those printed lectures over again, I'll remember your good advice. That splendid crowd on the last night, I knew, would make our critical friend angry. I have not seen the last article, of course, and don't intend to look for it. And as I was reading the George III. lecture here on Monday night, could not help asking myself, "What can the man mean by saying that I am uncharitable, unkindly, that I sneer at virtue," and so forth?

My own conscience being pretty clear, I can receive the Bulletin's displeasure with calmness—remembering how I used to lay about me in my youthful days, and how I generally took a good tall mark to hit at Wicked weather, and an opera company which performed on the two first lecture nights here, made the audience rather thin; but they fetched up at the third lecture, and to night is the last; after which I go to Richmond—then to go farther south, from Charleston to Havana and New Orleans; perhaps to hark back and try westward, where I know there is a great crop of dollars to be reaped. But to be snow-bound in my infirm condition! I might never get out of the snow alive.

I go to Washington to-morrow for a night. I was there and dined with Crampton on Saturday. He was in good force and spirits, and I saw no signs of packing up, or portmanteau in the hall.

I send my very best respects to Mrs. Reed and your sister-in-law, and Lewis and his kind folks, and to Mac's whiskey punch, which gave me no headache. I'm very sorry it treated you so unkindly.

Always yours, dear Reed,

W. M. THACKERAY.

The allusion in this letter to the printed lectures recalls a little incident which was very illustrative of his generous temper, and is not unlike the "pill-box with the guineas," which I have seen lately in some literary notices. It was this: On his return to Philadelphia, in the spring of 1856, from the South and West, a number of his friends—I, as much as anyone—urged him, unwisely, as it turned out, to repeat his lectures on the "Humorists." He was very loath to do it, but finally yielded, being, I doubt not, somewhat influenced by the pecuniary inducements accidentally held out to him. A young bookseller of this city offered him a round sum, not very large, but, under the circumstances, quite liberal for the course, which he accepted. The experiment was a failure. It was late in the season, with long days and shortening nights, and the course was a stale one, and the lectures had been printed, and the audiences were thin, and the bargain was disastrous, not to him, but to the young gentleman who had ventured it. We were all disappointed and mortified; but Thackeray took it good humoredly—the only thing that seemed to disturb him being his sympathy with the man of business. "I don't mind the empty benches, but I cannot bear to see that sad, pale-faced young man as I come out, who is losing money on my account." This he used to say at my house, when he came home to a frugal and not very cheerful supper after the lectures. Still, the bargain had been fairly made, and was honorably complied with, and the money was paid and remitted, through my agency, to him at New York. I received no acknowledgement of the remittance, and recollect that I felt not a little annoyed at this; the more so when, on picking up a newspaper, I learned that Thackeray had sailed for home. The day after he had gone, when there could be no refusal, I received from him a certificate of deposit on his New York bankers for an amount quite sufficient to make up any loss incurred, as he thought, in his behalf. I give the accompanying note, merely suppressing the name of the gentleman in question. There are some little things in this note—its blanks and dashes—to which a fac-simile alone would do justice :

24th April.

MY DEAR REED: Wen you get this . . . . Remember-ember me to ki-ki-kind friends, ... a sudden resolution . . . to-morrow in the Baltic!— . . . Good-bye, my dear, kind friend, and all kind friends in Philadelphia. I didn't think of going away when I left home this morning—but it's the best way.

I think it right to send back twenty-five per cent. to poor H——. Will you kindly give him the enclosed; and depend upon it I shall go and see Mrs. Boott, '(my wife's aged grandmother, then residing in England,)' when I get to London, and tell her all about you. My heart is uncommonly heavy; and I am yours, gratefully and affectionately. W. M. T.

"MARK TWAIN" OVERPOWERED.

THE Enterprise, having recently published one of those "affecting incidents," which are occasionally met with by "localitems," when there is a dearth of fires, runaways, etc., "Mark Twain" issues the following as a companion-piece :

UNCLE LIGE.

I will now relate an affecting incident of my meeting with Uncle Lige, as a companion novelette to the one published by Dan the other day, entitled "Uncle Henry."

A day or two since—before the late stormy weather—I was taking a quiet stroll in the western suburbs of the city. The day was sunny and pleasant. In front of a small but neat "bit house," seated upon a bank—a worn out and discarded faro bank—I saw a man and a little girl. The sight was too much for me, and I burst into tears. Oh, God! I cried, this is too rough! After the violence of my emotion had in a manner spent itself, I ventured to look once more upon that touching picture. The left hand of the girl (how well I recollect which hand it was! by the warts on it)—a fair-haired, sweet-faced child of about eight years of age—rested upon the right shoulder (how perfectly I remember it was his right shoulder, because his left shoulder had been sawed off in a saw-mill) of the man by whose side she was seated. She was gazing toward the summit of Lone Mountain, and prating of the gravestones on the top of it and of the sunshine and Diggers resting on its tomb-clad slopes. The head of the man drooped forward till his face almost rested upon his breast, and he seemed intently listening. It was only a pleasing pretence, though, for there was nothing for him to hear save the rattling of the carriages on the gravel road beside him, and he could have straightened himself up and heard that easy enough, poor fellow. As I approached, the child observed me, notwithstanding her extreme youth, and ceasing to talk, smilingly looked at me, strange as it may seem. I stopped, again almost overpowered, but after a struggle I mastered my feelings sufficiently to proceed. I gave her a smile—or rather, I swapped her one in return for the one I had just received, and she said :

"This is Uncle Lige—poor blind-drunk Uncle Lige."

This burst of confidence from an entire stranger, and one so young withal, caused my subjugated emotions to surge up in my breast once more, but again, with a strong effort, I controlled them. I looked at the wine-bred cauliflower on the poor man's nose and saw how it had all happened.

"Yes," said he, noticing by my eloquent countenance that I had seen how it had all happened, notwithstanding nothing had been said yet about anything having happened, "Yes, it happened in Reeseriv' a year ago; since tha(ic)at time been living here with broth—Robert'n lill Addie (e ick!)."

"Oh, he's the best uncle, and tells me such stories!" cried the little girl.

"At's aw-ri, you know (ick!)—at's aw ri," said the kind-hearted, gentle old man, spitting on his shirt bosom and slurring it off with his hand.

The child leaned quickly forward and kissed his poor blossomy face. We beheld two great tears start from the man's sightless eyes, but when they saw what sort of country they had got to travel over, they went back again. Kissing the child again and again and once more and then several times, and afterwards repeating it, he said :

"H(o-ook!)—oorah for Melical eagle star-spalgle baller! At's aw-ri, you know—(ick!)—at's aw-ri"—and he stroked her sunny curls and spit on his shirt bosom again.

This affecting scene was too much for my already over-charged feelings, and I burst into a flood of tears and hurried from the spot.

Such is the touching story of Uncle Lige. It may not be quite as sick as Dan's, but there is every bit as much reasonable material in it for a big calf like either of us to cry over. Cannot you publish the two novelettes in book form and send them forth to destroy such of our fellow citizens as are spared by the cholera?

A SMART QUAKER.—Mr. K——, the Quaker president of a Pennsylvania railroad, during the confusion some years since, called upon the W —— bank, with which the road kept a large regular account, and asked for an extension of part of its paper falling due in a few days. The bank president declined rather abruptly, saying in a rough tone to the functionary :

"Mr. K., your paper must be paid at maturity; we cannot renew it."

"Very well," our Quaker friend replied, and left the bank.

But he did not let the matter rest here. On leaving the bank, he went quickly to the depot, and telegraphed to all agents and conductors on the road to reject the W. bank. In a few hours the trains began to arrive, full of panic, and bringing news of the distrust of the W. bank all along the line. Stockholders and depositors flocked to the bank, quaking with panic, inquiring thus :

"What is the matter? Is the bank broke?"

A little inquiry by the officers showed that the trouble originated in the rejection of the bills on the railroad. The president seized his hat and rushed down to the Quaker's office, and came bursting in with the inquiry :

"Mr. K., have you directed the refusal of our currency by your agents?"

"Yes," was the quiet reply.

"Why is this? it will ruin us."

"Well, Friend L——, I supposed the bank was going to fail, as it could not renew a little paper for us this morning."

It is needless to say Mr. L. renewed all the Quaker's paper, and enlarged his line of discount; while the magic wires carried all around the road the sedative message: "The W. bank is all right. Thee may take all its currency."

THE LATEST INJUNCTION.—The Brooklyn Hotel has been kept by John Kelly, Jr., in this city for some twelve years, and has become a very popular institution. In fact, it is not excelled by any hotel in the city in the systematic provision made for the comfort and enjoyment of guests, and its reputation throughout the State is an enviable one. So reasoned the landlord of another hotel, doubtless, who recently sought to appropriate Kelly's "good name" by naming his hostelry the "Brooklyn House." To this Mr. K. demurred, and at his instance an injunction was issued. The Court sustained the injunction, and decided that the original proprietor had sole right to the title of "Brooklyn," and that if there was any difference between "Hotel" and "House," (in reference to a place of entertainment for travellers,)) the Court "could not see it."

MR. H. S. HOMANS, general agent on this Coast for the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, whose business is enormous, and equals that of any other Life Insurance Company on this continent, has just issued circulars for the purpose of more fully explaining their system of "restitution of surplus premiums to policy-holders," and other advantages given to those insuring in this company. All reflective persons investigating the life insurance system of the Mutual must acknowledge that it possesses elements which entitle it to the success it has attained.

THE Call directs attention to Hunt's "California Wooden Pavement." This is the latest invention of the windmill proprietor on Second street, whose place of business is only equalled by the U. S. Patent Office as an exhibition of ingenuity, and is filled with windmills, horsepowers, applepowers, and other contrivances of his own. This pavement is a combination of redwood, asphaltum and gravel, and from the almost indestructible nature of the wood, as well as the improvement in the form of pavement, it is claimed by the inventor to possess great advantages as a pavement. It will soon be tried.

HOPE ON, HOPE EVER.—Newell's Pulmonary Syrup never fails of giving immediate relief when taken, for all difficulties of the chest and lungs, such as asthma, croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, hemorrage, or bleeding of the lungs, and consumption. Don't fail to use the above-named remedy, if you would be relieved at once.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

FOR all diseases of the Skin, use Adams' Blood Purifier. It is strictly a Vegetable Preparation, and does not contain mercury or other mineral poisons in any shape. Prepared only by Samuel Adams, corner of Powell and Bush streets, San Francisco, and for sale by all Druggists.

BEAUTY.—Auburn, golden, flaxen, and silken curls may adorn the person in vain, if the complexion and skin is coarse, sallow, greasy, rough, pimpled, tanned, mothed, etc. Ladies, use Davidson's Circassian Bloom for the skin.

MOSGROVE & BLAKELY'S new Dry Goods Store s in Colton's buildiug, 222 Third street, between Howard and Tehama. Their stock consists in part of the following goods, all of which will be found to be of the very best materials, and at prices which must command the notice of purchasers:

Dress Goods—A large assortment tastefully selected. Their Empress Cloths, Poplins, Melanges, Chenes, and particularly that rich new fabric, "Moonlight on the Lake," cannot be surpassed for Ladies' Fall and Winter Suits.

Hoyle's genuine English Calicoes.

Irish Linen Goods—All from the celebrated manufacturers, Richardson Sons & Owden, Belfast.

Mission and Eastern Blankets and Flannels.

Ladies and Gents' Furnishing Goods; and a large assortment of all goods usually kept by a first class Dry Goods Store.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines, getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

VISIT Haskell's Mammoth Tea Store, and examine the splendid display of choicest Teas, Wines and Groceries, now selling at greatly reduced prices, at Wholesale and Retail.

Store fronts on Market and Sutter streets, below the Market House. Open every evening until seven o'clock, and on Saturdays until ten P. M.

DENTIST WORK.—Messrs. Knowles & Clark have an improved method of combining their gold and vulcanite material in the manufacture of dentistry, which renders the work superior in finish and durability. The samples of their handiwork on exhibition at the late Fair were much admired, and we observe that they were awarded a special premium silver medal.—Mining and Scientific Press.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

A TRUE STORY.

DEDICATED TO THE SICK.

THERE dwelt in Sacramento a pale, bilious mechanic,
His muscles were strengthless, his blood it was chill;
And the wife of his bosom believed, in her panic,
The husband she worshipped was hopelessly ill.
Seeking daily for help, in her wifely devotion,
All vainly she tried pill, powder and potion—
Till at last, when a prey to grief's wildest emotion,
Of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS she heard from a friend.

She purchased the cordial, half hoping, half fearing,
A prayer on her lip and a tear in her eye;
And taking his hand, with words kindly and cheering,
Besought him the tonic for her sake to try.
As he drank, a new life through his system seemed stealing,
Each following draft did its mission of healing,
Until, strong in health and most grateful in feeling,
He told the "true story" here twined into song.

It is also proper to state that the Bitters are sold exclusively in glass, and never, under any circumstances, by the gallon or barrel. Imposters and imitators are abroad, and the only safeguard the public have against them is to see that the Bitters they buy have the engraved label and note of hand of Messrs. Hostetter & Smith, and their proprietary stamp over the cork of the bottle.

A DAINTY BRANCH OF ART.—A high reputation awaits Mrs. Read for the exquisite workmanship and general adaptability to their purpose of the Ladies' Skirt Supporters and Chest Expanders, of which she made such fine display at the late Fair. Her "Lady's Bust" is another aid to feminine beauty, which confers perfection on the wearer. Mrs. Read's establishment, 109 Montgomery street, is richly worth a visit.—San Francisco Sunday Mercury.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and military at the shortest notice; also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldhush & Co., 307 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

ADAMS'
BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potuss, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,

AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO

Corner of Bush and Powell streets.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

GREAT AMERICAN
PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800
PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11 3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Building Fund.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOAD OF TRUSTEES of the Mercantile Library Association, held October 10th, 1865, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the Trustees form themselves into a Committee of the Whole, to obtain Life Memberships and Donations, with a view of purchasing a lot and erecting a building thereon for the use of the Association.

The payment of one hundred dollars in gold coin secures a Life Membership, and it is hoped that the sum of twenty thousand dollars may be subscribed in this way alone. No subscriptions are binding unless the above sum shall be raised by Life Memberships and Donations before February 1, 1866. Subscription books may be found at the Library, or with any of the following members of the

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:

G. W. Belt.....President
*C. Wolcott Brooks.....Vice President
H. S Homans.....Corresponding Secretary
David Wilder.....Recording Secretary
John G. Clark.....Treasurer

J. H. Wildes,	A. M. Ebbetts,
J. W. Cox,	F. D. Kellogg,
A. T. Green,	Chas. R. Bond,
Geo. Hewston, M. D.,	*Daniel Rogers,
F. L. Castle.

*On leave of absence. oc21-tf

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for the best card pictures, and large photographs.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

NOV. 30TH, - - - - - - GOLDEN CITY,
Captain George Bradbury.

DEC. 9TH, - - - - - - - COLORADO,
Captain Watkins.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS: That I, BRIDGET STANNAH, wife of WILLIAM STANNAH, intend to make application to the Twelfth District Court of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on the 23d day of December, A. D. 1865, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, at the court room of said Court, in said city and county, for an order of said Court permitting her to carry on business in her own name and on her own account—the nature of the business to be carried on by virtue of such order being that of keeping a boarding and lodging house, and purchasing lots and houses to be used and occupied in that business, and erecting houses therefor. That for this purpose I am desirous of availing myself of the benefit of An Act to authorize married women to transact business in their own name as sole traders, approved April 12th, 1852, and of the acts amendatory thereof.

BRIDGET STANNAH.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for petitioner—Office, 636 Clay street. nov25 5t

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life
INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26-1m

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1865.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR.

ON FRIDAY, - - - - DECEMBER 15TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY
Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CNT.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

TOYS! TOYS! TOYS!

BASKET AND WILLOW WARE,
FANCY GOODS, &c.

The Best Selected and Largest Assorted Stock
EVER BEFORE IN CALIFORNIA.
FOR SALE CHEAP BY THE CASE OR DOZEN,
—AT—
THURNAUER & ZINN'S,
320 and 322 Battery street,
Between Commercial and Clay streets,
se16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LERCHE, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of RICHARD GRAHAM, deceased. Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of ELIZABETH GRAHAM, executrix of the last will and testament of Richard Graham, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees and devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said Richard Graham, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court-room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Monday, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1865, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees and devisees of the said Richard Graham, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1865, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated November 8th, 1865. GEO. B. MERRILL,
no11-5t Attorney for Executrix.

CALIFORNIA VIEWS.

Stereoscopic and Album Views

OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA,

EMBRACING OVER NINE HUNDRED New and Interesting Scenes in this city, and Mining Districts.

Also, Wood's celebrated

VIEWS OF YOSEMITE VALLEY,

size 18x22—the finest ever published.

Catalogues free. For sale by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
oc28 1m Nos. 317 and 319 Montgomery streets.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory; against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

SINGER MANUACTURING CO.

SEWING MACHINES,

139

MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

MOTTO—"The Singer Machines are the only Machines that can Sew all kinds of Cloth, and with all kinds of thread."

75,000

MACHINES SOLD IN TWO YEARS!

The almost incredible increase in the sale of the Singer Machine during the past two years is owing to the popularity of the LETTER A TRANSVERSE SHUTTLE Family Machine, which was introduced in 1860, since which time it has earned and established a reputation for family uses equal to the celebrated manufacturing machines of this firm, which are generally acknowledged even by dealers in other sewing machines, to be unequalled for such purposes.

WILLIAM BRODERICK,
General Agent for the Singer
au19-3m Manufacturing Co.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25 3m

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
se30 3m San Francisco.

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,

For Wholesale and Retail Trade,

ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,

AT QUINCY HALL,

NOS. 545, 547, 549,

Washington Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

se30 3m

PREMIUM LIQUORS.

THREE FIRST PREMIUMS
WERE AWARDED AT THE LATE MECHANICS' FAIR
IN SAN FRANCISCO,
FOR FINE WHISKIES, BOURBON BITTERS, NATIVE CLARET, ETC.,
TO
I. D. THOMPSON,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 321 Montgomery street, Odd Fellows' Building.

Gentlemen who use Fine Wines and Liquors in their Families, should not fail to call and examine for themselves.

☞ Orders solicited from Families, Parties and Clubs, which will be promptly attended to, and goods delivered free. se30-1m

---

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF
STOVES AND METALS,
Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. E. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca
je30 3m

LADIES, ATTENTION!

MRS. READ'S

NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest

EXPANDERS,

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BRACES, with Suspenders attached; ABDOMINAL SUPPORTERS, BANDAGES, BUSTS, etc

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET,
UP STAIRS, ROOMS 3 AND 4.

Physicians are respectfully invited to call and examine her articles.

All orders promptly attended to. my27 tf

THE ONLY LIVING

ASTROLOGER.

Go and see the Natural Gifted Astrologer, Prof. Cohen, 530 California street. He only can give you true information as to the Past, Present and Future; on Business Affairs, Law Suits, Matrimony, Love, Absent Friends, Sickness, etc. He tells the events of your whole life, and how to avoid trouble.

A large number of people have been benefited by his knowledge. As an evidence of his reputation, he has received upwards of 18,000 consultations here since his residence of five years in San Francisco.

N. B.—When consultation is had it will not be necessary to give the age. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart.

☞ Sickness will be discovered and cured through his science, only known by himself. se16 3m.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - -	$10,000,000.
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

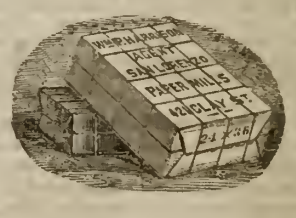
Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

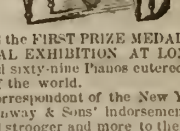
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m



GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS



Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

CARPETS, PAPER-HANGINGS, OIL-CLOTHS, ETC.,

KENNEDY & BELL,

COR. MONTGOMERY AND CALIFORNIA STREETS,

HAVE JUST RECEIVED, AND ARE NOW OPENING,

NEW STYLES WILTON, VELVET, BRUSSELS, THREE-PLY, AND INGRAIN CARPETS;

Also, Oil Cloths Manufactured expressly for this Market, of very superior quality and styles.

Curtain Goods of every variety, and at the LOWEST PRICES.

KENNEDY & BELL,
Corner Montgomery and California streets,
an12 San Francisco.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to
jy1 REV. P. I GREY, President

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

ap22-tf

FIRE, MARINE, LIFE,

AND

ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE.

WE would respectfully call the attention of property owners to the increased facilities for insurance which we are now prepared to offer, surpassing any agency in the world.

MARINE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Capital, - - - $7,000,000

Home Insurance Co., of N. Y., assets			- -	$4,000,000
Security	do	do	do - -	2,000,000
Phenix	do	do	do - -	1,000,000

War Risks and partial loss covered on the most favorable terms. Liberal rebates paid parties bringing business to this office. All losses paid in gold coin without any deduction.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Assets, - - - $10,000,000

Home Insurance Co., N. Y.		Washington Ins. Co., N. Y.
Phenix	do	do	Security	do do
Arctic	do	do	Hartford Fire	do do

LIFE INSURANCE.

Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. of Hartford:
Assets nearly - - - - - - - $8,000,000
Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States: Assets - - - - - - - $1,000,000

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

New York Accident Insurance Company:
Capital - - - - - - $250,000

In the Fire Department we issue participation policies on all hazardous and not hazardous property, entitling the assured to 60 per cent. in the profits of the company, thereby lessening their premiums at least 30 per cent.

In the Life Department, the companies we represent are the best and cheapest in the world. Manuals descriptive of the various plans issued gratis to the public. No charge for physicians' examinations.

Agents in all the principal towns on this coast.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
an29 GENERAL AGENTS.

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14 3m

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. au5-3m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. dc3-3m

---

NOTICE.

MISSION BAY BRIDGE COMPANY.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, } State of California. }

NOTICE is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Trustees of said Company, held on the 2d day of November, 1865, an assessment of two dollars and fifty cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of said company, payable immediately to the Secretary, in United States gold coin, at the office of the Company, No. 24 Montgomery Block, in the city and county of San Francisco, State aforesaid.

Any stock upon which said assessment shall remain unpaid on the 2d of December, 1865, will be advertised on that day as delinquent, and unless payment shall be made before, will be sold on the 16th day of December, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. ALFRED BARSTOW, Secretary,

Office No. 24 Montgomery Block, Southeast corner of Montgomery and Washington streets, no4 San Francisco.

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

J. PEIRCE,

415, 417, and 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the
FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM
FOR

Furniture,

AND THE
FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM
FOR THE
BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
se16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

GROVER & BAKER

CELEBRATED ELASTIC STITCH SEWING MACHINES.

GROVER & BAKER

Ahead as Usual!

THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

HAVE

Awarded a Silver Medal

For work done on the

GROVER & BAKER

SEWING MACHINE.

J. W. J. PIERSON,

AGENT,

329 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

se16

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 44 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

NEW TYPE.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP

SACRAMENTO.

CLOTHING BAZAAR,

431 Montgomery Street,

THREE DOORS SOUTH OF SACRAMENTO

(Opposite Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank.)

We are receiving by every steamer

THE LATEST STYLES

OF

FASHIONABLE CLOTHING

AN ELEGANT STOCK OF

Gents' Furnishing Goods

CONSTANTLY ON HAND

ALEXANDRE'S KID GLOVES.

Complete assortment of

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.

☞ Call and examine them.
an12 3m GEO. J. S. HYAMS.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

---

25 PER CENT. SAVED

IS 50 PER CENT. MADE!

PURCHASERS OF Toys and Fancy Goods, can save 25 per cent. by buying of

Feldbush & Co.,

307 CALIFORNIA STREET.

THEY ARE NOW RECEIVING their importations of

FALL GOODS,

per steamer and sailing vessels from all parts of the world.

For sale by the case or dozen. Also 100 cases of assorted Toys. FIELDUSH & CO., 307 California street.

RETAIL STORE, 207 Montgomery street, (Russ House Block.) oc28 3m

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,
Montgomery street.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
FOR FAMILIES!
ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY, DEC. 2D, VESTVALI MATINEE:
GAMEA!

SATURDAY EVENING, DEC. 2D,
M'LLE VESTVALI,
AND
M'lle Elisa Vestvali Lund,
Will appear in the German Play of JANE EYRE!

After which, the successful comedy entitled:
LOVE, THE CONQUEROR!
The Marquise.....M'lle Felicita Vestvali

To conclude with the Third Act of the Play of DEBORAH, being the original of the great English play of LEAH, the FORSAKEN.
Dehorah, - - - - M'lle Elisa Vestvali Lund

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $5 and $10.

No extra price for Reserved Seats. Doors open at 7 o'clock; Performance to commence at 8 o'clock.
Seats can be secured three days in advance.

BLOOD PURIFIER.

LE DOY-EN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

The best Blood Purifier yet known. It expels all Mercurial and Constitutional Diseases, and gives Health and Strength.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
no19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

TOYS, REGARDLESS OF COST!

KOHLER SELLING OFF!

THE ENDLESS VARIETY OF
Toys and Fancy Articles,
IN KOHLER'S
Washington Street Store,
(NO. 620,)
MUST BE SOLD AT ANY PRICE,
BETWEEN THIS AND CHRISTMAS, AND
THE BUSINESS CLOSED UP!

TO RENT—The Store now occupied by
A. KOHLER.
de2-4t

A GRAND CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL.

A FESTIVAL IS TO BE GIVEN BY THE LADIES
OF THE
SECOND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH,
AT DASHAWAY HALL,
Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday Evenings,
DEC. 18TH, 19TH, AND 20TH.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, DEC. 2D,
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE.

This Afternoon and Evening, December 2d,
Mr. D. E. Bandmann,
SUPPORTED BY
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN
AND THE LEGITIMATE COMPANY,
Will appear, as
ANTOINE,
In Edward H. House's translation of the Grand Military Drama entitled
The Old Corporal.

IN ACTIVE PREPARATION—Dion Boucicault's great Drama, entitled JANET PRIDE, WITH
Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jackson
AND
MR. GEORGE E. BONIFACE
IN THE LEADING PARTS.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on
Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.
Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE
Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S
California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiselessness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 1m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, je10-ly Corner of Pine and Sansome street.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.
Pine street, near Montgomery.

Proprietor.....T. MAGUIRE
Manager.....DAN SETCHELL
Treasurer.....J. R. MARSHALL
Leader of Orchestra.....J. L. SCHMIDT

Engagement of the Beautiful Comedienne and Vocalist, EMILY THORNE,
SUPPORTED BY
DAN SETCHELL,
And a Talented Company.

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 2D,
SETCHELL'S SPECIALITY.
THE DUTCH GOVERNOR,
And the localized version of POCAHONTAS!
Powhatan.....Dan Setchell
Pocahontas.....Miss Emily Thorne

MONDAY NIGHT,
THREE FAVORITE PIECES!

TUESDAY NIGHT;
BENEFIT OF MISS EMILY THORNE,
AND LAST NIGHT OF THE SEASON.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....$1 00
Family Circle.....50 cents
Gallery.....25 cents
No extra charge for reserved seats.

ANNIVERSARY BALL
OF THE
Mechanics' Institute,
TO BE HELD AT
UNION HALL,
ON THE EVENING OF DECEMBER 14, 1865.

Committee of Arrangements:

C. H. Harrison.....517 Front street.
D. A. Macdonald.....corner Market and Beale.
H. F. Williams.....626 Clay street.
Gardner Elliot.....2 Washington Market.
J. W. Reay.....319 California street.

Of whom Tickets may be had, and also from P. B. DEXTER, the Secretary of the Institute.

WILSON'S CELEBRATED BAND has been engaged for the occasion.

PRICE OF ADMISSION for a Gentleman and Ladies - - $2

☞ The Street Cars will run to and from the Hall during the night. no18-td

---

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

JUST RECEIVED,
Per last Steamer, a magnificent collection of
Fancy Glove and Odor Boxes,
Fine Fans, Opera Glasses,
Novelties in Back Combs,
Ornamental Cigar Stands,
Writing Desks, Albums,
DRESSING CASES, PARIS JEWELRY,
REAL LACE COLLARS, SLEEVES AND HANDKERCHIEFS,
REAL CHANTILLY AND POINT BARBES, VEILS, VALENCIENNE COLLARS, HANDKERCHIEFS, Etc.
Fashionable Cloaks and Shawls
Received by every Steamer from New York. Also,
CLOAKS AND LADIES' UNDERGARMENTS
MADE TO ORDER,
AT S. ROSENBLATT'S
PALACE OF FASHION,
123 AND 125 MONTGOMERY STREET,
de2 Opposite Occidental Hotel.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,
CONGRESS HALL,
ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M.; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11-3m

---

DRY GOODS!

NEW GOODS FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

Have received by late Steamer from Europe,
AN IMMENSE STOCK OF
ELEGANT DRESS GOODS
SUITABLE FOR
Holiday Presents!

All of which they will exhibit
AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,
And will offer them all
AT PRICES THAT WILL
DEFY COMPETITION!!

DRESS GOODS.

SILKS, in rich Moire Antique, Brocade, Plaid, Plain and Chine, in all the most Fashionable colors, Black Silk of manufacture of "Bonnet," "Bischuff and Tonson," from $1 00 to $3 00 per yard.

PIM'S super. Irish Poplins and Tabinets in all colors.

MERINOS, in all the most beautiful colors, at 75c, $1 00, $1 25, $1 50, $1 75 per yard.

EMPRESS CLOTHS and OTTOMAN CLOTHS, in Plain, Striped and Chine, manufactured expressly to order.

MOURNING GOODS.

In Bombazines, Cashmeres, Merinos, Tamise, Poplins, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Silks, Alpacas, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

SHAWLS.

Super. Broche Long and Square Shawls, from $10 to $150, in all colors and new designs.

FINE FRENCH CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS, in Long and Square, from $50 to $400, all in new and elegant designs. Plaid Wool do., in long and square.

CLOAKS.

500 Beautiful stylish Garments direct from Paris, comprising the richest ever brought to this city.

HOSIERY.

For Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, of every description.

LACES AND EMBROIDERIES.

CHANTILLY VEILS, all prices and new designs.

CAMBRAY VEILS, from $2 50 to $5 00.

CHANTILLY LACES, all widths.

ELEGANT CHANTILLY FLOUNCES.

DENTELES de Valencienne et Appliqne.

APPLIQUE and Point de Venise Collars at $2 00, $2 50, $3 00, $5 00, &c., &c.

POINT D'ALENCON and Point Duchesse Sleeves and Collars.

DENTELLES de Guipre, all widths and patterns.

A Beautiful Assortment of Linen Sets,
PLAIN AND EMBROIDERED.

Embroidery Bands, Edgings, Insertions, Jaconet, and Dimity Bands.

KID GLOVES.

2000 doz. Alexander's best, at $1 25 per pair.

ALSO,
AT REDUCED PRICES,

COTTON SHEETING and SHIRTING, of all the best brands.

4,000 DRESSES DE LAINE, best quality, at $3 00 per dress.

10,000 EMPRESS CLOTH DRESSES, from $3 00 to $10 00 per dress.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
de2-1m NO. 9. LICK HOUSE.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 2. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 9, 1865. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, December 8th, 1865.

YESTERDAY was Thanksgiving Day, and the smell of Turkies is yet in the air.

Which reminds me that I am no chicken.

Nor am I so easily stuffed now-a-days as I once was, which is some compensation for having got beyond pin-feathers and pinafores.

There is a great deal of humbug about boyhood's happy days, and all that and those. My recollections of them consist in being snubbed by my elder brothers, made to learn long and stupid lessons, show off when company came, and get to church regularly three times of Sundays.

The happiness of believing that the moon was made of green cheese, that Santa Cláus was a real Dutchman, and that little babies were found under rose-leaves in the garden, is scarcely sufficient to set off against so much positive suffering.

Now-a-days, when anything puzzles me, I can put my brain at work, and make all needful inquiries to enable me to understand it, and I should like to have anybody tell me, "Little boys shouldn't ask questions."

That was the way they used to choke me off in those pin-feather days that people talk so much nonsense about.

Why shouldn't little boys ask questions? There are so many things in life to learn, that it seems to me that one cannot begin too early or continue too long his attempts to "find out."

"Little boys should be seen, and not heard." is another of the wise sayings with which old muffs endeavor to smother all endeavors on a little fellow's part to make himself as useful as ornamental.

The idea conveyed in the aphorism is not always based in truth, for, if a little boy has a dirty face, he had much better be heard than seen.

Herod was of opinion that they should neither be seen nor heard, and carried out his theory in a fashion that was both effectual and impressive. But one little boy escaped the attentions of the Tetrarch, and was soon afterwards heard and seen in the Temple, "sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them and asking them questions."

I have no doubt that the learned old doctors cocked their wigs on one side when they found themselves up a stump, and pertinently remarked that little boys should not ask questions.

Age is an excellent thing in its way, perhaps, and ought to be reverenced, so far as getting a seat in an omnibus or a good place at table is concerned.

And I do not think that an old man's crutches should be tripped from under him, or that he should be driven over at the corner of the street simply because he happens to stand in the way.

But I do think that a great many old men are great nuisances, and I do not think that wisdom is by any means the inevitable accompaniment of age.

If a man setting out on a journey starts wrong and keeps on in a direct line, the chances are that at the end of a week's travel he is further out the way than he who has just started but is heading right.

There is a great deal in one's not being too old to learn, and this is the young man's advantage.

The world grows, and unless a man keeps pace with it he finds himself sadly behind-hand for all the gray hairs that may lie on his pow—pow is a word which the late Mr. Linen was fond of using, so I suppose it has a deal of significance.

No one would think of teaching an old dog dancing, and an old man perhaps would n't take very kindly to telegraph operating or shorthand writing. It is very hard indeed to persuade the old to adopt discoveries or accept improvements. And if the world were obliged to rely wholly upon the old I have an idea that neither its progress nor its population would receive many accessions.

For one, I advocate the new—the young. Of course I yield respect to experience, and to study I am always willing to bow, but there are limits to human knowledge, and regarding all beyond this life I consider myself quite as wise as the grayest or baldest philosopher—for I can guess and conjecture, and he can do no more.

But we were talking of Thanksgiving and Turkies, when this remarkable digression occurred.

I wonder what Turkies think, about this season of the year, of the remarkable epidemic that breaks out among them.

They are carried off in the most sudden way, without the slightest warning. Nothing unusual is noticed in the air, they eat and drink as usual, the mother turkey notices no symptom of dissolution in her brood: but evening comes, and they are gone: the roost that knew them once shall know them no more forever.

I wonder whether their medical faculty..of course, turkies have a medical faculty..they'd be geese if they didn't..hold meetings and consultations over the mortality. Do they adopt sanitary measures, sweep out the coops, and prescribe strict attention to diet?

In their diagnoses is much stress laid upon that terrible breaking-out at the throat, the effusion of blood, that carries off victims so rapidly?

I'll warrant technical terms are not spared at these discussions, for, depend upon it, their doctors know how to talk turkey.

Their consultations and preventive measures, probably, have about as much effect in lessening mortality among turkies, when the season comes around, as have those of our doctors in staying the devastations of cholera.

I am just from under a doctor's hands, by the way..and I still live.

In answer to a prescription, a pill-box came to my rooms, labelled:

"91214..to be taken at bed time."

There were only four in the box, but I swallowed them by way of an instalment, and sent the boy back for the 91210 that were yet due.

He returned with a message stating that 91214 was the number of the prescription, and I was rather glad to hear that no more were coming, for I already began to feel as though I had swallowed a wild cat.

On the whole, I do not think the Pacific slope is as healthy as it was, so do not be surprised if you blunder over my name among the list of passengers some steamer day.

I never hear of the Pacific slope and its beauties without thinking of the magnificent slope that Gottschalk made a month or two since.

Poor Gottschalk! I have never believed he was half so bad a fellow as people tried to make out. How could a man with so much music in his soul be fit for treason, strategy, and spoils?

Young and inexperienced, he fell an easy victim to the snares that were spread for his feet. I have known many young men to fall in a similar manner..indeed they are very apt to..it is a way they have.

I have never fallen so myself, but the fault is not mine. No young lady ever thought it worth her while to go for me.

Hence these tears.

Viewing the matter calmly and from a philosophical standpoint, I think that Gottschalk's great mistake lay in coming out here without a protector.

As a general thing, young men should not be allowed to travel without a protector..especially in a strange country.

The best protector, perhaps, that one can have, is a wife..a wife of one's own, I mean..other people's wives are not to be trusted.

It does n't make much matter, either, whether or not that wife is good looking, so long as you think she is. Indeed I do not know but that it is better if the balance of the world entertain an opinion on that point contrary to yourself..it may contribute materially to your peace of mind.

In my opinion every young man ought to get married. There is nothing in the world better than a wife..unless it is two wives.

Brigham Young, with his multiplicity, is the happiest man in America..so happy, indeed, that he can't rest with thinking about it.

But every man has his forte, and I don't think that mine is marrying.

The chances are that as the head of a family I should present a rather ungraceful appearance; and I am sure I should cut an awkward figure at the head of a table, as I don't know how to carve.

But as there is a strong probability that there would not be much upon the table to carve, perhaps that does not much matter...

But it is strange how these digressions occur. I set out to say that a despatch from Gottschalk last week informed us that he was at the Isthmus, intending soon to sail for Lima, going thence to Valparaiso.

On the Isthmus he has probably enjoyed himself muchly, as it gets its name from the young ladies there having neither Pa na' ma.

In Lima he will have a fine opportunity to im-Peruve.

And in Valparaiso he will find the young ladies all so Chile that no harm can possibly be done.

Musical people always seem to fare badly. Is there no sweet little cherub that sits up aloft to watch over their destinies?

A concerted piece was executed, I am told, upon the person of a concert giver, in front of the Opera House the other morning. He was beat over the head with variations too numerous to mention, and to day the Police Court is in session to settle the score.

I am sorry for these rows..they do not result to the credit of the man who beats the other, nor do they tend exactly to the satisfaction of the one who is beaten.

But there is such a thing as mitigating circumstances, and the provocation should be looked to a little before we pronounce judgment...

I never meddle with private quarrels, but this has assumed the proportions of a public one, and is therefore a fair theme for comment. At the concert given in aid of the British Benevolent Society, on Monday evening last, I saw cards circulated among the audience reflecting upon the conduct of Manager Maguire, in refusing to allow Miss Thorne to sing after having given his promise that he would.

As Miss Thorne was singing on the stage at the time the card attracted my attention, I could not very well understand it.

But setting the premises..about which I know nothing..wholly one side, what right had W. J. McDougall..for that was the signature which the card bore..to print and circulate such a thing among his audience?

In my humble opinion, he had no more right than Mr. Maguire had to rush into a music store, seize him by the hair, and call him opprobious epithets.

The practice of rushing into print is quite too prevalent here, and should be suppressed quite as much as street fighting.

Newspaper editors have a right to abuse each other in their respective journals, but when persons who do not belong to the profession avail themselves of print to say that of a man which they would not dare say to his face, I think they deserve to have their heads punched.

If a man thinks himself aggrieved by another, let him walk up to him, tell him so squarely, uncork every vial of his wrath upon the spot, and..though he should get badly whipped in consequence..he will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that he has acted man-fashion. Printing placards, however, or securing the services of some newspaper which does not think that journalism occupies a higher plane than personal controversies to blackguard your opponent, is a very mean way of getting even.

To go back to Thanksgiving again..to which I intended in the outset to devote this whole article..asking several persons how they kept Thanksgiving, the reply has been that they did not keep it at all..that they had nothing to be thankful for.

Fernando Wood, when Mayor of New York, made a similar remark one year, in issuing a Thanksgiving proclamation in accordance with the Governor's, and right royally Dr. Chapin took him to task for it in his sermon upon that day.

Nothing to be thankful for, said he, when the seasons have marched on in golden procession, bringing seed time and harvest, and the leaves of autumn drop like a benediction upon a work completed and a promise fulfilled!

Ah, those were the days when I was a steady and consistent church goer, but I look in vain for such a Chap in the pulpits hereaway.

There is never a day that we do not have something to be thankful for, and surely it is not difficult to find occasion once a year.

I am thankful to-day that I have survived all the turkey I ate yesterday, and have got over the gout, and am not the editor of Outcroppings.

I should have been more thankful had I been at home..where I ought to have been..yesterday, for there Thanksgiving is more of an institution than it is here.

In addition to opening churches and shutting up stores, little boys are not allowed to play ball in the streets.

But to get where Thanksgiving is thoroughly appreciated, one must go to New England.

There they have Indian pudding and pumpkin pies, to say nothing of doughnuts

One touch of Nature in Massachusetts makes all mankind pump-kin. They put off Thanksgiving there once because an expected cargo of molasses did not arrive, and they had nothing to sweeten pies with.

Massachusetts is a nice place..which, I believe, is the only point of resemblance between it and San Andreas.

But thankful as I am, I should have been more thankful had it been permitted me to attend the examination at Miss Lammond's school on Wednesday.

I am not afraid of female seminaries at all, and I always liked girls better than boys.

It was remarked as a peculiarity of mine at school, and I've not got over it yet.

A friend of mine tells me that the examination went off splendidly, and that it was one of the most interesting occasions of the kind that ever he attended.

Next year if I'm here I shall try to be there.

Just at present the problem that occupies me is dinner. I wonder whether turkey-hash will be the only dish at our boarding house. The chances are it will be, for a sad extravagance was manifested yesterday.

Next week expect to see me, like a Phœnix, rise from my hashes.

INIGO.

NO SECT IN HEAVEN.

TALKING of sects till late one eve,
Of the various doctrines the saints believe,
That night I stood in a troubled dream,
By the side of a darkly flowing stream.

And a "Churchman" down to the river came:
When I heard a strange voice call his name,
"Good father, stop; when you cross this tide,
You must leave your robes on the other side."

But the aged father did not mind,
And his long gown floated out behind,
As down to the stream his way he took,
His pale hands clasping a gilt-edged book.

"I'm bound for heaven, and when I'm there,
I shall want my book of Common Prayer;
And though I put on a starry crown,
I should feel quite lost without my gown."

Then he fixed his eye on the shining track,
But his gown was heavy, and held him back,
And the poor old father tried in vain,
A single step in the flood to gain.

I saw him again on the other side,
But his silk gown floated on the tide;
And no one asked in that blissful spot,
If he belonged to "the Church" or not.

Then down to the river a Quaker strayed,
His dress of a sober hue was made;
"My coat and hat must be all of gray,
I cannot go any other way."

Then he buttoned his coat straight up to his chin,
And staidly, solemnly, waded in,
And his broad-brimmed hat he pulled down tight
Over his forehead, so cold and white.

But a strong wind carried away his hat;
A moment he silently sighed at that,
And then, as he gazed to the further shore,
The coat slipped off, and was seen no more.

As he entered heaven, his suit of gray
Went quietly sailing away—away,
And none of the angels questioned him
About the width of his beaver's brim.

Next came Dr. Watts with a bundle of Psalms
Tied nicely up in his aged arms,
And hymns as many—a very wise thing—
That the people in heaven, "all round" might sing.

But I thought that he heaved an anxious sigh,
As he saw that the river ran broad and high,
And looked rather surprised as, one by one,
The Psalms and Hymns in the wave went down.

And after him, with his MSS.,
Came Wesley, the pattern of godliness;
But he cried, "Dear me, what shall I do?
The water has soaked them through and through."

And there on the river, far and wide,
Away they went down the swollen tide,
And the saint astonished, passed through alone,
Without his manuscripts, up to the throne.

Then gravely walking, two saints by name,
Down to the stream together came,
But as they stopped at the river's brink,
I saw one saint from the other shrink.

"Sprinkled or plunged, may I ask you, friend,
How you attained to life's great end?"
"Thus, with a few drops on my brow"
"But I have been dipped, as you'll see me now.

"And I really think it will hardly do,
As I'm "close communion," to cross with you;
You're bound, I know, to the realms of bliss,
But you must go that way, and I'll go this."

Then straightway plunging with all his might,
Away to the left—his friend at the right—
Apart they went from this world of sin,
But at last together they entered in.

And now, when the river was rolling on,
A Presbyterian church went down;
Of women there seemed an innumerable throng,
But the men I could count as they passed along.

And concerning the road, they could never agree,
The old or the new way, which it could be,
Nor ever a moment paused to think
That both would lead to the river's brink.

And a sound of murmuring long and loud
Came ever up from the moving crowd,
"You're in the old way, and I'm in the new,
That is the false, and this is the true;"
Or, "I'm in the old way, and you're in the new,
That is the false, and this is the true."

But the brethren only seemed to speak,
Modest the sisters walked, and meek,
And if ever one of them chanced to say
What troubles she met with on the way,
How she longed to pass to the other side,
Nor feared to cross over the swelling tide,
A voice arose from the brethren then:
"Let no one speak, but the 'holy men;'
For have ye not heard the words of Paul,
Oh, let the women keep silence all?'"

I watched them long in my curious dream,
Till they stood by the borders of the stream,
Then, just as I thought, the two ways met,
But all the brethren were talking yet,
And would talk on, till the heaving tide
Carried them over, side by side;
Side by side, for the way was one,
The toilsome journey of life was done,
And all who in Christ the Savior died,
Came out alike on the other side.

No forms, or crosses, or books had they,
No gowns of silk, or suits of gray,
No creeds to guide them, or MSS.,
For all had put on Christ's righteousness."

ROYAL SPORT.—There was once upon a time a King of Prussia who was very short sighted, so much so that he could scarcely tell the number of the regiment that passed before him in review; but he was nevertheless a passionate sportsman, and loved to kill hares, and in good company, so that they might talk over their exploits during luncheon. He was always followed by the grand veneur, who told his short-sighted Majesty after each shot what was the result, and in a grave tone as implacable as though he were a supernumerary in a tragedy. The King fired, for instance—"What is that," said his Majesty, "which I have killed?" "A goat, your Majesty." The King fired again—"What was that?" "A horse, your Majesty." A third shot—"What was that?" "A pheasant, your Majesty." A fourth shot—"A cock, your Majesty." A fifth shot—"His Highness the Duke of Schwarzenburgh, your Majesty." A sixth shot—"A man, your Majesty." A seventh shot—"A child, your Majesty." "Horrible! if that had only been another Duke! But a child!" "Your Majesty, it is nothing. Here is the game, wounded behind slightly." The king put down his gun and searched his pockets. In the confusion he produces an Order of Knighthood from among the many trifles, and at last recovering his senses, thrusts it back, seizes ten Frederick d'ors, kisses the child with all the heart of a good king and a good man, thrusts the gold into the child's hand, and goes to lunch with his friends and to relating the capital day's sport he has had.

A GOOD WORD FOR FAT MEN.—Says an English writer: "It is a notable fact in criminal statistics that no fat man was ever convicted of the crime of murder. Stout persons are not revengeful; nor, as a general thing, are they agitated by gusts of passion. Few murderers weigh more than ten stone. Seldom has such a phenomenon as a fat housekeeper been paraded at a criminal bar. It is your lean, wiry fellow who works with the skeleton keys, forces himself through closet windows which, seemingly, would scarce suffice for the entrance of a cat, steals, with noiseless step, along the lobby and up the stairs, glides into the chamber, and, with husky voice and the exhibition of an enormous carving-knife, commands silence on pain of instant death, and delivery of cash and jewels. It is your attenuated thief who insinuates himself under beds, behind counters, dives into tills, or makes prey of articles of commerce arrayed at shop doors. A corpulent burglar is as much out of place, and as little to be feared, as was Falstaff at Gadshill—and what policeman ever yet gave chase to a depredator as bulky as a bullock? Corpulency is the outward sign of a good constitution, but of inward rectitude and virtue."

LUXURIOUS TRAVELLING.—The Nord contains an enticing description of the railway carriages now running on the Moscow and St. Petersburg line. It appears that, for the trifling addition of two roubles to the usual fare, travellers are received in brilliantly-lighted salons, around which luxurious sofas and arm-chairs invite the weary to repose, while perusing the latest periodicals and newest novels, which are scattered on the tables of this salon ambulant. When the hour of retiring arrives, the valet-de-chambre conducts the gentleman passengers to the tabagie previous to their being shown their sleeping apartments, while smart femmes-de-chambres point out to the lady travellers their bed-rooms and boudoirs, fitted up, as the advertisement says, "with every modern luxury, including baths," etc. The tabagie on this favored line of railroad must realize the smoker's idea of Paradise, so perfect are its contrivances for ventilation and the thorough enjoyment of the cigar, pipe, or hookah.

On a recent trip of one of the Illinois river packets—a light-draught one, as there were only two feet water in the channel—the passengers were startled by the cry of "Man overboard!" The steamer was stopped, and preparations made to save him, when he was heard exclaiming: "Come on with your old snail-catcher! I'll walk along ahead of you!"

"How do you like the character of St. Paul?" asked a parson of his landlady one day. "Ah! he was a good clever old soul, I know, for he once said, you know, that we must eat what is set before us, and ask no questions for conscience sake. I always thought I should like him for a boarder."

LITTLE PANSIE.

BY NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

DOCTOR DOLLIVER, a worthy personage of extreme antiquity, was aroused rather prematurely, one summer morning, by the shouts of the child Pansie, in an adjoining chamber, summoning Old Martha (who performed the duties of nurse, housekeeper, and kitchen-maid, in the Doctor's establishment) to take up her little ladyship and dress her. The old gentleman woke with more than his customary alacrity, and, after taking a moment to gather his wits about him, pulled aside the faded moreen curtains of his ancient bed, and thrust his head into a beam of sunshine that caused him to wink and withdraw it again. This transitory glimpse of good Dr. Dolliver showed a flannel nightcap, fringed round with stray locks of silvery white hair, and surmounting a meagre and duskily yellow visage, which was crossed and criss crossed with a record of his long life in wrinkles, faithfully written, no doubt, but with such cramped chirography of Father Time that the purport was illegible. It seemed hardly worth while for the patriarch to get out of bed any more, and bring his forlorn shadow into the summer day that was made for younger folks. The Doctor, however, was by no means of that opinion, being considerably encouraged towards the toil of living twenty-four hours longer by the comparative ease with which he found himself going through the usually painful process of bestirring his rusty joints, (stiffened by the very rest and sleep that should have made them pliable,) and putting them in a condition to bear his weight upon the floor. Nor was he absolutely disheartened by the idea of those tonsorial, ablutionary, and personally decorative labors which are apt to become so intolerably irksome to an old gentleman, after performing them daily and daily for fifty, sixty or seventy years, and finding them still as immitigably recurrent as at first. Dr. Dolliver could nowise account for this happy condition of his spirits and physical energies, until he remembered taking an experimental sip of a certain cordial which was long ago prepared by his grandson and carefully sealed up in a bottle, and had been reposited in a dark closet among a parcel of effete medicines ever since that gifted young man's death.

"It may have wrought effect upon me," thought the Doctor, shaking his head as he lifted it again from the pillow. "It may be so; for poor Cornelius oftentimes instilled a strange efficacy into his perilous drugs. But I will rather believe it to be the operation of God's mercy, which may have temporarily invigorated my feeble age for little Pansie's sake."

A twinge of his familiar rheumatism, as he put his foot out of bed, taught him that he must not reckon too confidently upon even a day's respite from the intrusive family of aches and infirmities which, with their proverbial fidelity to attachments once formed, had long been the closest acquaintances that the poor old gentleman had in the world. Nevertheless, he fancied the twinge a little less poignant than those of yesterday; and, moreover, after stinging him pretty smartly, it passed gradually off with a thrill, which, in its latter stages, grew to be almost agreeable. Pain is but pleasure too strongly emphasized. With cautious movements, and only a groan or two, the good Doctor transferred himself from the bed to the floor, where he stood awhile, gazing from one piece of quaint furniture to another, (such as stiff-backed Mayflower chairs, an oaken chest-of-drawers carved cunningly with shapes of animals and wreaths of foliage, a table with multitudinous legs, a family-record in faded embroidery, a shelf of black bound books, a dirty heap of gallipots and phials in a dim corner,)—at these things and steadying himself by the bedpost, while his inert brain, still partially benumbed with sleep, came slowly into accordance with the realities about him. The object which most helped to bring Dr. Dolliver completely to his waking perceptions was one that common observers might suppose to have been snatched bodily out of his dreams. The same sunbeam that had dazzled the Doctor between the bed-curtains gleamed on the weather-beaten gilding which had once adorned this mysterious symbol, and showed it to be an enormous serpent, twining round a wooden post, and reaching quite from the floor of the chamber to its ceiling.

It was evidently a thing that could boast of considerable antiquity, the dry-rot having eaten out its eyes and gnawed away the tip of its tail; and it must have stood long exposed to the atmosphere, for a kind of gray moss had partially overspread its tarnished gilt surface, and a swallow, or other familiar little bird, in some bygone summer, seemed to have built its nest in the yawning and exaggerated mouth. It looked like a kind of Manichean idol, which might have been elevated on a pedestal for a century or so, enjoying the worship of its votaries in the open air, until the impious sect perished from among men—all save old Dr. Dolliver, who had set up the monster in his bedchamber for the convenience of private devotion. But we are unpardonable in suggesting such a fantasy to the prejudice of our venerable friend, knowing him to have been as pious and upright a Christian, and with as little of the serpent in his character, as ever came of Puritan lineage. Not to make a further mystery about a very simple matter, this bedimmed and rotten reptile was once the medical emblem or apothecary's sign of the famous Dr. Swinner.

ton, who practiced physic in the earlier days of New England when a head of Æsculapius or Hypocrates would have vexed the souls of the righteous as savoring of heathendom. The ancient dispenser of drugs had therefore set up an image of the Brazen Serpent, and followed his business for many years, with great credit under this Scriptural device; and Dr. Dolliver being the apprentice, pupil, and humble friend of the learned Swinnerton's old age, had inherited the symbolic snake, and much other valuable property, by bequest.

While the patriarch was putting on his small-clothes, he took care to stand in the parallelogram of bright sunshine that fell upon the uncarpeted floor. The summer warmth was very genial to his system, and yet made him shiver; his wintry veins rejoiced at it, though the reviving blood tingled through them with a half painful and only half pleasurable titillation. For the first few moments after creeping out of bed, he kept his back to the sunny window and seemed mysteriously shy of glancing thitherward; but as the June fervor pervaded him more and more thoroughly, he turned bravely about and looked forth at a burial-ground on the corner of which he dwelt. There lay many an old acquaintance, who had gone to sleep with the flavor of Dr. Dolliver's tinctures and powders upon his tongue; it was the patient's final bitter taste of this world, and perhaps doomed to be a recollected nauseousness in the next. Yesterday, in the chill of his forlorn age, the Doctor expected soon to stretch out his weary bones among that quiet community, and might scarcely have shrunk from the prospect on his account, except, indeed, that he dreamily mixed up the infirmities of his present condition with the repose of the approaching one, being haunted by a notion that the damp earth, under the grass and dandelions, must needs be pernicious for his cough and his rheumatism. But, this morning, the cheerful sunbeams, or the mere taste of his grandson's cordial that he had taken at bedtime, or the fitful vigor that often sports irrevcrently with aged people, had caused an unfrozen drop of youthfulness, somewhere within him, to expand.

"Hem! ahem!" quoth the Doctor, hoping with one effort to clear his throat of the dregs of a ten years' cough. "Matters are not so far gone with me as I thought; I have known mighty sensible men, when only a little age-stricken or or otherwise out of sorts, to die of mere faintheartedness, a great deal sooner than they need."

He shook his silvery head at his own image in the looking-glass, as if to impress the apothegm on that shadowy representative of himself; and for his part, he determined to pluck up a little spirit and live as long as he possibly could, if it were only for the sake of little Pansie, who stood as close to one extremity of human life as her great-grandfather to the other. This child of three years old occupied all the unfossilized portion of good Dr. Dolliver's heart. Every other interest that he formerly had, and the entire confraternity of persons whom he had once loved, had long ago departed, and the poor Doctor could not follow them because the grasp of Pansie's baby-fingers held him back.

So he crammed a great silver watch into his fob, and drew on a patchwork morning-gown of an ancient fashion. Its original material was said to have been the embroidered front of his own wedding-waistcoat and the silken skirt of his wife's bridal attire, which his eldest granddaughter had taken from the carved chest-of-drawers, after poor Bessie, the beloved of his youth, had been half a century in the grave. Throughout many of the intervening years, as the garment got ragged, the spinsters of the old man's family had quilted their duty and affection into it in the shape of patches upon patches, rose-color, crimson, blue, violet, and green, and then (as their hopes faded, and their life kept growing shadier, and their attire took a sombre hue,) sober gray and great fragments of funereal black, until the Doctor could revive the memory of most things that had befallen him by looking at his ancient patchwork gown, as it hung upon a chair. And now it was ragged again, and the fingers that should have mended it were cold. It had an Eastern fragrance, too, a smell of drugs, strong-scented herbs and spicy gums, gathered from the many potent infusions that had from time to time been spilt over it; so that, snuffing him afar off, you might have taken Dr. Dolliver for a mummy, and could hardly have been undeceived by his shrunken and torpid aspect, as he crept nearer.

Wrapt in his odorous and many-colored robe, he took staff in hand and moved pretty vigorously to the head of the staircase. As it was somewhat steep, and but dimly lighted, he began cautiously to descend, putting his left hand on the bannister, and poking down his long stick to assist him in making sure of the successive steps; and thus he became a living illustration of the accuracy of Scripture, where it describes the aged as being "afraid of that which is high"—a truth that is often found to have a sadder purport than its external one. Half-way to the bottom, however, the Doctor heard the impatient and authoritative tones of little Pansie—Queen Pansie, as she might fairly have been called, in reference to her position in the household—calling amain for grandpapa and breakfast. He was startled into such perilous activity by the summons, that his heels slid on the stairs, the slippers were shuffled off his feet, and he saved himself from a tumble only by quickening his pace, and coming down at almost a run.

"Mercy on my poor old bones!" mentally exclaimed the Doctor, fancying himself fractured in fifty places. "Some of them are broken, surely, and methinks my heart has leaped out of my mouth! What! all right? Well, well! but Providence is kinder to me than I deserve, prancing down this steep staircase like a kid of three months old!"

He bent stiffly to gather up his slippers and fallen staff; and meanwhile Pansie had heard the tumult of her great-grandfather's descent, and was pounding against the door of the breakfast-room in her haste to come at him. The Doctor opened it, and there she stood, a rather pale and large-eyed little thing, quaint in her aspect, as might well be the case with a motherless child, dwelling in an uncheerful house, with no other playmates than a decrepit old man and a kitten, and no better atmosphere within doors than the odor of decayed apothecary's stuff, nor gayer neighborhood than that of the adjacent burial-ground, where all her relatives, from her great-grandmother downward, lay calling to her, "Pansie, Pansie, it is bedtime!" even in the prime of the summer morning. For those dead women-folk, especially her mother and the whole row of maiden aunts and grand-aunts, could not but be anxious about the child, knowing that little Pansie would be far safer under a tuft of dandelions than if left alone, as she soon must be, in this difficult and deceitful world.

Yet, in spite of the lack of damask roses in her cheeks, she seemed a healthy child, and certainly showed great capacity of energetic movement in the impulsive capers with which she welcomed her venerable progenitor. She shouted out her satisfaction, moreover, (as her custom was, having never had any over sensitive auditors about her to tame down her voice,) till even the Doctor's dull ears were full of the clamor.

"Pansie, darling," said Dr. Dolliver cheerily, patting her brown hair with his tremulous fingers, "thou hast put some of thine own friskiness into poor old grandfather, this fine morning! Dost know, child, that he came near breaking his neck down-stairs at the sound of thy voice? What wouldst thou have done then, little Pansie?"

"Kiss poor grandpapa and make him well!" answered the child, remembering the Doctor's own mode of cure in similar mishaps to herself. "It shall do poor grandpapa good!" she added, putting up her mouth to apply the remedy.

"Ah, little one, thou hast greater faith in thy medicines than ever I had in my drugs," replied the patriarch with a giggle, surprised and delighted at his own readiness of response. "But the kiss is good for my feeble old heart, Pansie, though it might do little to mend a broken neck; so give grandpapa another dose, and let us to breakfast."

In this merry humor they sat down to the table, great-grandpapa and Pansie side by side, and the kitten, as soon appeared, making a third in the party. First, she showed her mottled head out of Pansie's lap, delicately sipping milk from the child's basin without rebuke; then she took post on the old gentleman's shoulder, purring like a spinning-wheel, trying her claws in the wadding of his dressing-gown, and still more impressively reminding him of her presence by putting out a paw to intercept a warmed-over morsel of yesterday's chicken on its way to the Doctor's mouth. After skilfully achieving this feat, she scrambled down upon the breakfast table and began to wash her face and hands. Evidently, these companions were all three on intimate terms, as was natural enough, since a great many childish impulses were softly creeping back on the simple-minded old man; insomuch that, if no worldly necessities nor painful infirmity had disturbed him, his remnant of life might have been as cheaply and cheerily enjoyed as the early playtime of the kitten and the child. Old Dr. Dolliver and his great-grand daughter (a ponderous title, which seemed quite to overwhelm the tiny figure of Pansie) had met one another at the two extremities of the life-circle: her sunrise served him for a sunset, illuminating his locks of silver and hers of golden brown with a homogeneous shimmer of twinkling light.

Little Pansie was the one earthly creature that inherited a drop of the Dolliver blood. The Doctor's only child, poor Bessie's offspring, had died the better part of a hundred years before, and his grandchildren, a numerous and dimly remembered brood, had vanished along his weary track in their youth, maturity, or incipient age, till, hardly knowing how it had all happened, he found himself tottering onward with an infant's small fingers in his nerveless grasp. So mistily did his dead progeny come and go in the patriarch's decayed recollection, that this solitary child represented for him the successive babyhoods of the many that had gone before. The emotions of his early paternity came back to him. She seemed the baby of a past age oftener than she seemed Pansie. A whole family of grand-aunts, (one of whom had perished in her cradle, never so mature as Pansie now, another in her virgin bloom, another in autumnal maidenhood, yellow and shrivelled, with vinegar in her blood, and still another, a forlorn widow, whose grief outlasted even its vitality, and grew to be merely a torpid habit, and was saddest then,)—all their hitherto forgotten features peeped through the face of the great-grandchild, and their long inaudible voices sobbed, shouted, or laughed, in her familiar tones. But it often happened to Dr. Dolliver, while frolicking amid this throng of ghosts, where the one reality looked no more vivid than its shadowy sisters—it often happened that his eyes filled with tears at a sudden perception of what a sad and poverty-stricken-old man he was, already remote from his own generation, and bound to stray farther onward as the sole playmate and protector of a child!

As Dr. Dolliver, in spite of his advanced epoch of life, is likely to remain a considerable time longer upon our hands, we deem it expedient to give a brief sketch of his position, in order that the story may get onward with the greater freedom when he rises from the breakfast-table. Deeming it a matter of courtesy, we have allowed him the honorary title of Doctor, as did all his townspeople and contemporaries, except, perhaps, one or two formal old physicians, stingy of civil phrases and over jealous of their own professional dignity. Nevertheless, these crusty graduates were technically right in excluding Dr. Dolliver from their fraternity. He had never received the degree of any medical school, nor (save it might be for the cure of a toothache, or a child's rash, or a whitlow on a seamstress's finger, or some such trifling malady) had he ever been even a practitioner of the awful science with which his popular designation connected him. Our old friend, in short, even at his highest social elevation, claimed to be nothing more than an apothecary, and, in these later and far less prosperous days, scarcely so much. Since the death of his last surviving grandson, (Pansie's father, whom he had instructed in all the mysteries of his science, and who, being distinguished by an experimental and inventive tendency, was generally believed to have poisoned himself with an infallible panacea of his own distillation,)—since that final bereavement, Dr. Dolliver's once pretty flourishing business had lamentably declined. After a few months of unavailing struggle, he found it expedient to take down the Brazen Serpent from the position to which Dr. Swinnerton had originally elevated it, in front of his shop in the main street, and to retire to his private dwelling, situated in a by-lane and on the edge of a burial-ground.

This house, as well as the Brazen Serpent, some old medical books, and a drawer full of manuscripts, had come to him by the legacy of Dr. Swinnerton. The dreariness of the locality had been of small importance to our friend in his young manhood, when he first led his fair wife over the threshold, and so long as neither of them had any kinship with the human dust that rose into little hillocks, and still kept accumulating beneath their window. But, too soon afterwards, when poor Bessie herself had gone early to rest there, it is probable that an influence from her grave may have prematurely calmed and depressed her widowed husband, taking away much of the energy from what should have been the most active portion of his life. Thus he never grew rich. His thrifty townsmen used to tell him, that, in any other man's hands, Dr. Swinnerton's Brazen Serpent (meaning, I presume, the inherited credit and good will of that old worthy's trade) would need but ten years' time to transmute its brass into gold. In Dr. Dolliver's keeping, as we have seen, the inauspicious symbol lost the greater part of what superficial gilding it originally had. Matters had not mended with him in more advanced life, after he had deposited a further and further portion of his heart and its affections in each successive one of a long row of kindred graves: and as he stood over the last of them, holding Pansie by the hand and looking down upon the coffin of his grandson, it is no wonder that the old man wept, partly for those gone before, but not so bitterly as for the little one that stayed behind. Why had not God taken her with the rest? And then, so hopeless as he was, so destitute of possibilities of good, his weary frame, his decrepit bones, his dried-up heart, might have crumbled into dust at once, and have been scattered by the next wind over all the heaps of earth that were akin to him.

This intensity of desolation, however, was of too positive a character to be long sustained by a person of Dr. Dolliver's original gentleness and simplicity, and now so completely tamed by age and misfortune. Even before he turned away from the grave, he grew conscious of a slightly cheering and invigorating effect from the tight grasp of the child's warm little hand. Feeble as he was, she seemed to adopt him willingly for her protector. And the Doctor never afterwards shrank from his duty nor quailed beneath it, but bore himself like a man, striving, amid the sloth of age and the breaking-up of intellect, to earn the competency which he had failed to accumulate even in his most vigorous days.

To the extent of securing a present subsistence for Pansie and himself, he was successful. After his son's death, when the Brazen Serpent fell into popular disrepute, a small share of tenacious patronage followed the old man into his retirement. In his prime, he had been allowed to possess more skill than usually fell to the share of a Colonial apothecary, having been regularly apprenticed to Dr. Swinnerton, who, throughout his long practice, was accustomed personally to concoct the medicines which he prescribed and dispensed. It was believed, indeed, that the ancient physician had learned the art at the world-famous drug-manufactory of Apothecary's

Hall, in London, and, as some people half-malignly whispered, had perfected himself under masters more subtle than were to be found even there. Unquestionably, in many critical cases he was known to have employed remedies of mysterious composition and dangerous potency, which in less skilful hands would have been more likely to kill than cure. He would willingly, it is said, have taught his apprentice the secrets of these prescriptions, but the latter, being of a timid character and delicate conscience, had shrunk from acquaintance with them. It was probably as the result of the same scrupulosity that Dr. Dolliver had always declined to enter the medical profession, in which his old instructor had set him such heroic examples of adventurous dealing with matters of life and death. Nevertheless, the aromatic fragrance, so to speak, of the learned Swinnerton's reputation had clung to our friend through life; and there were elaborate preparations in the pharmacopœia of that day, requiring such minute skill and conscientious fidelity in the concocter that the physicians were still glad to confide them to one in whom these qualities were so evident.

Moreover, the grandmothers of the community were kind to him, and mindful of his perfumes, his rose-water, his cosmetics, tooth-powders, pomanders, and pomades, the scented memory of which lingered about their toilet-tables, or came faintly back from the days when they were beautiful. Among this class of customers there was still a demand for certain comfortable little nostrums, (delicately sweet and pungent to the taste, cheering to the spirits, and fragrant in the breath,) the proper distillation of which was the airiest secret that the mystic Swinnerton had left behind him. And, besides, these old ladies had always liked the manners of Dr. Dolliver, and used to speak of his gentle courtesy behind the counter as having positively been something to admire; though, of later years, an unrefined, an almost rustic simplicity, such as belonged to his humble ancestors, appeared to have taken possession of him, as it often does of prettily mannered men in their late decay.

But it resulted from all these favorable circumstances that the Doctor's marble mortar, though worn with long service and considerably damaged by a crack that pervaded it, continued to keep up an occasional intimacy with the pestle; and he still weighed drachms and scruples in his delicate scales, though it seemed impossible, dealing with such minute quantities, that his tremulous fingers should not put in too little or too much, leaving out life with the deficiency or spilling in death with the surplus. To say the truth, his stanchest friends were beginning to think that Dr. Dolliver's fits of absence (when his mind appeared absolutely to depart from him, while his frail old body worked on mechanically) rendered him not quite trustworthy without a close supervision of his proceedings. It was impossible, however, to convince the aged apothecary of the necessity for such vigilance; and if anything could stir up his gentle temper to wrath, or, as oftener happened, to tears, it was the attempt (which he was marvellously quick to detect) thus to interfere with his long-familiar business.

The public, meanwhile, ceasing to regard Dr. Dolliver in his professional aspect, had begun to take an interest in him as perhaps their oldest fellow-citizen. It was he that remembered the Great Fire and the Great Snow, and that had been a grown-up stripling at the terrible epoch of Witch-Times, and a child just breeched at the breaking-out of King Philip's Indian War. He, too, in his schoolboy days, had received a benediction from the patriarchal Governor Brudstreet, and thus could boast (somewhat as Bishops do of their unbroken succession from the Apostles) of a transmitted blessing from the whole company of sainted Pilgrims, among whom the venerable magistrate had been an honored companion. Viewing their townsman in this aspect, the people revoked the courteous Doctorate with which they had heretofore decorated him, and now knew him most familiarly as Grandsir Dolliver. His white head, his Puritan band, his threadbare garb, (the fashion of which he had ceased to change, half a century ago,) his gold-headed staff, that had been Dr. Swinnerton's, his shrunken, frosty figure, and its feeble movement—all these characteristics had a wholeness and permanence in the public recognition, like the meeting-house steeple or the town-pump. All the younger portion of the inhabitants unconsciously ascribed a sort of aged immortality to Grandsir Dolliver's infirm and reverend presence. They fancied that he had been born old, (at least, I remember entertaining some such notions about age stricken people, when I myself was young,) and that he could the better tolerate his aches and incommodities, his dull ears and dim eyes, his remoteness from human intercourse within the crust of indurated years, the cold temperature that kept him always shivering and sad, the heavy burden that invisibly bent down his shoulders—that all these intolerable things might bring a kind of enjoyment to Grandsir Dolliver, as the life-long conditions of his peculiar existence.

But, alas! it was a terrible mistake. This weight of years had a perennial novelty for the poor sufferer. He never grew accustomed to it, but, long as he had now borne the fretful torpor of his waning life, and patient as he seemed, he still retained an inward consciousness that these stiffened shoulders, these quailing knees, this cloudiness of sight and brain, this confused forgetfulness of men and affairs, were troublesome accidents that did not really belong to him. He possibly cherished a half recognized idea that they might pass away. Youth, however eclipsed for a season, is undoubtedly the proper, permanent, and genuine condition of man; and if we look closely into this dreary delusion of growing old, we shall find that it never absolutely succeeds in laying hold of our innermost convictions. A sombre garment, woven of life's unrealities, has muffled us from our true self, but within it smiles the young man whom we knew; the ashes of many perishable things have fallen upon our youthful fire, but beneath them lurk the seeds of inextinguishable flame. So powerful is this instinctive faith that men of simple modes of character are prone to antedate its consummation. And thus it happened with poor Grandsir Dolliver, who often awoke from an old man's fitful sleep with a sense that his senile predicament was but a dream of the past night; and hobbling hastily across the cold floor to the looking glass, he would be grievously disappointed at beholding the white hair, the wrinkles and furrows, the ashen visage and bent form, the melancholy mask of Age, in which, as he now remembered, some strange and sad enchantment had involved him for years gone by!

To other eyes than his own, however, the shrivelled old gentleman looked as if there were little hope of his throwing off this too artfully wrought disguise, until, at no distant day, his stooping figure should be straightened out, his hoary locks be smoothed over his brows, and his much enduring bones be laid safely away, with a green coverlet spread over them, beside his Bessie, who doubtless would recognize her youthful companion in spite of his ugly garniture of decay. He longed to be gazed at by the loving eyes now closed; he shrank from the hard stare of them that loved him not. Walking the streets seldom and reluctantly, he felt a dreary impulse to elude the people's observation, as if with a sense that he had gone irrevocably out of fashion, and broken his connecting links with the network of human life; or else it was that nightmare-feeling which we sometimes have in dreams, when we seem to find ourselves wandering through a crowded avenue, with the noonday sun upon us, in some wild extravagance of dress or nudity. He was conscious of estrangement from his towns people, but did not always know how nor wherefore, nor why he should be thus groping through the twilight mist in solitude. If they spoke loudly to him, with cheery voices, the greeting translated itself faintly and mournfully to his ears; if they shook him by the hand, it was as if a thick, insensible glove absorbed the kindly pressure and the warmth. When little Pansie was the companion of his walk, her childish gayety and freedom did not avail to bring him into closer relationship with men, but seemed to follow him into that region of indefinable remoteness, that dismal Fairy-Land of aged fancy, into which old Grandsir Dolliver had so strangely crept away.

Yet there were moments, as many persons had noticed, when the great-grandpapa would suddenly take stronger hues of life. It was as if his faded figure had been colored over anew, or at least, as he and Pansie moved along the street, as if a sunbeam had fallen across him, instead of the gray gloom of an instant before. His chilled sensibilities had probably been touched and quickened by the warm contiguity of his little companion through the medium of her hand, as it stirred within his own, or some inflection of her voice that set his memory ringing and chiming with forgotten sounds. While that music lasted, the old man was alive and happy. And there were seasons, it might be, happier than even these, when Pansie had been kissed and put to bed, and Grandsir Dolliver sat by his fireside gazing in among the massive coals, and absorbing their glow into those cavernous abysses with which all men communicate. Hence come angels or fiends into our twilight musings, according as we may have peopled them in by-gone years. Over our friend's face, in the rosy flicker of the fire-gleam, stole an expression of repose and perfect trust that made him as beautiful to look at, in his high-backed chair, as the child Pansie on her pillow; and sometimes the spirits that were watching him beheld a calm surprise draw slowly over his features and brighten into joy, yet not so vividly as to break his evening quietude. The gate of heaven had been kindly left ajar, that this forlorn old creature might catch a glimpse within. All the night afterwards, he would be semi-conscious of an intangible bliss diffused through the fitful lapses of an old man's slumber, and would awake, at early dawn, with a faint thrilling of the heartstrings, as if there had been music just now wandering over them.—Good Company

The peculiar nature of British wines is well hit off in a bon mot which is laid at the door of the late Lord Palmerston. "The port, gentlemen," he is said to have said, "I can warrant: it was made by my father. As for the claret and the champagne, you must judge for yourself; those come from my wine merchant."

The melancholy intelligence of the death of one of the most accomplished of violinists, and one of the best of men reaches us. Ernst expired on the 8th October at Nice, where he had been sojourning for some time, with the hope—vain hope—of benefiting his health.

DRAMATIC.

At Maguire's Opera House, The Old Corporal occupied the stage until Wednesday evening, when it gave place to Janet Pride—the pride of Boucicault. We scarcely think we err in terming this piece sensational. Of the plot it may be said that it covers a great deal of ground; for, opening in Paris, it proceeds by quick march to Australia, and closes in London. So many persons are killed in the second act that one has some apprehensions that none will be left to take part in the third. Poor "Sergt. Wm. Gray, of the 98th, aged 40 years," only steps upon the stage for about three minutes, but in that little time he finds himself dead and buried, and "Black Jack" fares about the same. Boniface and the Jacksons take the principal characters in the piece, and are permitted to live it through to the end. Notwithstanding the attractions of this play, they are going far away, far away from poor Janet, The Secret Cipher—by Charles Reade and Tom Taylor—being announced for last evening. If Tom Taylor and Charles Reade cannot get up between them a play good enough to please a Californian audience, it will be very surprising indeed. This afternoon, Janet Pride, and this evening The Three Musketeers.

At the Academy of Music, on Friday evening of last week, Setchell's benefit was well attended. Poor Pillicoddy went off very well, but A Quiet Family dragged, and we would not have believed that the sparkling farce of Box and Cox could be so badly done had not the most indisputable evidence been afforded by the afterpiece. We cannot forbear suggesting to Mr. Jackson—with the most kindly intentions—that the low comedian is not called upon to be low in the arbitrary significance of the word, and that the bounds between humor and vulgarity are too widely drawn to admit of their being for a moment confounded with each other. Stuffing his mouth with a half loaf of bread, gargling himself with it for a few painful seconds, and then spitting it out all over the stage—a stroke of humor which he repeated in the afterpiece—may have charms to soothe the Australian breast, but it will not answer for the American stage. On Monday evening, London Assurance was presented, with a famous cast—i. e., there were five stars in it, or at least five persons whose names are printed in large letters on the bills. London Assurance is a good comedy, but five stars would kill the best in the world—it is obvious enough that with five in a piece, each one determined to make his or her part the part, everything would drag. Miss Thorne, on this occasion, appeared as "Lady Gay Spanker," Boniface as "Sir Harcourt Courtley," Harry Jackson as "Dolly Spanker," Mrs. Jackson as "Grace Harkaway," Dan Setchell as "Mark Meddle." Miss Thorne is too accomplished an actress to do anything badly, but "Lady Gay" is scarcely in her style. As "Sir Harcourt," Mr. Boniface went decidedly beyond what was anticipated of him, but erred by making the affectation of the character too studied. As 'Dolly Spanker," Mr. Jackson reproduced his part in the Quiet Family. He must realize that humor does not consist wholly in plaid clothes or facial distortions. And unless he tones down his drunken delineations somewhat, he will encounter a very severe reproof if he ever has occasion to play before a more metropolitan audience than San Francisco affords. A drunken man with a gaping, blackened mouth is simply disgusting and not at all funny. Mrs. Jackson has a habit of moulding and measuring each and every word, snipping them off at a certain length with labial shears, which is too confirmed to be remedied by suggestion, we fear, though it is impossible to forbear protesting against the monotonousness of the effect. Setchell was funny, of course, but his "Mark Meddle" was an exact reproduction of "Paul Pry," and not the wiry, bustling attorney intended by the author. Harry Wall threw a good deal of gesticulation into "Dazzle," but the character is slightly beyond his calibre. Taken all in all we cannot conscientiously say that London Assurance was well done, though it was repeated the next evening for Miss Thorne's benefit, and with much better effect. We are pleased to chronicle that the benefit was a success, the house being well filled with a decidedly fashionable audience. On Wednesday the company went up country, and are now playing at Sacramento.

It may scarcely come under the head of things dramatic, but the nuptials of two as good looking young persons as Miss Louise Clarkson and Mr. Harry Wall are worth mentioning, and of interest to the profession. The pair were made one on Tuesday, and on Wednesday made a wedding tour to Sacramento with the balance of the company. That the brief engagement, so suddenly and happily consummated, will terminate successfully is the sincere wish of all friends.

At the Metropolitan, Vestvali's benefit on Friday of last week, was well attended, her cousin Mdlle. Lund making her début before a San Francisco audience. The German drama is by no means new to the lady and she is an actress of merit. During the present week "Arrah-na-Pogue" has been running, and benefits of every imaginable company and concern have been ruling. "Arrah-na-Pogue" is announced "positively for the last time this afternoon." The evening performance will consist of "Everybody's Friend" and "That Blessed Baby."

[For the Californian.]

THE OAK.

(QUERCUS.)

THE Oak was considered by the ancients as the emblem of hospitality, because, when Jupiter and Mercury were travelling in disguise, and arrived at the cottage of Philemon, who was afterwards changed into an oak tree, they were treated with the greatest kindness. Philemon was a poor old man, who lived with his wife Baucus in Phrygia, in a miserable cottage, which Jupiter, to reward his hospitality, changed into a magnificent temple, of which he made the old couple priest and priestess, granting them the only request they made to him, viz: to be permitted to die together. Accordingly, when both were grown so old as to wish for death, Jove turned Baucis into a lime tree and Philemon into an oak, the two trees entwining their branches, and shading for more than a century the magnificent portal of the Phrygian temple. The civic crown of the Romans was formed of oak, and it was granted for eminent civil services rendered to the state, the greatest of which was considered to be the saving of the life of a Roman citizen. Scipio Africanus, however, when his crown was offered to him for saving the life of his father at the battle of Trebia, nobly refused it on the ground that such an action carried with it its own reward. Lucan alludes to this custom in his Pharsalia:

"Straight Lebius from amidst the rest stood forth,
An old centurian of distinguish'd worth;
An oaken wreath his hardy temples bore,
Mark of a citizen preserved he wore."

Shakspeare, when making Cominius describe the merits of Coriolanus, mentions this crown as having been won by that hero:

——"At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head from Rome, he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all pride I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him; he bestrid
An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three oppressors: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He proved best man i' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with oak."

Acorns having been the common food of man till Ceres introduced corn, boughs of oak were carried in the Eleusinian mysteries. Tighe says:

"Then, crown'd with oaken chaplets, march'd the priest
Of Eleusinian Ceres, and with boughs
Of oak were overshadow'd in the feast
The teeming basket and mystic vase."

Virgil, in the first Georgic, says:

"Bacchus and fostering Ceres, powers divine!
Who gave us corn for mast, for water wine."

And Spencer alludes to this fable in the following lines:

"The oak, whose acorns were our food before
That Ceres' seed of mortal man was known,
Which first Triptolemene taught to be sown."

The beautiful fiction of the Hamadryads is frequently referred to by the Greek poets. The Hamadryads were nymphs, each of whom was

"Doom'd to a life coeval with her oak," says Pindar; and Callimachus, in the Hymn to Delos, represents Melie as "sighing deeply for her parent oak," and adds:

"Joy fills her breast when showers refresh the spray:
Sadly she grieves when Autumn's leaves decay."

In Apollonius Rhodius we find one of the Hamadryads imploring a woodman to spare the oak to which her existence was attached:

"Loud through the air resounds the woodman's stroke,
When, lo! a voice breaks from the groaning oak.
'Spare, spare my life! a trembling virgin spare!
Oh, listen to the Hamadryad's prayer!
No longer let that fearful axe resound;
Preserve the tree to which my life is bound!
See, from the bark my blood in torrents flows,
I faint, I sink, I perish from your blows.'"

Among the Celtic nations, the god Teut was worshipped under the form of an oak, or, according to others Tarwawa, the god of thunder, but these legends, together with the superstitions of the Druids, belong rather to the British oak than to the genus generally. The oak from the earliest ages has been considered as one of the most important of forest trees.

It is celebrated, Burnet observes, in story and in song, in the forest and in the field, and unrivalled in commerce and the arts. It was held sacred alike by the Hebrews, the Greeks and Romans, and the ancient Britons and Gauls, and it was the fear of the superstitious for their oracle, at the same time that it was the resort of the hungry for their food. It was from Hu (the Bacchus of the Druids) that the word Yule, or Yule log, was derived, and was always of oak, and, as the ancient Britons believed that it was essential for their hearth fires to be removed every year from the sacred fire of the Druids, so their descendents thought that some misfortune would befall them if any accident happened to the Yule log. (See Irving's Bracebridge Hall.) The worship of the Druids was generally performed under an oak, and a heap of stones was erected, on which the sacred fire was kindled, which was called a cairn, as Professor Burnet says, from kern, an acorn.

According to Davie's Celtic Researches into the Mythology of the Druids, the apple tree was considered as the next sacred tree to the oak, and orchards of it were always planted near a grove of Druids' oak. There are some two hundred varieties of the oak, found growing all through the temperate regions, many attaining a great size and age, and being connected with history by many interesting incidents and associations. A celebrated writer says, "Of all inanimate objects, trees are the most companionable;" every breath of air makes them vocal, and they "discourse most eloquent music," apparently adapting their tones to the mood of the listener. Is he sorrowful?—they seem to share his sadness; is he joyous—to partake his mirth; is he religious—his devotion. For him there is not only "pleasure" but society "in the pathless woods," for he peoples them with "calling shapes,"

"And airy tongues that syllable men's names."

How beautiful is a wooded landscape! Be the season what it may, trees always excite admiration. The tender green of spring, the deeper tints and full grown foliage of summer, the surpassing glory and variety of autumn, and even the snow and hoar frost of winter, each sits so well upon them, that, delighted with the present impression, we think no other vesture would become them so well.

The individuality of character, too, which each tree possesses adds an indescribable charm to sylvan scenery. "What can afford more delightful contrasts in landscape," says a tasteful author, "than the giant strength of the oak with the flexile elegance of the ash, the stately tranquility of the elm with the tremulous lightness of the poplar, the bright and vivid foliage of the beech or sycamore with the funeral majesty of the cedar or the yew, all differing in form and character, as in color."

"No tree in all the grove but has its charms,
And each its charm peculiar."

IRIS.

CULINARY REFORM—OUR RESTAURANTS.

PITYING the despeptic pangs of a nation whose cooks play into the hands of its physicians as if a business understanding existed between the kitchen and the dispensary, a Parisian cuisinier of some note has settled in New York, with the benevolent purpose of improving the condition of our gastric apparatus and tickling our misused palates. This philanthropic Archimagirus, whose surname is Blot, has established in our midst a normal school for cooks, and it is said that the fair students who have gone through the curriculum of the institution do honor to the instructions of their culinary Almus Poter. Let us hope that each graduate will act a missionary part, freely teaching what she has wisely learned, and thus assisting to relieve our country from the reproach of having but one gravy. There are as many varieties of meat as of mind; why should there not be as many sauces as sects, as many condiments as creeds?

The kitchen apostle from France is welcome. On behalf of the American stomach we greet him kindly, and are thankful that his advent has preceded that of the cholera. Possibly, by adopting his dietary, many of us may escape the scourge of which indigestion is said to be a potent ally. But if a ray of light is at last struggling through the ill-flavored fog which, from time immemorial, has pervaded our private kitchens; if, under the tutelage of American matrons who have taken their degrees in Blot's gastronomic college, new ideas of flavors are beginning to dawn upon the "foreign element" in our households, the change has not yet reached our eating-houses and restaurants. On the contrary, they get worse and worse. As their charges increase, their provant degenerates. All the articles they parade on their bills of fare, from pork and beans to meringues and Charlottes, have a peculiar mauvais goul, compounded of their several exhalations, which assures the sensitive palate that they have all simmered together in one omniverous oven, and been simultaneously disgorged from its steaming mouth. The cartes presented to guests at these establishments comprehend a copious variety of dishes, but the promise they make to the eye is woefully broken to the sense of taste. The mephitic whiffs ejected into the side-walk air from the subterranean caverns of our large eating-houses, between the hours of 12 M. and 3 P.M., remind one of the stories of the undiscriminating dragon of Wantley who, after swallowing everything edible that he could lay his claws upon, poisoned the atmosphere of a whole neighborhood with the gaseous results of his surfeit. Verily the odor without is a true advertisement of the flavors within. To pore over the list of dishes with a view to making a selection, is mere waste of time. Let the customer tell the waiter to bring him whatever is handiest, and if, when he opens his mouth, he shuts his eyes, he will never know what he is eating.

The rapidity with which Americans dispatch their meals has always been a marvel to Europeans. And yet it is quite natural. The Englishman or Frenchman repairs to his ordinary to dine, the American rushes to his eating-house or boarding-house to feed. His object is simply to take in fuel to sustain the flame of life, and, like a Mississippi steamboat, he "woods-up" as fast as possible. He bolts his food boluswise because he does not relish the taste of it. Under a better culinary dispensation he would enjoy his meals; as it is, he endures them.

To the man who knows how to dine, the interior of a New York restaurant of the "immediate dispatch" class presents, between the hours of one and two o'clock, a most uncomfortable spectacle. Perched literally "cheek by jowl" on high stools, closely wedged together, one sees twenty or thirty men and youths with their heads bent down and their elbows in rapid motion. Viewed from the rear, one might suppose them to be weaving or fiddling. Behind them stands another row waiting for vacancies. Every now and then one of the perchers in the front rank slips off his roosting-place, whereupon the member of the reserve corps immediately behind him hops into it and gives his order. About two minutes thereafter the new candidate for a flying dinner has his plate of meat slung at him along the greasy marble counter with that singular grace and dexterity characteristic of New York waiters of the impulsive or slang-bang school. The heavy solids disposed of, the flatulent desert is instantly "thrown in," and in eight minutes from the time he mounted his praudial perch the guest has dined. If one did not feel that the fast feeders at the restaurants were committing slow suicide, their habits would be rather an amusing study. They climb up and dart down from their coigns of vantage so much after the manner of birds (shall we say cormorants?) that one is involuntarily reminded of Plato's definition of man as a featherless specimen of ornithology. The ladies who perch daily in pigeon-like rows before the counters of the dry goods establishments are, however, much prettier samples of our bird-like race. Oh! in the name of all the household gods, why don't they spend a portion of the time they consume so profitlessly abroad in providing something delectable at home for their mates to peck at?

But let us not be unjust. Our culinary prospects are brightening. Monsieur Blot is fashionable. His séances are well attended, and there is hope that in the course of time the spit and gridiron may prove formidable rivals to the harp and the piano in the affections of our wives and daughters. The reform inaugurated in the up-town restaurants, and those nuisances, bad-cooking, headlong mastication, and dyspepsia, may be sensibly abated in all the walks of life. Unquestionably, as the home standard of cookery improves, the public purveyors will find it necessary to cater to the more critical appetites which such improvements will engender. Therefore, ladies, as you love us, nay, as you love domestic harmony—for recollect, that of ill-cooked dinners come indigestion and biliousness, and of these ill-temper and discord—keep the ball of culinary reform, so happily started by Mr. Blot, briskly in motion. Positively, you never look more fascinating than when propitiating the Lares (to whom, by the way, bad cooks were sacrificed in early times) by officiating with your own fair hands at the culinary altar. Do you remember the description in Martin Chuzzlewit of sweet little Ruth Pinch's first essay in cookery: "Such a busy little woman as she was. So full of self-importance. It was a perfect treat to see her, with her brows knit and her rosy lips pursed up, kneading away at the crust, rolling it out, cutting it into strips, lining the basin with it, shaving it off round the edges, chopping the meat into small pieces, raining down pepper and salt upon them, packing them into the basin; until, at last, the basin being quite full and only wanting the top crust, she clapped her hands, all covered with paste and flour, and burst out heartily into such a charming laugh of triumph that the pudding need have no other seasoning to commend it to the taste of any reasonable man on earth?"

So Tom Pinch's sister achieved her first beefsteak pudding, and, pursuing steadily the wholesome course thus begun, became in time almost a Francatelli in petticoats. Country-women, go ye and do likewise. Blot stands ready to confer the honorable degree of F. R. C. (first-rate cook) upon such of you as choose to perfect yourselves in kitchen lore under his instructions.—"J. B.," in the Round Table.

SINGULAR DUEL—SENSIBLE CHOICE OF WEAPONS.—Two worthies who had quarrelled, and who had been vowing vengeance on each other for some time, happened to meet, recently, in a public-house in Pulteneytown, where they mutually determined to settle up old scores, mine host volunteering to act as referee. The most natural weapon, the fist, was, of course, the only one that had occurred to them; but mine host, having one eye to his business and another to his fun, suggested that their quarrel was not one which should be settled by the vulgar resort to fisticuffs. Would they allow him to select the weapons with which they should fight? "Agreed," said both the worthies. "Well, gentlemen," said mine host, "you shall fight it across this table, and your weapons shall not be pistols, but soda-water bottles." A dozen-basket having been supplied to each, the fight began in downright earnest, each firing away his corks as fast as he could make them "pop," and, by the time that each had stood a dozen rounds from his opponents, they were tired enough, and the ludicrousness of the operations having changed their wrath to laughter loud and long, they shook hands and departed, not foes, but friends.—John o' Groat Journal.

THE ROLL OF MUSIC.

A TERRIBLE MISTAKE.

ALTHOUGH I had often been in St. Petersburg before, I had only of late been introduced to the Princess Anna Sobieski, widow of a Polish noble, who had represented a junior branch of that great historic race which has given kings and martyrs to Poland. The old lady, whose large landed possessions, bequeathed by her husband, had procured her the dubious compliment of an imperial command to reside in the metropolis, had treated me with much kindness, and my first call, when the order to depart arrived, was at the Sobieski palace.

I forget what I said, but the conversation rolled on in the usual common-place strain of French compliment, until the princess inquired if I should make any stay at Warsaw. If so, perhaps I would do a kind turn to an old woman who had few opportunities of communicating with her native country. It was nothing—a mere toy—a bagatelle not worth the attention of a state messenger like ce cher capitaine, who carried papers the contents of which might convulse Europe—but, but would I take charge of a roll of music, produced by a gifted German composer in the capital, and which her dear niece, enthusiastic about music as all Poles were, was dying to receive? Still it was a precious charge, being a loan, since the composer declined to publish it, and on that account it could not be entrusted to the care of the Russian railway officials. The princess added that her brother, the Count Szomyzy, lived but eleven virsts from Warsaw, that his castle was just then full of guests and gaieties, and that I should be a welcome visitor there on the mention of her name.

It was to the count's only daughter, Rosalie, that this invaluable roll of manuscript music was to be conveyed, and her aunt jestingly advised me to take good care of my heart, since her young relative was acknowledged to be the reiguing beauty in the government of Warsaw. I laughed at such a warning. The habit of a roving life had shown me the ease with which impressions are effaced by absence; but I was glad to be of use in a way that involved no dereliction of duty.

The roll of music, in a locked morocco case, with the little silver key dangling from it by a string, was delivered at my hotel by one of the princess' chasseurs, and I placed it in my portmanteau, with a mental resolve to diverge from Warsaw to the country-seat of Count Szomyzy, if only for an hour or two.

I had packed my effects, and was ready to start, when a man suddenly burst into the room, and fell on his knees before me.

It being always necessary to speak decidedly to a Russian, I ordered him to leave the room. He was not a beggar—he was too well dressed; not wearing the caftan and boots, but a decent suit of European clothing. Tears were streaming down his face, and he seemed sober, though he moaned piteously as he embraced my knees after the abject fashion of his countrymen.

"Noble excellency! magnanimous Englishman! have some pity on a wretch whose whole life hangs on your honorable decision. I swear to your grandeur that you can make a whole family happy or miserable by one little word, illustrious one!"

With some trouble I drew from the man, whose language, in spite of his agitation, was too pure for a mujik, the substance of his petition. His seemed to be really a hard case. He was a courier, having travelled Europe for years with different masters, and he had a wife and children living at Naples, where he was in hopes of an engagement in the service of a former employer, one of the wealthy Demidoff family. However, he had been recalled to Russia to give evidence in a law-suit, and, on preparing to leave St. Petersburg, the police, in some fit of caprice, had refused him his passport, on the ground that a Russian, unless noble, could not by law quit the empire alone. If he had a master, well and good. If not, he might stay where he was.

"But I don't want a servant: should not know what to do with one," said I, hardly knowing how to get rid of the singular suppliant. But a flood of words overwhelmed me. My protection was alone asked for. Ignatius—that was the man's name—was only to be nominally my retainer, and was not to cost me a copeck. He had money for his expenses, and only wanted the ægis of my name. In return for this, I should have his undying gratitude, and his devoted services upon the journey to Vienna. He pulled out his passport for my inspection—or rather the "provisional permit" that represented it—and I satisfied myself that Ignatius Kraskoff, native of Moscow, was really in the strait he represented himself, for across the document was written, "Papers refused, conformably to ukase," with the signature of a high functionary.

I could not deny the poor man the trifling favor he asked, so I wrote a line to the police prefect, requesting permission to take him as my servant, and committed the note to Ignatius, who received it with transports of joy, kissing my hand, and, I believe, my boots, with the exaggerated humility which the Russians owe to their Oriental traditions. Two hours later, on reaching the railway terminus, sure enough, there was Ignatius, in his smart garb of green cloth trimmed with Astracan fur, the livery of the Demidoffs, bustling to and fro with the utmost activity. He had already secured a compartment for my especial behoof, had placed the lately published editions of the Invalide Russe and the Northern Bee ready for my perusal, and on my arrival pounced on my cloaks, canes and luggage with a zeal and energy which I had never seen equalled by the best paid of his professional brotherhood.

"A pleasant trip to you, Yates, and I wish I were going too. Even Vienna and its Volksgarten is better fun than St. Petersburg in the dog days. But is that your courier?" observed young Dillon from the embassy, a junior attaché with whom I was on very friendly terms, and who had strolled down to see me off. At this instant, Ignatius, who had just brought me some flowers and a basket of Ingrian cherries, had scoured off on some new self imposed task, and was dimly visible in the distance. The bell had rung, and the guards were marshalling the bewildered peasants, new as they were to steam and iron roads, into their respective cars. I hastily told my friend how it was that I had become the nominal master of so splendidly accoutred a retainer. Indeed, such an explanation seemed necessary, for Ignatius, with the bullion-tasselled cap, morocco money bag, and green livery trimmed with costly dark fur, looked more fitted to serve a royal highness than a mere subaltern of the F. O.

"Ignatius Kraskoff—Kraskoff—are you quite sure that is the name?" asked Dillon, thoughtfully. I was quite sure.

"Strange, how that name runs in my head. Yet I have not the least idea where I heard it, and I'm certain that I never set my eyes on the fellow's swarthy face before. A stunning servant he seems; but, somehow, I must have heard of him before.

I laughed, and remarked that all Russian names were pretty much alike, ending as they did in the invariable "off," "vitch," or "sky."

Ignatius bowed and smiled me into my carriage, the guard closed the door, the bell rang again, I shook hands with Dillon out of the window, and settled myself for the start. Off the train glided amid many ejaculations on the part of the mujiks, who blessed themselves and invoked their saints as the snorting iron horse wheeled them away. The pace increased, and we were almost clear of the station. Heaven and earth! what is the matter?

It was the attaché, without his hat, running breathless along the platform, and for a moment coming abreast of my carriage.

"I say, Yates," he called out, with a gasp, "I remember now. Kraskoff is—"

A scream from the engine drowned the words, and in a moment more we darted through an arch-way full of steam and smoke, and I neither saw nor heard any more of my young countryman. This incident made little impression on me, beyond giving me a laugh at Dillon's sudden revival of memory, and his effort to impart to me some real or fancied facts—wholly immaterial, no doubt—with respect to my superb servitor.

Warsaw at last. But we were not permitted to enter the station until the train had been brought to a halt, and a severe examination of the passports and faces had taken place. The imperial gendarmes who acquitted themselves of this duty were unusually curt of speech and peremptory of bearing, and seemed ill at ease. Drums were heard beating, and bugles sounding, in the town, and it was plain that the whole garrison must be astir.

"What has occurred?"

"A conspiracy detected. Numerous arrests. A state of siege proclaimed."

Yet, as I drove from the station to the Palatine Hotel, I saw no particular signs of popular commotion. There were whisperings, and cautious interchange of words among the groups at the corners of the streets, and I noticed the square Polish cap and jaunty Polish jacket, the wearing of which was accounted as half treasonable by the Czar Nicholas, more prominent than usual.

Although fairly inured to fatigue, I was now somewhat weary, and was not sorry to reach the inn, where I counted on a night's sound sleep. I had, in truth, somewhat condensed the first portion of my journey, that I might have time to execute the princess' commission, and I was thus sleeping at Warsaw at a time when his excellency the embassador, if he thought on the matter at all, imagined me to be at Wilna.

I fell asleep as soon as my head touched the pillow, but my dreams were troubled and painfully vivid. The old Princess Sobieski, transformed into a malignant fairy, hovered incessantly around my couch, waving her ivory handled crutch-stick (she was lame, and carried such a prop) by way of a wand, and moping and mowing at me in the wickedest exultation. Ignatius, in a black cloak, with a stiletto in his right hand, glided around me like a snake, and was always on the point of stabbing—whom or what I know not.

The soft morning light was pouring in, and the early bugles were sounding at the Russian barracks, far away. I rose, ordered breakfast, and, writing Count Szomyzy a note, sent it by a mounted messenger. Ponies and boys, equally unkempt, wild and active, are always plenty in Poland, and the promise of an extra rouble for speed sent off the emissary like a cannon shot. In a briefer time than I had expected, the boy returned, bearing a courteous answer from the noble Polish landholder, begging that I would take up my quarters at the castle, where a friend of his sister would always be more than welcome, and naming five o'clock as the dinner hour, if not inconvenient to myself. I determined to accept this frank invitation, the rather as I was anxious to see something of Polish customs and character. Suddenly it occurred to me that the note was open when delivered, and I sharply questioned the boy who had brought it.

"Gracious sir, the Russian guard!"

It really appeared, on further inquiry, that the guard stationed at the gate of the city had stopped the messenger both on his exit and return, and that my note, like that of the count, had been unscrupulously opened and read by the subaltern in command. This was not a usual precaution, even during a state of siege; but I was informed that private intelligence which had reached the authorities had induced extreme vigilance. It was rumored that some manifesto, or other document, of the utmost importance, and to which were appended the signatures of many men of high rank and influence, hostile to Muscovite rule, was passing from hand to hand. And every "plotnik" in Poland was anxious to earn promotion and reward by intercepting papers of so compromising a character.

"A carriage of some sort, Ignatius, to take me to the chateau. Then, if you will have the bill ready, and the luggage taken down, we can start by the express for the south, after I get back again. The rest of the day will be at your own disposal, of course. I daresay you have friends here who will be glad to see you."

The eleven versts of sandy road were soon performed by the fleet, loose-jointed Lithuanian horses which were driven in a sort of wickerwork cart, covered with a pink and white tilt, by a wild lad in a sheepskin pelisse. I chatted with the driver, and we understood each other pretty well, considering that I only knew some scraps of Polish and Russian.

Presently we saw the castle, with its straggling line of brick and timber buildings, large but irregular, and one grey tower rising over the rest of the pile, dinted and crumbling, but of immense solidity.

Dashing through some slovenly plantations, where the wild-plum and wild-pear, the favorite trees of the Polish nation, over numbered the elms and birch-trees, we reached the gate, and were received by a large retinue of servants and barking dogs.

There was no lack of guests. The great room was filled with company, and I remarked that almost every one present had handsome features, and a bearing at once gentle and spirited, that contrasted forcibly with the usual inmates of a St. Petersburg drawing room, its flat-faced men and sallow dames. Most of those I saw wore the picturesque Polish dress, richly embroidered, and the amaranth velvet of the pelisses matched well with the dark hair and pale keen features of the wearers.

The count, who was much the junior of his sister, Princess Anna, received me with much cordiality, and presented me to his three sons and his daughter, Rosalie Szomyzy. I had just time to see that the latter was a most beautiful dark-eyed girl, well meriting her aunt's eulogies, when I was put under the care of my host's valet, and hurried off to dress for dinner, which was nearly ready.

During the long and plentiful, if ill-served meal, there was conversation enough, but it was mostly in Polish, or in the colloquial Latin which the natives of Poland and Hungary—or the higher classes of them—speak with as much rapid fluency as their own tongues. To judge by the tones of the speakers, the talk was rather sad than gay, and by the constant recurrence of the words "Warsaw" and "Moskov," I gleaned that the state of siege was frequently mentioned. I saw visible signs of emotion, quivering nostrils, eyes bright with anger or scorn, and heard more than one gentle voice tremble, though not with fear, in uttering the hateful name of the Russian oppressor.

After the heady Hungarian wine had been succeeded by coffee, we all rose from the table and returned to the saloon into which I had first entered, and where a band of motley musicians had already begun to tune their instruments. Often as I had heard of the passionate Polish taste for music and dancing, I had never till then realized the eager delight with which those present took their places, whirling round in the quick movements of the dance, as if bewitched by the tune. Polkas and mazurkas, the national dances, and the wild, swift Magyar waltz, kept us all well employed. The woes of Poland were forgotten for a time, I believe, in the physical toil and excitement of the scene, and the flashing eyes and flushed cheeks of those around me told me how dear the amusement was to their generous and energetic natures.

The ball had gone on above an hour, and I, as a stranger, had twice had the honor of giving my hand to Rosalie Szomyzy. It was during a pause in the exciting Magyar waltz, as we stood together under a huge battered picture in a frame of immaculate, and whose subject was Watteau's version of Arcadia, with hooped and highly-rouged shepherdesses, that the count passed, and whispered something to his daughter; I saw the beautiful girl's flushed cheek grow suddenly pale, and then redden again, as she asked me, with some embarrassment, "Whether her aunt Sobieski had not—had not requested me to deliver some trifle—a present—on her part to Rosalie Szonyzy?"

The question was a very natural one; the only puzzle to me was the evident and apparently causeless emotion of the fair speaker. Nieces might be very fond of their aunts, but why they should be thus agitated at receiving a token of their affection was incomprehensible.

"Certainly," said I, with a smile; "not that I am the bearer of any remarkable treasure. A roll of music, on which the princess seemed to set great store——"

I broke off abruptly, for at that moment a faint, far-distant sound, hardly audible to the most attentive ear, reached me. The clank of cavalry advancing at a rapid pace! It was impossible for an old soldier to mistake the peculiar jingle of sword and stirrup, and the deep beat of many hoofs striking the ground in unison. But at the same instant the music poured forth its strains with fresh spirit, and the sounds I had heard were drowned by the melody.

"This—this roll of music, captain; I am so longing to see it. My dear, good aunt! Have you it here?"

Mademoiselle Rosalie's sweet voice trembled as she pronounced these common-place words; she tried to smile, but her lips quivered, her eyes were full of tears; I saw her father, under the shadow of a pillar, watching her keenly and anxiously from a distance.

"Mademoiselle, you are ill; the heat of the weather, and——"

"No, no, I am quite well. It was only a silly fancy. I was impatient to see my aunt's gift, that was all," said my pretty partner, hurriedly. Now, it so happened that the gift in question was in the room; I never liked to let the despatches go out of my sight, and I had hidden in a corner of the dancing room the official bag which contained them, side by side with the morocco case that held the princess' precious music. We were within a few yards of the nook where these objects lay, and I at once stepped forward to pick up the morocco-case, and placed it in the hands of its fair owner, saying lightly as I did so, "I am sure Princess Anna would be gratified could she see——"

When a man glided like a serpent along the wall, darted forward, and rudely snatched the packet! A scream broke from my partner's lips, and I grasped the intruder by the arm, but recoiled, less from the pistol which was presented at my head, than in sheer surprise.

"Ignatius!"

"Ay, captain," said the courier, whose shrewd face wore a look of irrepressible triumph. "Ay, captain, Ignatius, your worship's poor servant. But the tables are turned now."

At the same moment there was a great clash of weapons, and a wild outcry of voices, and a servant of the count's, bleeding from a sabre cut, rushed groaning in, and fell at his master's feet. The music came to an abrupt stop, and dancers crowded together like a bevy of frightened wild fowl. Then followed the tramp of booted feet, and the saloon was suddenly filled by Russian soldiers, their swords flashing in the light of the lustres and lamps. The officer in command gave some brief orders, and in a moment every one of the male guests was secured. So quickly was the work done, that resistance was impossible, even had there been a fair chance of repelling force by force. As it was, the dragoons had an easy task, and while some of them held their cocked pistols to our foreheads, their comrades were binding our wrists tightly together with thongs or cords. Only one person so far as I know, was hurt during the onslaught, and this was the servant I had spoken of, and who had been sabred in a futile attempt at giving the alarm.

"I am a British officer, sir, and you will have to answer for this outrage," said I to the Russian major, as he passed me, stolid and smiling, as if the sobs and cries of the terrified women, and the indignant remonstrances of the captives, had been soothing to his ear.

The major made no reply, but taking the roll of music, in its morocco-case, which Ignatius obsequiously proffered, burst the box open with the point of his cavalry sword, and deliberately opened and spread out—not a roll of music, but a closely-written document, to which were appended a great number of signatures. The Russian's yellow moustaches actually appeared to bristle, like those of a cat springing on its prey, as his cold blue eyes fell on this paper.

"At last, Polish dogs, I have you in my clutches!" he shouted, as he slapped the manuscript with his heavy hand; "the council of war will make short work with your rebellious lives, for here is the proof of your conspiracy."

"Which this noble English seigneur has brought from St. Petersburg, like an ass that knows not what he carries on the pack-saddle," said Ignatius, my precious courier, who now stood revealed in his true colors as a hypocrite of the first water.

An apalling scene followed. As the prisoners were dragged away, their wives, sisters, daughters, clung to them with tears and shrieks, believing they were to be led off to immediate butchery, and the poor ladies were driven back, often with unfeeling violence, by the Russian soldiers.

But no pillage of the castle took place, the troops being of a regularly disciplined corps, and the officer too great a martinet to disobey orders.

Tied two and two, we were placed in country carts and driven off under escort to the citadel of Warsaw: and it was only by using the name of the Queen of England, and repeatedly urging my position of a state messenger, that I could persuade the Muscovites to let the Foreign-office dispatches accompany me. In the citadel of Warsaw I spent four-and-twenty miserable hours, my mind torn by regrets for the kindly and gentle people who had so lately broken bread with me, and whose fate was now so disastrous, and distracted by gloomy forebodings as to my own future. True, I was safe from bullet or scourge, from Siberia or death. But a long detention, coupled with the non-delivery of the dispatches, would be ruin to my prospects in life.

After a time I was admitted to a private interview with the viceroy, and to my great joy and surprise was informed that I was free to depart.

"My courier had explained," the prince said, with a polite smile of dismissal, "the little ruse of which I had been the victim. There was no reason longer to impede my journey."

Years afterwards, at Lisbon, where Dillon was first attaché, the latter told me that the words he had vainly attempted to bawl in my ears as the train swept me past the platform, merely comprised this friendly warning:

"Ignatius Kraskoff is a notorious spy of the police!"

In which capacity, and in consequence of my intimacy at the Sobieski palace, that pink and paragon of good travelling servants had been instructed to attach himself to me.

Graduated Pronunciation.—"In a matter of this kind, what is one man's meat is another man's poison; and what may be excused in one case might be altogether condemned in another. Thus Lord Russell may say that he will feel obleeged to the noble lord for such and such information—because Lord Russell belongs to an antediluvian period, and persists in adhering to the pronunciation that was fashionable in his youth; but if Mr. Whipper-Snapper, his lordship's secretary, was to forget himself so far as to say obleege instead of oblige, he would probably be snapped up by his chief as a plagiarist, if not a caricaturist. Another noble lord, too, may tell us that he will feel it his dooty to bring forward such-and-such a motion on Toosday next. And yet, despite these noble precedents, it will not do either for you or for me, gentle reader, to say that our dooty obleeges us to do so and so; for we are not veteran statesmen of high rank, and we must refrain from taking liberties with the received mode of pronunciation, unless we desire to be relegated to a low stratum of society, and to be regarded as flounderers in the mud of provincialisms.

"Again, the Hon. and Rev. Towers Lofty says tossel instead of tassel, and wropped for wrapped; and he may do so because he is an honorable and a peer's son, though not because he is a reverend; for—at least, so I take it—he ought, when he uses the latter word in certain chapters read in the church at Christmas and Easter, to pronounce it as it is pronounced by the great body of educated Englishmen, of whom the clergy form a portion, and whose pronunciation ought to be listened to with as critical ears as their enunciation. I do not speak here of such variations in pronunciation as neether and niether, sovereign and suv'reign, erd and er-rd, sissum and sissim (the latter pronunciation being authorized by a learned prebend in one of our northern cathedrals), for these are cases in which eether or eyether pronunciation may be safely left to the discretion of the reader; but I refer to such instances as Mr. Towers Lofty's wropped and tossel, and to the Rev. Athelstan Conquest, who was wont to pray for the Prince Olbert, and Olbert, Prince of Wales. But, then, Mr. Conquest comes of a famous county family whose names and possessions are written in Domesday Book; and his position is not to be shaken by the substitution of an O for an A. It is clearly a very different affair with his curate, who comes of a mere plebian stock, and is of no particular family or county; from his lips such a pronunciation would fall as a vulgarity."—Cuthbert Bede.

One evening, as Miss Fawcett, the English actress, was dressing for a part, a boy attached to the theatre knocked at the door. "Please, Miss, there's a woman at the back who says she wants two orders to see the play." "What is her name? Go and ask her. I promised no orders." "I did ask her name, but she said it was no use telling it, because you didn't know her." "Not know her, and she expects orders! Has the woman her faculties about her?" "I think she have, ma'am, for I see her have a bundle tied up in a pocket handkerchief under her arm."

Some author tells us that much is said about tongue. True, it is in everybody's mouth.

WAITING UP.

AN EPISODE.

To indulge in an episode here, apropos to the general principle involved, it may be said, pertinently enough, that this matter of waiting, if you have nerves—"waiting up," or "waiting down," choose either branch of the dilemma—is not to be ranged under the head of popular amusements, or classified in the category of enlivening recreation. To wait—who has not waited?—fix it as we will—is always more or less of a trial; and whether the arrangement be for "waiting up"—disdainful of sleep—or for "waiting down"—covetous of dozes—it rarely happens that the intervals are employed in the invocation of other than left-handed blessings, on the head of those who have caused this deviation from comfortable routine; or that, on their tardy arrival—people conscious of being waited for, always stay out as long and provokingly as they can—we find ourselves at all disposed to amiable converse, or complimentary expression.

And reason good. If we lie down, for instance, when my young lady has gone to a "polka party," or my young gentleman has travelled away to an affair of the convivialities, do we ever find it conducive to refreshing repose, this awkward consciousness, overpending like the sword of Damocles, that sooner or later the disturbance must come, to call us startlingly from dreams? Nor after we have tossed and tumbled into a lethargy, is it to be set down as a pleasure to be aroused, all stupid and perplexed, to scramble down the stairway for the admission of delinquents, who—the fact admits of no exception—ring, ring, ring, or knock, knock, knock away, long after you have heard them, and persist in goading you to phrensies, by peal upon peal, when your very neck is endangered by rapidity of movement in their behalf. It is a lucky thing for them when they so ungratefully ask, "why didn't you make haste," as they always do, or mutter about their being "kept there all night," as they surely will, that despotic powers are unknown in these regions, and that you are not invested with supreme command. But now get thee to sleep again, as quickly as thou canst, though it may be that the task is not the easiest in the world.

"Waiting up," too, this likewise has its delectations. The very clock seems at last to have entered into a conspiracy—the hands move with sluggish weariness, and there is a laggard sound in the swinging of the pendulum, which almost says that time itself is tired, as it ticks its progress to the drowsy ear. There is a bustle in the street, no doubt, as you sit down doggedly to wakefulness; and many feet are pattering from theatre and circus. For a time the laugh is heard, and people chatter as they pass, boy calling unto boy, or deep-mouthed men humming an untuned song. Now doors are slammed, and shutters closed, and bolts are shooting, in earnest of retirements for the night. Forsaken dogs bark round and round the house, and vocal cats beset the portico. The rumbling of the hack dwindles in the distance, as the cabs roll by from steamboat wharf and railroad depot. You are deserted and alone—tired of books, sated with newspapers, indisposed to thought. You nod—ha! ha!—bibbety bobbety!—as your hair smokes and crackles in the lamp. But it is folly now to peep forth. Will they never come? No—do they ever, until all reasonable patience is exhausted? Yes—here they are!—pshaw!—sit thee still—it is but a straggling step; and hour drags after hour, until you have resolved it o'er and o'er again, that this shall be the last of your vigils, let who will request it as a favor that you will be good enough to sit up for them. I wouldn't do it.—Neal's Charcoal Sketches.

Bennett's Losses.—The New York Review thus estimates the loss—exclusive of the profits of the Play Bill—incurred by Bennett in his quarrel with the theatrical managers:

Bennett finds his quarrel with the managers a losing business. Five presses in the Herald job printing office used to be running night and day, printing off theatre bills and other theatrical work. These are now all stopped but one, and the men that attended them are discharged. In losing the printing of all the respectable theatres and the opera, Bennett's profits are diminished about thirty two thousand dollars per annum; the amount has been stated higher than this, but we believe that thirty-two thousand is very nearly the actual loss incurred from this one source.

The advertisements of the opera and theatres averaged about one column a day the year round, the charge for which was forty cents each line. A column in the Herald contains two hundred and fifty lines; so that the daily loss is exactly one hundred dollars, or thirty-six thousand five hundred dollars per annum. It thus appears that the managers have inflicted a loss upon Bennett of sixty-eight thousand five hundred dollars a year.

A sharp grocer, when a customer who was buying a gallon of molasses observed that a good deal remained in the measure after it was turned, remarked: "There was some in the measure before I drew your gallon."

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News-stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS, } Publishers.
WM. J. BINGHAM.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

FRANCIS BRET HARTE, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1865.

NEW BOOKS.

WE are indebted to A. Roman & Co., No. 417 and 419 Montgomery street, for the following new books:

Outcroppings; being Selections of California Verse. A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

That a publisher should publish, at his own expense, a volume of selections from California newsaper poetry, is, perhaps, the most remarkable feature of this volume. The climate and material character of California civilization are not favorable to the development of the poetical faculty, notwithstanding the grandeur and sublimity of local scenery—a fact which the compiler seems to have confessed, in perfect simplicity, but which does not seem to have deterred him, as it should, from issuing such a work. In a community so small, and where there are so few poets whose literary merit is definitely established, any preference or selection must always seem invidious, and is not only an exercise of grave responsibility, but is a decision always open to appeal, as the expression of a single individual mind. Who is the compiler does not appear; it is hinted that he has written verses himself, and, if we may follow the natural tendencies of the poetic disposition, it would be fair to seek him among those who are most prominently represented in this volume.

If Outcroppings be anything like a fair expression of the poetic development of California, the manifest superiority which the female exhibits over the masculine poet, is something worthy of notice. Two or three poems by Mrs. Lawson, one or two by Ina Coolbrith, are not only remarkable for California, but are worthy of an older civilization. But in regard to real poetic talent, assuming this volume to be authority, Chas. Warren Stoddard may fairly claim precedence, not only of present performance but of future promise. A few verses, entitled "At Anchor," show an artistic finish, breadth of thought, melody and poetic atmosphere, which place him upon a plane where, as yet, he has no rival—hardly a competitor. This is high praise in a volume that contains Pollock's "Chandos Picture," and Mr. Kendall's "Transition."

Although we cannot help thinking that this volume is premature, and perhaps not as carefully digested as it might be, we hail it as a means of promoting some criticism, which will definitely settle a proper standard of taste, and as a means of preserving some poems which are worthy of permanence in literature. We understand that Frank Soule, whose omission from this volume is accounted for by the fact of his having a work of his own in preparation, is about to publish some of his early contributions to the literature of this State, and we are glad that the publication of a book of this general character has thus opened the way to worthy individual effort.

Dante, as Philosopher, Patriot, and Poet. With an Analysis of the Divina Commedia, its plot and episodes. By Vincenzo Botta. New York: Charles Scribner & Co.

An excellent Italian and English scholar and writer of clear, idiomatic English, Vincenzo Botta, is a fitting interpreter of the works of his countryman, the great Italian poet. His volume opens with some introductory remarks on the condition of Europe, in the poet's day, followed by the particulars of his birth and genealogy, which bring the reader to the episode of Dante's early love. Mr. Botta believes Beatrice to have been an abstract sweetheart; a poet's ideal personified, as the significance of her name—source of beatitude—would seem to indicate. Reviewing the poet's philosophical studies, he accounts for his queer mingling of Platonic and Aristotelian ideas of the fact that his studies were equally divided between the two philosophers. He likewise shows his theology to have been similarly based on the antagonistic teachings of St. Bonaventura and Thomas Aquinas—the one a representative of Idealism, the other of Realism. Mr. Botta also points out Dante's excellence as a naturalist, and as shadowing forth many physical truths. He instances the words of Virgil in the Divine Comedy, when, having passed the centre of the earth, he says they left behind

> "That point to which from every point is dragged
> All heavy substance."

as a suggestion of gravitation! Considerable space is given to his political ideas, which is followed by an account of his wanderings in exile, and finally his death at Ravenna on the 14th of September, 1321:

"Robed as a Franciscan friar, according to his own wish, at his feet a golden lyre with broken chords, his hands resting on the open Scriptures, the remains of Dante lay in state in the palace of the Polentas. A magnificent funeral followed; the bier was borne by the most distinguished citizens of the city, and Guido himself delivered the funeral oration."

The analysis of the Divine Comedy is an effort of great critical ability, and constitutes the larger part as well as the most attractive feature of the volume. As a whole, the work of Mr. Botta's is a credit to his scholarship, and to the literature of his native and his adopted country.

Atalanta in Calydon, A Tragedy. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

A poem, fashioned in the mould of Greek Tragedy, with a dedication in Greek hexameters, is not of a kind calculated to commend itself to Californians generally or to become popular in Circulating Libraries in the interior. In fact, it is highly probable that the sale of this work will be small in Dutch Flat and San Andreas, and that the prejudice against Æschylus, Sophocles and Euripides, which obtains, to some degree, in Horuitos, and Jackass Gulch may militate against the universal success of Mr. Swinburne's poem. That peculiar skepticism which once incited the query, "What are Pericles?" will be indulged regarding both Atalanta and Calydon. Notwithstanding all this, Mr. Swinburne has issued a fine poem—a good deal through the encouragement of Professor Mathew Arnold, who made the author's first collection of poems the subject of a critical essay, and who is a fair Greek poet himself—and we venture upon an extract. Classical or not, there is graphic description and wonderful melody in this fragment of the first chorus, which appeals as well to the simplest as the most fastidious sense:

> For Winter's rains and ruins are over,
> And all the season of snows and sins;
> The days dividing lover and lover,
> The light that loses, the night that wins;
> And time remembered is grief forgotten,
> And frosts are slain and flowers begotten,
> And in green underwood and cover
> Blossom by blossom the Spring begins.
>
> The full streams feed on flower of rushes,
> Ripe grasses trammel a travelling foot,
> The faint fresh flame of the young year flushes
> From leaf to flower and flower to fruit;
> And fruit and leaf are as gold and fire,
> And the oat is heard above the lyre,
> And the hoofed heel of a satyr crushes
> The chestnut-husk at the chestnut-root.
>
> And Pan by noon and Bacchus by night,
> Fleeter of foot than the fleet-foot kid,
> Follows with dancing and fills with delight
> The Mænad and the Bassarid;
> And soft as lips that laugh and hide
> The laughing leaves of the trees divide,
> And screen from seeing, and leave in sight
> The god pursuing, the maiden hid.
>
> The ivy falls with the Bacchanal's hair
> Over her eyebrows hiding her eyes;
> The wild vine slipping down leaves bare
> Her bright breast shortening into sighs;
> The wild vine slips with the weight of its leaves,
> But the berried ivy catches and cleaves
> To the limbs that glitter, the feet that scare
> The wolf that follows, the fawn that flies.

Two Men. A Novel. By Elizabeth Stoddard, author of The Morgesons. New York: Bunce & Huntington.

Had Mrs. Stoddard's story possessed less talent its few defects would not have been as noticeable, or as worthy of criticism. It is a graphic and well-drawn picture of two distinctive individual characters, and thus far earns its title of Two Men; but, as a story, we cannot help wishing that it aspired to something more than a mere development of two original and shiftless characters, through incidents that are not in themselves striking or original. Mrs. Stoddard's fault seems to lie in her making her characters of more importance than their acts or the circumstances which surround them. We are continually feeling that they are capable of doing more remarkable things, and we are always disappointed with the meagreness of the results. Osmond Luce, an erratic individual whom every reader is willing to admit is capable of anything, ran away from home mysteriously, and returns as mysteriously with a motherless daughter, without having done, as far as we can learn, anything consistent with his character or capacity for the melo-drama. So little does Mrs. Stoddard care for his conduct that she does not even tell us who his wife was, whom we can't help hoping will turn out to be somebody or other before we finish the story. An interesting young lady named Theresa, whose capacities for genteel comedy and flirtation are unlimited; coolly walks out of the story just as we are beginning to fall in love with her, and the authoress gives us no satisfaction regarding her ultimate fate. Mrs. Stoddard's style is crisp and energetic, although occasionally marred in the dialogue by a faithfulness to nature, which is not always interesting. But this is atoned for by the frequent epigrammatic turns give to her descriptions. Thus, speaking of the death of Cuth, an old hard-headed retainer of the Parke family, he is said to have died "silently and firmly like a wolf;" and again a dog's eyes are spoken of as being "limpid with love and hunger," or Jason, parting with Theresa, feels that "he was shaking hands with an episode." The book is one of undoubted talent, and whatever its success, it is sufficiently remarkable to bespeak the attention of a large class of readers for any future novel that Mrs. Stoddard may write.

Neal's Charcoal Sketches. Three books complete in one. With twenty-one illustrations by F. O. C. Darley. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers.

The once famous Charcoal Sketches have been so long supplanted in public popularity by Doesticks, Artemus Ward, Orpheus C. Kerr and Petroleum V. Nasby, that we are a little surprised at the faith which puts forward the present edition. Mr. Neal's humor seems somewhat labored, beside either of his successors, and the introductions to his best sketches are prolonged to tediousness. The burlesque personification of characters under such names as "Sherri Kobler," "Fixington Fydget," and "Shiverton Shakes" is rather cheap fun for the present day.

The Fables of Æsop. Illustrated with one hundred and eleven engravings from original designs by Herrick. New York: Hurd & Houghton. Boston: E. P. Dutton & Co.

An illustrated edition of Æsop, to which is appended an excellent account of his life.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELIST.

MISS MIX.

By the Author of Jane Eyre, Villette, Shirley, etc., etc.

CONDENSED BY "BRET."

CHAPTER I.

MY earliest impressions are of a huge, mis-shapen rock, against which the hoarse waves beat unceasingly. On this rock three pelicans are standing in a defiant attitude. A dark sky lowers in the background, while two sea-gulls and a gigantic cormorant eye with extreme disfavor the floating corpse of a drowned woman in the foreground. A few bracelets, coral necklaces and other articles of jewelry, scattered around loosely, completed this remarkable picture.

It is one which, in some vague, unconscious way, symbolizes, to my fancy, the character of man. I have never been able to explain exactly why. I think I must have seen the picture in some illustrated volume, when a baby, or my mother may have dreamed it before I was born.

As a child, I was not handsome. When I consulted the triangular bit of looking-glass which I always carried with me, it showed a pale, sandy and freckled face, shaded by locks like the color of sea-weed when the sun strikes it in deep water. My eyes were said to be indistinctive; they were a faint, ashen gray; but above them rose—my only beauty—a high, massive, domelike forehead, with polished temples, like door-knobs of the purest porcelain.

Our family was a family of governesses. My mother had been one, and my sisters had the same occupation. Consequently, when at the age of thirteen, my eldest sister handed me the advertisement of Mr. Rawjester, clipped from that day's Times, I accepted it as my destiny. Nevertheless, a mysterious presentiment of an indefinite future haunted me in my dreams that night, as I lay upon my little snow-white bed. The next morning, with two bandboxes tied up in silk handkerchiefs, and a hair trunk, I turned my back upon Minerva Cottage forever.

CHAPTER II.

BLUNDERBORE HALL, the seat of James Rawjester, Esq., was encompassed by dark pines and funeral hemlocks on all sides. The wind sang weirdly in the turrets and moaned through the long-drawn avenues of the park. As I approached the house I saw several mysterious figures flit before the windows, and a yell of demoniac laughter answered my summons at the bell. While I strove to repress my gloomy forebodings, the housekeeper, a timid, scared looking old woman, showed me into the library.

I entered, overcome with conflicting emotions. I was dressed in a narrow gown of dark serge, trimmed with black bugles. A thick green shawl was pinned across my breast. My hands were encased with black hall-mittens worked with steel beads; on my feet were large pattens, originally the property of my deceased grandmother. I carried a blue cotton umbrella. As I passed before a mirror, I could not help glancing at it, nor could I disguise from myself the fact that I was not handsome.

Drawing a chair into a recess, I sat down with folded hands, calmly awaiting the arrival of my master. Once or twice a fearful yell rang through the house, or the rattling of chains, and curses uttered in a deep, manly voice broke upon the oppressive stillness. I began to feel my soul rising with the emergency of the moment.

"You look alarmed, miss. You don't hear anything, my dear, do you?" asked the housekeeper nervously.

"Nothing whatever," I remarked calmly, as a terrific scream, followed by the dragging of chairs and tables in the room above, drowned for a moment my reply. "It is the silence, on the contrary, which has made me foolishly nervous."

The housekeeper looked at me approvingly, and instantly made some tea for me.

I drank seven cups; as I was beginning the eighth, I heard a crash, and the next moment a man leaped into the room through the broken window.

CHAPTER III.

The crash startled me from my self-control. The housekeeper bent toward me and whispered:

"Don't be excited. It's Mr. Rawjester—he prefers to come in sometimes in this way. It's his playfulnesss, ha! ha! ha!"

"I perceive," I said calmly. "It's the unfettered impulse of a lolty soul breaking the tyrannizing bonds of custom," and I turned toward him.

He had never once looked at me. He stood with his back to the fire, which set off the herculean breadth of his shoulders. His face was dark and expressive; his under jaw squarely formed, and remarkably heavy. I was struck with his remarkable likeness to a Gorilla.

As he absently tied the poker into hard knots with his nervous fingers, I watched him with some interest. Suddeuly he turned toward me:

"Do you think I'm handsome, young woman?"

"Not classically beautiful," I returned calmly, "but you have, if I may so express myself, an abstract manliness—a sincere and wholesome barbarity which, involving as it does, the naturalness"—but I stopped, for he yawned at that moment—an action which singularly developed the immense breadth of his lower jaw—and I saw he had forgotten me. Preseutly he turned to the housekeeper:

"Leave us."

The old woman withdrew with a courtesy.

Mr. Rawjester deliberately turned his back upon me and remained silent for twenty minutes. I drew my shawl the more closely around my shoulders and closed my eyes.

"You are the governess?" at length he said.

"I am, sir."

"A creature who teaches geography, arithmetic, and the use of the globes—ha!—a wretched remnant of femininity—a skimp pattern of girlhood with a premature flavor of tea-leaves and morality. Ugh!"

I bowed my head silently.

"Listen to me, girl!" he said sternly; "this child you have come to teach—my ward—is not legitimate. She is the offspring of my mistress—a common harlot. Ah! Miss Mix, what do you think of me now?"

"I admire," I replied calmly, "your sincerity. A mawkish regard for delicacy might have kept this disclosure to yourself. I only recognize in your frankness that perfect community of thought and sentiment which should exist between original natures."

I looked up; he had already forgotten my presence, and was engaged in pulling off his boots and coat. This done, he sank down in an arm-chair before the fire, and ran the poker wearily through his hair. I could not help pitying him.

The wind howled dismally without, and the rain beat furiously against the windows. I crept toward him and seated myself on a low stool beside his chair.

Presently he turned, without seeing me, and placed his foot absently in my lap. I affected not to notice it. But he started and looked down.

"You here yet—Carrothead? Ah, I forgot. Do you speak French?"

"Oui, Monsieur."

"Tuissez vous!" he said sharply, with singular purity of accent. I complied. The wind moaned fearfully in the chimney, and the light burned dim. I shuddered in spite of myself. "Ah, you tremble, girl!"

"It is a fearful night!"

"Fearful! Call you this fearful, ha! ha! ha! Look! you wretched little atom, look," and he dashed forward, and, leaping out of the window, stood like a statue in the pelting storm, with folded arms. He did not stay long, but in a few minutes returned by way of the hall chimney. I saw from the way that he wiped his feet on my dress that he had again forgotten my presence.

"You are a governess. What can you teach?" he asked, suddenly and fiercely thrusting his face in mine.

"Manners," I replied calmly.

"Ha! teach me."

"You mistake yourself," I said, adjusting my mittens. "Your manners require not the artificial restraint of society. You are radically polite; this impetuosity and ferociousness is simply the sincerity which is the basis of a proper deportment. Your instincts are moral; your better nature, I see, is religious. As St. Paul justly remarks—see chap. 6, 8, 9 and 10—"

He seized a heavy candlestick, and threw it at me. I dodged it submissively but firmly.

"Excuse me," he remarked, as his under jaw slowly relaxed. "Excuse me, Miss Mix—but I can't stand St. Paul! Enough—you are engaged."

CHAPTER IV.

I followed the housekeeper as she led the way timidly to my room. As we passed into a dark hall in the wing, I noticed that it was closed by an iron gate with a grating. Three of the doors on the corridor were likewise grated. A strange noise as of shuffling feet and the howling of infuriated animals rang through the hall. Bidding the housekeeper good night, and taking the candle, I entered my bedchamber.

I took off my dress, and, putting on a yellow flannel night-gown, which I could not help feeling did not agree with my complexion, I composed myself to rest by reading Blair's Rhetoric and Paley's Moral Philosophy. I had just put out the light, when I heard voices in the corridor. I listened attentively. I recognized Mr. Rawjester's stern tones.

"Have you fed No. 1?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," said a gruff voice, appareutly belonging to a domestic.

"How's No 2?"

"She's a little off her feed, just now, but will pick up in a day or two."

"And No. 3?"

"Perfectly furious, sir. Her tantrums are ungovernable."

"Hush!"

The voices died away, and I sank into a fitful slumber.

I dreamed that I was wandering through a tropical forest. Suddeuly I saw the figure of a gorilla approaching me. As it neared me, I recognized the features of Mr. Rawjester. He held his hand to his side as if in pain. I saw that he had beeu wounded. He recognized me and called me by name, but at the same moment the vision changed to an Ashantee village, where, around a fire, a group of negroes were dancing and participating in some wild Obi festival. I awoke with the strain still surging in my ears.

"Hokee-pokee wokee fum!"

Good Heavens! could I be dreaming? I heard the voice distinctly on the floor below, and smelt something burning. I arose, with an indistinct presentiment of evil, and hastily putting some cotton in my ears and tying a towel about my head, I wrapped myself in a shawl and rushed down stairs. The door of Mr. Rawjester's room was open. I entered.

Mr. Rawjester lay apparently in a deep slumber, from which even the clouds of smoke that came from the burning curtains of his bed could not rouse him. Around the room a large and powerful negress, scantily attired, with her head adorned with feathers, was dancing wildly, accompanying herself with bone castinets. It looked like some terrible fetich.

I did not lose my calmness. After firmly emptying the pitcher, basin and slop-jar on the burning bed, I proceeded cautiously to the garden, and, returning with the garden-engine, I directed a small stream at Mr. Rawjester.

At my entrance the gigantic negress fled. Mr. Rawjester yawned and woke. I explained to him, as he rose dripping from the bed, the reason of my presence. He did not seem to be excited, alarmed or discomposed. He gazed at me curiously.

"So you risked your life to save mine, eh? you canary-colored teacher of infants?"

I blushed modestly, and drew my shawl tightly over my yellow flannel night-gown.

"You love me, Mary Jane—don't deny it! This trembling shows it!" He drew me closely toward him, and said, with his deep voice tenderly modulated:

"How's her pooty tootsens—did she get her 'ittle tootens wet—bess her."

I understood his allusion to my feet. I glanced down and saw that in my hurry I had put on a pair of his old India-rubbers. My feet were not small or pretty, and the addition did not add to their beauty.

"Let me go, sir," I remarked quietly. "This is all improper; it sets a bad example for your child," and I firmly but gently extricated myself from his grasp. I approached the door. He seemed for a moment buried in deep thought.

"You say this was a negress?"

"Yes, sir."

"Humph, No. 1, I suppose?"

"Who is Number One, sir?"

"My first," he remarked, with a significant and sarcastic smile. Then, relapsing into his old manner, he threw his boots at my head, and bade me begone. I withdrew calmly.

CHAPTER V.

My pupil was a bright little girl, who spoke French with a perfect accent. Her mother had been a French ballet-dancer, which probably accounted for it. Although she was only six years old, it was easy to perceive that she had been several times in love. She once said to me:

"Miss Mix, did you ever have the grande passion? Did you ever feel a fluttering here?" and she placed her hand upon her small chest, and sighed quaintly, "a kind of distaste for bonbons and caromels, when the world seemed as tasteless and hollow as a broken cordial drop."

"Then you have felt it, Nina?" I said quietly.

"O dear, yes. There was Buttons—that was our page, you know—I loved him dearly, but papa sent him away. Then there was Dick, the groom, but he laughed at me, and I suffered misery!", and she struck a tragic French attitude. "There is to be company here to-morrow," she added, rattling on with childish naivete, "and papa's sweetheart—Blanche Marabout—is to be here. You know they say she is to be my mamma."

What thrill was this shot through me? But I rose calmly, and administering a slight correction to the child, left the apartment.

Blunderbore House, for the next week, was the scene of gaiety and merriment. That portion of the mansion closed with a grating was walled up, and the midnight shrieks no longer troubled me.

But I felt more keenly the degradation of my situation. I was obliged to help Lady Blanche at her toilette and help her to look beautiful. For what! To captivate him? Oh—no, no—but why this sudden thrill and faintness? Did he really love her? I had seen him pinch and swear at her. But I reflected that he had thrown a candlestick at my head, and my foolish heart was reassured.

It was a night of festivity, when a sudden message obliged Mr. Rawjester to leave his guests for a few hours. "Make yourselves merry, idiots," he added, under his breath, as he passed me. The door closed and he was gone.

An half hour passed. In the midst of the dancing a shriek was heard, and out of the swaying crowd of fainting women and excited men, a wild figure strode into the room. One glance showed it to be a highwayman, heavily armed, holding a pistol in each hand.

"Let no one pass out of this room!" he said, in a voice of thunder. "The house is surrounded and you cannot escape. The first one who crosses yonder threshhold will be shot like a dog. Gentlemen, I'll trouble you to approach, in single file, and hand me your purses and watches."

Finding resistance useless, the order was ungraciously obeyed.

"Now, ladies, please to pass up your jewelry and trinkets."

The order was still more ungraciously complied with. As Blanche handed to the bandit captain her bracelet, she endeavored to conceal a diamond necklace, the gift of Mr. Rawjester, in her bosom. But, with a demoniac grin, the powerful brute tore it from its concealment, and, administering a hearty box on the ear of the young girl, flung her aside.

It was now my turn. With a beating heart, I made my way to the robber chieftain, and sank at his feet. "Oh, sir, I am nothing but a poor governess, pray let me go."

"Oh, ho! A governess? Give me your last month's wages, then. Give me what you have stolen from your master!" and he laughed fiendishly.

I gazed at him quietly, and said, in a low voice, "I have stolen nothing from you, Mr. Rawjester!"

"Ah, discovered! Hush! Listen, girl!" he hissed, in a fiercer whisper, "utter a syllable to frustrate my plans and you die—aid me, and—" but he was gone.

In a few moments the party, with the exception of myself, were gagged and locked in the cellar. The next moment torches were applied to the rich hangings, and the house was in flames. I felt a strong hand seize me, and bear me out in the open air and place me upon the hillside, where I could overlook the burning mansion. It was Mr. Rawjester.

"Burn!" he said, as he shook his fist at the flames. Then sinking on his knee before me, he said hurriedly:

"Mary Jane, I love you; the obstacles to our union are or will be soon removed. In yonder mansion were confined my three crazy wives. One of them, as you know, attempted to kill me! Ha! this is vengeance! But will you be mine?"

I fell, without a word, upon his neck.

The State Guard party, given on Thursday evening (Thanks, giving,) was a decided success. Before the dancing commenced prizes were awarded to the ladies and gentlemen who had made the best shots at the target-practice during the morning of the same day. The ladies who took the prizes looked so pleasant and well-disposed as to melt away the first impression that the State Guards are training up a troop of Misses Harris in our midst.

The San Francisco Fire Department's second annual ball will be given on Thursday evening December 28th, at Union Hall. If ever the capacity of the hall will be tested, it will probably be on this occasion. The interested parties claim it will be the "Ball of the season," and we believe them; for the list of managers published with the advertisement elsewhere is a complete directory of all the good fellows in town, and out of it. There are some scores of them, and if such a combination could not set a good ball in motion, we don't know what could.

Mechanics' Institute Anniversary Ball.—The festival of this most worthy society will be held at Union Hall on Thursday evening next. The gentlemen having the immediate supervision of the ball have been very successful in the disposal of tickets, and in the happy completion of all the arrangements of the ball, and it is expected that the attendance at Union Hall will be only second in numbers to that at their late fair.

Madam Bishop's Concerts.—The two first of Madam Anna Bishop's farewell concerts were finely attended. Madam Bishop was in excellent voice, and sang in her usual faultless style; Signor Carmino Morley did "excellent well," and Mrs. Marriner and Mr. Lascelles fully sustained their parts in the varied programme.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street, has just published "Come in and Shut the Door" and the "Ballo in Maschera Quadrille." The merits of both pieces must be familiar to the public.

THE STORM IN THE MOUNTAINS.

A NIGHT OF TERROR.

IN the fall of 1846, I was travelling eastward in a stage-coach from Pittsburg over the mountains. My fellow passengers were two gentlemen and a lady. The elder gentleman's appearance interested me exceedingly. In years he seemed about thirty; in air and manner he was calm, dignified and polished; and the contour of his features was singularly intellectual. He conversed freely on general topics, until the road became more abrupt and precipitous; but on my directing his attention to the great altitude of a precipice, on the verge of which our coach wheels were leisurely rolling, there came a marked change over his countenance. His eyes, so lately filled with the light of mild intelligence, became wild, restless and anxious; the mouth twitched spasmodically, and the forehead beaded with a cold perspiration. With a sharp, convulsive shudder, he turned his gaze from the giddy height, and clutching my arm tightly with both hands, he clung to me like a drowning man.

"Use this cologne," said the lady, handing me a bottle, with the instinctive goodness of her sex.

I sprinkled a little on his face, and soon he became somewhat more composed; but it was not until we had traversed the mountain and descended to the country beneath, that his fine features relaxed from their perturbed look, and assumed the placid, quiet dignity I had first noticed.

"I owe an apology to the lady," said he, with a bland smile and gentle inclination of the head to our fair companion, "and some explanation to my fellow travellers also, and perhaps I cannot better acquit myself of the double debt, than by recounting the cause of my recent agitation."

"It may pain your feelings," delicately urged the lady.

"On the contrary, it will relieve them," was the reply.

Having signified our several desires to hear more, the traveller then proceeded:

At the age of eighteen I was light of heart, light of foot, and I fear (here he smiled) light of head. A fine property on the right bank of the Ohio acknowledged me as sole owner. I was hastening home to enjoy it, and delighted to get free from a college life. The month was October; the air was bracing, and the mode of conveyance, a stage coach like this, only more cumbrous. The other passengers were few—but three in number—an old, gray-headed planter of Louisiana, his daughter, a joyous, bewitching creature, about seventeen, and his son, about ten years of age. They were just returning from France, of which the young lady discoursed in terms so eloquent, as to absorb my entire attention.

The father was taciturn, but the daughter was vivacious by nature, and we soon became so mutually pleased with each other, she as a talker, I as a listener, that it was not until a sudden flash of lightning, and a heavy dash of rain against the coach-windows, elicited an exclamation from my charming companion, that I noticed how night passed on. Presently there was a low rumbling sound, and then several tremendous peals of thunder, accompanied by successive flashes of lightning. The rain descended in torrents, and an angry wind began to howl and moan through the forest trees.

I looked from the window of our vehicle. The night was dark as ebony, but the lightning revealed the danger of our road. We were on the edge of a frightful precipice. I could see at intervals, huge jutting rocks far away down on the sides, and the sight made me solicitous for the fate of my fair companion. I thought of the mere hair-breadths that were between us and eternity; a single little rock in the track of our coach-wheels, a tiny billet of wood, a stray limb of a tempest-torn tree, a restive horse, or a careless driver—any of these might hurl us from our sublunary existence with the speed of thought.

"'Tis a perfect tempest," said the lady, as I withdrew my head from the window. "How I love a sudden storm. There is something so grand among the winds when fairly loose among the hills. I never encounter a night like this, but Byron's magnificent description of a thunder storm in the Jura immediately recurs to my mind. But dare we on the mountains yet?"

"Yes, we have begun the ascent."

"Is it not said to be dangerous?"

"By no means," I replied, in as easy a tone as I could assume.

"I only wish it was daylight, that we might enjoy the mountain scenery. But, Jesu Marie! what's that?"

And she covered her eyes from the glare of a sheet of lightning that illuminated the rugged mountain with brilliant intensity. Peal after peal of crashing thunder instantly succeeded; there was a very volume of rain coming down at each thunder-burst, and with the deep moaning of an animal, as if in dreadful agony, breaking upon my ears, I found that the coach had come to a dead halt.

Louise, my beautiful fellow traveller, became pale as ashes. She fixed her searching eyes on mine with a look of anxious dread, and turning to her father, hurriedly remarked: "We are on the mountains!"

"I reckon so," was the unconcerned reply.

With instant activity, I put my head through the window, and called to the driver, but the only answer was the heavy moaning of an agonized animal borne past me by the swift wings of the tempest. I seized the handle of the door and strained at it in vain; it would not yield a jot. At that instant I felt a cold hand on mine, and heard Louise's voice faintly articulating in my ear, the appalling words:

"The coach is being moved backwards!"

God in Heaven! never shall I forget the fierce agony with which I tugged at that coach-door, and called on the driver in tones that rivalled the force of the blast, while the dreadful conviction was burning in my brain that the coach was being moved slowly backwards.

What followed was of such swift occurrence, that it seems to me like a frightful dream.

I rushed against the door with all my force, but it mocked my utmost efforts. One side of our vehicle was sensibly going down, down. The moaning of the agonized animal became deeper and deeper, and I knew from the desperate plunges against his traces, that it was one of our horses. Crash upon crash of heavy thunder rolled over the mountain, and vivid sheets of lightning played around our devoted carriage, as if in glee at our misery. By its light I could see for a moment—only for a moment—the old planter standing erect, with his hands on his son and daughter, his eyes raised to Heaven, and his lips moving like one in prayer. I could see Louise turn her ashy cheeks and superb eyes towards me, as if imploring my protection; and I could see the bold glance of the young boy flashing indignant defiance at the descending carriage, the war of elements, and the awful danger that awaited him. There was a roll of thunder, a desperate plunge, as if of an animal in the last throes of dissolution, a harsh grating jar, a sharp, piercing scream of mortal terror, and I had but time to clasp Louise firmly with one hand round the waist, and seize the leather fastenings attached to the coach-roof with the other, when we were precipitated over the precipice.

I can distinctly recollect preserving consciousness, for a few seconds of time, how rapidly my breath was being exhausted; but of that tremendous descent, I soon lost all further individual knowledge by a concussion so violent that I was instantly deprived of sense and motion.

On an humble couch, in an humble room of a small country house, I next opened my eyes in this world of light and shade, of joy and sorrow, of mirth and madness; gentle hands smoothed my pillow, gentle feet glided across my chamber, and a gentle voice hushed for a time all my questionings. I was kindly tended by a fair young girl about sixteen, who refused for several days to hold any intercourse with me. At length, one morning, finding myself sufficiently recovered to sit up, I insisted on learning the result of the accident.

"You were discovered," said she, "sitting on a ledge of rock, amidst the branches of a shattered tree, clinging to a part of the roof of your broken coach with one hand, and to the insensible form of a lady with the other."

"And the lady," I gasped, scanning the girl's face, with an earnestness that caused her to draw back and blush.

"She was saved, sir, by the same means that saved you—the friendly tree."

"And her father and brother?" I impatiently demanded.

"Were both found crushed to pieces at the bottom of the precipice, a great way below the place where my father and Uncle Joe got you and the lady. We buried their bodies in one grave close by the clover-patch down in our meadow ground."

"Poor Louise!—poor orphan! God pity you!" I muttered, in broken tones, utterly unconscious that I had a listener.

"God pity her, indeed, sir," said the young girl, with a gush of heartfelt sympathy. "Would you like to see her?" she added.

"Take me to her," I replied.

I found the orphan bathed in bitter tears, by the grave of her buried kindred. She received me with sorrowful sweetness of manner. I will not detain your attention by detailing the efforts I made to win her from her great grief, but briefly acquaint you that I at last succeeded in inducing her to leave her forlorn home in the South; and that twelve months after the dreadful occurrence which I have related, we stood at the altar together as man and wife. She still lives to bless my love with her smiles, and my children with her good precepts; but on the anniversary of that terrible night she secludes herself in her room, and devotes the hours of darkness to solitary prayer.

"As for me," added the traveller, while a faint flush tinged his noble brow at the avowal, "as for me, that accident has made a physical coward of me, at the sight of a mountain precipice."

"But the driver," urged our lady passenger, who had attended to the recital of the story with much attention; "what became of the driver? or did you ever learn the reason of his deserting his post?"

"His body was found on the road, within a few yards of the spot where the coach went over. He had been struck dead by the same flash of lightning that blinded the restive horse."

OLD ENGLISH MADRIGALS.

"SHALL, I, WASTING IN DESPAIR."

SHALL I, wasting in despair,
Die because a woman's fair?
Or make pale my cheeks with care,
'Cause another's rosy are?
Be she fairer than the day,
Or the flowery meads in May,
If she be not so to me,
What care I how fair she be?

Should my heart be grieved or pined
'Cause I see a woman kind?
Or a well-disposed nature
Joined with a lovely feature?
Be she meeker, kinder, than Turtle-dove or pelican,
If she be not so to me,
What care I how kind she be?

Shall a woman's virtues move
Me to perish for her love?
Or, her well-deservings known,
Make me quite forget my own?
Be she with that goodness blest
Which may gain her name of best,
If she be not so to me,
What care I how great she be?

Great or good, or kind or fair,
I will ne'er the more despair:
If she love me, this believe,
I will die ere she shall grieve:
If she slight me when I woo,
I can scorn and let her go:
For, if she be not for me,
What care I for whom she be?

[George Wither.

"THERE IS A GARDEN IN HER FACE."

THERE is a garden in her face,
Where roses and white lilies grow;
A heavenly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do grow;
There cherries grow that none may buy,
Till cherry-ripe themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do inclose
Of orient pearl a double row,
Which when her lovely laughter shows,
They look like rose-buds filled with snow;
Yet them no peer nor prince may buy,
Till cherry-ripe themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still,
Her brows like bended bows do stand,
Threatening with piercing frowns to kill
All that approach with eye or hand
Those sacred cherries to come nigh,
Till cherry-ripe themselves do cry.

[Richard Allison.

"TAKE, OH TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY."

TAKE, oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn!
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn,
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but sealed in vain.

Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow,
Which thy frozen bosom bears!
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears;
But first my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

Shakspeare.

CUPID AND CAMPASPE.

CUPID and my Campaspe played
At cards for kisses! Cupid paid:
He stakes his quiver, bow and arrows,
His mother's dove, and team of sparrows;
Loses them too; then down he throws
The coral of his lip, the rose
Growing on 's cheek (but none knows how!)
With these, the crystal of his brow,
And then the dimple on his chin;
All these did my Campaspe win:
At last he set her both his eyes—
She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
O Love! has she done this to thee?
What shall, alas! become of me?

[John Lyle.

A DITTY.

MY true love hath my heart, and I have his,
By just exchange, one to the other given,
I hold his dear, and mine he cannot miss,
There never was a better bargain driven:
My true love hath my heart, and I have his.

His heart in me keeps him and me in one,
My heart in him his thoughts and senses guides:
He loves my heart, for once it was his own,
I cherish his because in me it bides:
My true love hath my heart, and I have his.

[Sir Philip Sidney.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proofsheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to France, 15 cents for each ½ ounce. Prepayment optional.

Letters to other foreign countries vary in rate according to the route by which they are sent.

Letters to any part of the United States, 3 cents for each ½ ounce or part thereof.

Advertised letters, 1 cent in addition to the regular rates.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO
No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.
In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.

First and Highest Premium
TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.
In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.
First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,
AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,
11 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE
—OF—
Fine Clothing,
TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets,
San Francisco.

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

TRIAL IS THE BEST
AND
Surest Test of Merit!

OVER TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND
(200,000)

HAVE BEEN SOLD
Since they were Introduced to Public Notice,

F. L. TILESTON, Agent,
Corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets,
se30 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

R. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Importing and Wholesale
DRUGGISTS,
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO,
AND
SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,
To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND SAN FRANCISCO.
IMPORTERS OF
Dental AND Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizors, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION
☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the
STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.
Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.
The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,
CONGRESS HALL,
ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11 3m

---

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.
Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS
Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN
HORSE-POWER
FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the
SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER
Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.
☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,
No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,
jy29-3m San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

HUNT'S PATENT
Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER
Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,
jy29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

THE MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,
$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3.500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - -	6.500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14 3m

OVERSTOCKED!
AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO
UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET
Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of
Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE
OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOODS
—AT—
LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

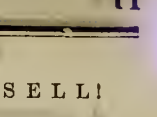
GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

NOTICE TO SHIPPERS
TO
Red Bluff.

ON AND AFTER SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28th, the steamers of the California Steam Navigation Company
WILL LEAVE SACRAMENTO
FOR RED BLUFF,
ON SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY,
UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

se23-tf J. WHITNEY, JR., President.

CALEB M. SICKLER,



DEALER IN
Stoves and Tin Ware,
422 KEARNEY STREET,
BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,
SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES.
se23 3m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
se30 3m San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,
Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

dc17-3m

LITERARY NOTES.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Round Table gives the following singular anecdote in regard to "Oliver Twist": Bentley's Miscellany was commenced on the first of January, 1837, and Charles Diekens, then in the first flush of his fame—for Sketches by Boz and the Pickwick Papers had just been published aud were in every one's hands—was made its editor at a salary said to exceed ten thousand dollars per annum, besides separate payment of twenty-five guineas a sheet for whatever he might please to contribute as an author. "Oliver Twist" was commenced in the February number, with illustrations by George Cruikshank. The seventh chapter euds with the flight of Oliver from Mr. Towerberry and that terrible beadle, Mr. Bumble, and his bidding farewell to his poor little friend Diek, the parochial orphan, to whom he says: "I am running away. They beat and ill-use me, Dick, and I am going to seek my fortune some long way off, I don't know where." At the opening of the eighth chapter, however, Oliver is on his way to London; and at its close he is an intimate of Fagin the Jew, and companion of that free-and easy young gentleman, Mr. John Dawkins (commonly known as the "Artful Dodger,") and a few other choice but youthful aspirants of the same school. When the Quarterly Review critieised the book, it said that Mr. Dickens had made a great mistake in not keeping Oliver Twist in the country, instead of taking him to the thieves' haunts in London, which had been described over and over again. I happen to know that Dickens originally intended to carry out the promise of his title, "Oliver Twist; or, the Parish Boy's Progress,") and to trace the life, struggles, and successes of what Miss Braddon calls "a clod." He chauged his purpose; and George Cruikshank himself told me why. As a little bit of literary history I place it upon the Round Table. In London I was intimate with the brothers Cruikshank, Robert and George, but more particularly with the latter. Having called upon him one day at his house (it then was in Mydleton Terrace, Pentonville,) I had to wait while he was finishing an etching for which a printer's boy was waiting. To wile away the time, I gladly complied with his suggestion that I shonld look over a portfolio crowded with etchings, proofs, and drawings which lay upon the sofa. Among these, carelessly tied together in a wrap of brown paper, was a series of some twenty-five to thirty drawings, very carefully finished, through most of which were carried the now well-known portraits of Fagin, Bill Sykes and his dog, Naney, the Artful Dodger, and Master Charles Bates—all well known to the readers of "Oliver Twist." There was no mistake about it, and when Cruikshank turned round, his work finished, I said as much. He told me that it had long been in his mind to show the life of a London thief by a series of drawings, engraved by himself, in which, without a single liné of letter-press, the story would be strikingly and clearly told. "Dickens," he continued, "dropped in here one day just as you have done, and, while waiting until I could speak with him, took up that identical portfolio and ferreted out that bundle of drawings. When he came to that one which represents Fagin in the condemned cell, he studied it for half an hour, and told me that he was tempted to change the whole plot of his story; not to carry Oliver Twist through adventures in the country, but to take him up into the thieves' dens in London, show what their life was, and bring Oliver safely through it without sin or shame. I consented to let him write up as many of the designs as he thought would suit his purpose; and that was the way in which Fagin, Sykes, and Nancy were created. My drawings suggested them rather than individuality suggesting my drawings."

THE Round Table asks: What if it should turn out that one day American authors should be vainly petitioning Albion to protect their rights of authorship, as now Albion vainly appeals to America? Observe the following advertisement, now in all the papers:

YANKEE FUN AND FROLIC BOOKS.
Price One Shilling. Colored Wrappers.
Artemus Ward: His Book.
Artemus Ward: His Travels. (Next week.)
Major Jack Downing.
Petroleum V. Nasby.
Orpheus C. Kerr.
The Biglow Papers. (Next week.)
The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table.
John Phœnix. (From the Twelfth American Edition.)
J. Godfrey Saxe's Poems. (From the twenty-eighth edition.) London: S. O. Beeton, 248 Straud, W. C.

NOTICE.—All these books are published without the authority of the several American authors. They are printed without their leave or sanction, precisely as Mr. Beeton's books, and Englishmen's works generally, are printed in America without their leave or sanction.

Apropos of this subject, the Nation says: In the great case involving the copyright of Washington Irving's writiugs, between Mr. Murray and Mr. H. G. Bohn, it is understood that the expenses of each party were over £2,000, and a much larger outlay was impending, by the issue of a commission to collect evideuce in America, etc., when the dispute was ended by a compromise, which left the legal principles at stake as far from being settled as ever. Mr. Beeton, of coursc, says his object is to make the state of things so bad that the United States will be forced to mend it, by the adoption of an international copyright, for the sake of their authors; but sueh general philanthropic professions have often been found before now in company with individual selfishness.

MUSICAL ITEMS.

WE copy from the New York Weekly Review the following items: We find it reported that the censor of theatrical works, at the Grand Opera of Paris, has not allowed the performanee of La Forza del Destino, on aecount of the libretto, and therefore the libretto will have either to be remodelled, or the opera abandoned.

A NEW theatre, to be called the Theatre des Fantasies Parisiennes, is in course of erection on the Boulevnid des Italiens, on the site of the ancient "Concerts des Beaux Arts." M. Martinet is the speculator. M. Choudens, the apostle of Gounod, to whom we owe in a great measure the world-wide popularity of Faust, and the now evident suceess of La Reine de Saba, has taken M Cherouvrier's Rois des Mines under his protection. This enterprising publisher has also in hand a Mass, or as the composer entitles it, a "Petit Oratorio," by M. Gounod, which is said to contain some of the writer's best inspirations The name of it is Tobias.

THE King Victor Emanuel, another friend of music, has done an act of magnanimity, which, as we sincereiy hope, will not hurt him seriously. He has given the eldest son of Giuglini, the tenor, the tremendous pension of 450 franes, or ninety dollars, in gold, annually, in order to enable him to continue his studies. This is a really royal gift! In America, a private citizen would do ten times as much.

THERE is in Paris now a literary quarrel about the composer of the celebrated Rakoczy March. It was said that that march was composed, or rather completed, by Wenzel Raczicka of Pest, about 1700, after a march which was played by a band of gipsies; but new inquiries seem to prove that the march in its usual form was written by an Israelite, Marcus Roszavolygi of Pesth, who died in 1848.

L'Africaine is continued at the Paris opera, and Mme. Saxe, whose appearance is said to be just as enormous as her weight, attracts the greatest attention. It would appear that she looks like Adah Isaac Menken, without a horse.

THE tenor Pancani and Mdme. Kenneth have joined M. Gatti's operatic company, which opened at the Cirque, Brussels.

THE principal solo players of the Grand Opera inteud to sue the impressario in a court of law for higher wages.

LABLACHE'S granddaughter has married the singer Rokitansky of Vienna.

THE Abbé Liszt is expected in England shortly.

THE Round Table has the following: Verdi has lately writteu a quartet for stringed instruments, and a grand symphony for full orchestra.

Miss BRADDON, in her new novel, Sir Jasper's Tenant, makes the baronet compliment his daughter on the manner in which she manages the cinque pated passages in a Beethoven sonata. Miss Braddon probably meant to say "syncopated."

BALFE, the composer, is in the south of France visiting his daughter, who is the wife of the French Duke of Frins.

MR. SOLOMON WILLARD, the arehitect and superintendent of the Bunker Hill monument, has been made the subject of a memoir, by Mr. William W. Wheildou, which has beeu put into circulation by the Bunker Hill Monument Association. Mr. Willard appears to have been a most respectable and exemplary man, and he certainly erected a most respectable monument. Moreover, he lived in Boston. Yet it is difficult to comprehend his title to be thus ostentatiously commemorated. Respectable Bostonians are not so very rare, that one of them must needs merit two hundred and sixty pages of biography. The common idea, indeed, is that all Bostonians are the happy possessors of swallow-tailed black coats and gold-headed canes, and that they all write for the Atlantic Monthly. Mr. Willard, it is true, surpassed his contemporaries, in the one particular of having devised the Bunker Hill Mouument; and, for this reason, it is clear that his name, as architect, ought to be inscribed upon some portion of that imposing structure. But Mr. Wheildon's tedious memoir is a wholly superfluous tribute to excellent mediocrity, besides being a burden upon the reading public. The work is dedicated "to the Ladies of Boston and vicinity," and we dare say they will appreciate the compliment, when they read in its nicely printed paper, such gems of anecdote as the following: "The land for the cemetery was given by Mr. James Hall, at Mr. Willard's solicitation. Mr. Hall was a very wealthy man—a bachelor—and had unbounded faith in Mr. Williard. After the cemetery was laid out, Mr. Williard suggested to him that an iron fence for the front was needed. He inquired what it would cost. Mr. Willard replied, 'about a thousand dollars,' and Mr. Hall, jocosely remarking, 'you have got the land, and now you want money,' gave him the desired amount." Humorous Hall! Happy "ladies of Boston and vicinity!"—New York Review.

[For the Californian.]

A THANKSGIVING RETROSPECT.

WELL! Charge your glasses!—Softly, friends,
The toast we drink to-night:
"The vacant chair," that holds the post
Of honor on our right.
"The vacant chair"—why now so grave
Your looks once bright with love?
What though our circle narrows here,
It widens still above.

We drink to him who joins the host
That left our hearth before—
Dear hands that once have clasped our own
Shall touch his on that shore;
The grandeire whose unflinching soul
Went up from Concord fight,
Shall welcome him whose youthful arm
Last year struck home for Right!

What though he lived where barren hills
Were white with winter snows,
Where man through stubborn toil alone
To higher nature rose:
He sleeps where never click of bail
Or ice their changes ring,
But consonants of Winter yield
To open-vowels of Spring.

Above him drifts the cotton bloom
Knee-deep about his grave;
The shroud that veils his southern bed
The north-wind never gave.
His sable mourners tread a shore
Enfranchised from their toil—
Thank God! (through valor such as his)
Our own—no foreign soil!

Then charge your glasses full, and pour
A stream as red and free
As that which from his youthful veins
Was poured for Liberty.
To-night no sorrow drown our thanks—
To-morrow tears may fall
For him who fills the vacant chair,
Yet sleeps near Tybee's wall.

BRET.

IN Lisbon, a rare honor has been bestowed upon the celebrated tenor Mongini, who was invited to the palace of the king. His majesty sang personally and most eagerly the duo from Moise with Signor Mongini, while the infante Don Sebastian sang the duo from Il Bravo with the artist. Finally the king and the infante sang a duo, and the king several solos. The king is said to sing not badly for a king, but he is convinced that it is a great deal easier to be a king than a singer.

THE RUSH AT KERBY, BYRNE & Co's.—New Yorkers are familiar with the great rush of people that is always seen when the "great openings" take place at Stewart's palace, on Broadway, but not till recently have we had anything of the kind. The great arrival and opening of rich shawls, cloak and dress goods, linen goods, rich fancy goods, and blankets, that have been imported by Kerby, Byrne, & Co.—many of them made expressly to their order—has caused an excitement, lately, that is somewhat similar to the rush at Stewart's, in Broadway; and this week the crowds at this fashionable establishment have been so great that the streets were blocked up to such a degree as to make it almost impossible to pass. We advise people to go early in the morning, and thus avoid the crowd, for the goods now selling are the most desirable and most elegant ever offered in this market. In addition to all this attraction and display, all visitors and purchasers are waited upon with courtesy and politeness; the salesmen in this establishment are proverbial for this accomplishment. People are never urged to buy, and the one-price system changes the trouble of shopping into a pleasure. Go to Kerby, Byrne & Co's, if you wish to make purchases that will prove satisfactory. See advertisement.—San Francisco Daily Morning Call.

IT is an indisputable fact that more disease and suffering is entailed upon children by impure blood in parents than from any other cause. Heads of families owe it to their posterity to see to it that their blood is kept free from all poisonous matter that would have a tendency to produce disease, suffering, and perhaps death, to their offspring. Adams' Blood Purifier, prepared by Samuel Adams, San Francisco, is strictly a vegetable preparation, and is scientifically prepared from the choicest and most efficacious blood purifying remedies known to the vegetable world, and, if used according to directions, will restore the blood to its proper condition in a very short time.

A VERITY.—The choicest and most effective remedies from the "Laboratory of Nature," are embraced in Newell's Pulmonary Syrup, a certain, safe, and speedy cure for all diseases of the Throat and Lungs. It is equally effective in adult or infantile cases, and can be used with impunity and certainty of relief in all subjects of Pulmonary affections. Use no other, if this most desirable preparation can be had.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & Co's great sale of dry goods at reduced prices, for the purpose of clearing out their full stock of importations, is quite the sensation of the week with the ladies. Their large store is thronged from morning to night. The immense business they are doing is nothing wonderful, but is owing to their selling the goods cheap, and letting the public know by liberally advertising it, that they are doing so.

TO BEAUTIFY THE COMPLEXION.—Use Davidson's Circassian Bloom. It will relieve the worst cases of Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Moth, Sun-burn, etc. It imparts a freshness and Transparency to the Complexion which is perfectly natural, and without injury to the skin.

MOSGROVE & BLAKELY'S new Dry Goods Store is in Colton's building, 222 Third street, between Howard and Tehama. Their stock consists in part of the following goods, all of which will be found to be of the very best materials, and at prices which must commaud the notice of purchasers:

Dress Goods—A large assortment tastefully selected. Their Empress Cloths, Poplins, Melanges, Chenes, and particularly that rich new fabric, "Moonlight on the Lake," cannot he surpassed for Ladies' Fall and Winter Suits.

Hoyle's genuine English Calicoes.

Irish Linen Goods—All from the celebrated manufacturers, Richardson Sons & Owden, Belfast.

Mission and Eastern Blankets and Flanuels.

Ladies and Gents' Furnishing Goods; and a large assortment of all goods usually kept hy a first class Dry Goods Store.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines, getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

VISIT Haskell's Mammoth Tea Store, and examine the splendid display of choicest Teas, Wines and Greceries, now selling at greatly reduced prices, at Wholesale and Retail.

Store fronts on Market and Sutter streets, below the Market House. Open every evening until seven o'clock, and on Saturdays until ten P. M

DENTIST WORK.—Messrs. Knowles & Clark have an improved method of combining their gold and vulcanite material in the manufacture of dentistry, which renders the work superior in finish and durability. The samples of their handiwork on exhibition at the late Fair were much admired, and we observe that they were awarded a special premium silver medal.—Mining and Scientific Press.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

A TRUE STORY.

DEDICATED TO THE SICK.

THERE dwelt in Sacramento a pale, bilious mechanic,
His muscles were strengthless, his blood it was chill;
And the wife of his bosom believed, in her panic,
The husband she worshipped was hopelessly ill.
Seeking daily for help, in her wifely devotion,
All vainly she tried pill, powder and potion—
Till at last, when a prey to grief's wildest emotion,
Of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS she heard from a friend.

She purchased the cordial, half hoping, half fearing,
A prayer on her lip and a tear in her eye;
And taking his hand, with words kindly and cheering,
Besought him the tonic for her sake to try.
As he drank, a new life through his system seemed stealing,
Each following draft did its mission of bearing,
Until, strong in health and most grateful in feeling,
He told the "true story" here twined into song.

It is also proper to state that the Bitters are sold exclusively in glass, and never, under any circumstances, by the gallon or barrel. Imposters and imitators are abroad, and the only safeguard the public have against them is to see that the Bitters they buy have the engraved label and note of hand of Messrs. Hostetter & Smith, and their proprietary stamp over the cork of the bottle.

A DAINTY BRANCH OF ART.—A high reputation awaits Mrs. Read for the exquisite workmanship and general adaptability to their purpose of the Ladies' Skirt Supporters and Chest Expanders, of which she made such fine display at the late Fair. Her "Lady's Bust" is another aid to feminine beauty, which confers perfection on the wearer. Mrs. Read's establishment, 109 Montgomery street, is richly worth a visit.—San Francisco Sunday Mercury.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and militar at the shortest notice: also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldbush & Co., 307 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

THE LATEST NEWS!—Haskell & Co. are selling Coal Oil at $1 per gallon; 6 pounds Crushed Sugar for $1; 9 pounds Brown Sugar for $1; 3½ pounds Green Coffee, $1; 5 pounds Currants, $1; 4 pounds New Raisins, $1; New Citron, 40 cents per pound; 8 pounds Canary seed for $1; 10 pounds Soda Crackers, $1; 8 pounds Santa Clara Butter Crackers, $1; good Oolong Tea, 75 cents; Japan Teas, 75 to 90 cents, our Maudarin Oolong of the new crop, $1; the best Comet Tea, $1 10, or $1 per pound by the box; Maudarin Mixture (green and black,) 1; at the Mammoth Tea Store, fronting on Market and Sutter streets, below the Market. ☞ Goods delivered promptly. Open Evenings until after the Holidays.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for best the card pictures, and large photographs.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

TOYS, REGARDLESS OF COST!

KOHLER SELLING OFF!

THE ENDLESS VARIETY OF

Toys and Fancy Articles,

IN KOHLER'S

Washington Street Store,

(NO. 620,)

MUST BE SOLD AT ANY PRICE,

BETWEEN THIS AND CHRISTMAS, AND

THE BUSINESS CLOSED UP!

TO RENT—The Store now occupied by
A. KOHLER.
de2-4t

BLOOD PURIFIER.

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

The best Blood Purifier yet known. It expels all Mercurial and Constitutional Diseases, and gives Health and Strength.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
no19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

GUNS, RIFLE PIS, STOLS, ETC.

WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in us. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, je10-6 Corner of Pine and Sansome street.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 1m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY. J. P. BOGARDUS. WM. J. INGHAM.

☞ No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN,

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

TOYS! TOYS! TOYS!

BASKET AND WILLOW WARE,

FANCY GOODS, &c.

The Best Selected and Largest Assorted Stock EVER BEFORE IN CALIFORNIA.

FOR SALE CHEAP BY THE CASE OR DOZEN,

—AT—

THURNAUER & ZINN'S,

320 and 322 Battery street,

Between Commercial and Clay streets,

se16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

J. PEIRCE,

415, 417, and 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the

FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM

FOR

Furniture,

AND THE

FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM

FOR THE

BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

☞ Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

se16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

---

25 PER CENT. SAVED

IS 50 PER CENT. MADE!

PURCHA- SERS OF

Toys and Fancy

Goods, can save 25 per cent. by buying of

Feldbush & Co.,

307 CALIFORNIA STREET.

THEY ARE NOW RECEIVING their importations o

FALL GOODS,

per steamer and sailing vessels from all parts of the world.

For sale by the case or dozen. Also 100 cases of assorted Toys. FIELDBUSH & CO., 307 California street

RETAIL STORE, 307 Montgomery street, (Russ House Block.) uc28 3

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,

MERCHANDISE,

FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,

ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

SINGER MANUACTURING CO.

SEWING MACHINES,

139

MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Morro—"The Singer Machines are the only Machines that can Sew all kinds of Cloth, and with all kinds of thread."

☞ 75,000 ☜

MACHINES SOLD IN TWO YEARS!

The almost incredible increase in the sale of the Singer Machine during the past two years is owing to the popularity of the LETTER A TRANSVERSE SHUTTLE Family Machine, which was introduced in 1860, since which time it has earned and established a reputation for family uses equal to the celebrated manufacturing machines of this firm, which are generally acknowledged even by dealers in other sewing machines, to be unequalled for such purposes.

WILLIAM BRODERICK,

General Agent for the Singer

au19-3m Manufacturing Co.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25-3m

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,

my6 3m Proprietor.

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,

For Wholesale and Retail Trade,

ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,

AT QUINCY HALL,

NOS. 545, 547, 549,

Washington Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

ac30 3m

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life

INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26-1m

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

DEC. 9TH, - - - - - - COLORADO,

Captain Watkins.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,

jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

LADIES, ATTENTION!

MRS. READ'S

NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest

EXPANDERS,

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BRACES, with Suspenders attached; ABDOMINAL SUPPORTERS, BANDAGES, BUSTS, etc

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET,

UP STAIRS. ROOMS 3 AND 4.

Physicians are respectfully invited to call and examine her articles.

All orders promptly attended to. my27 1f

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. H. WARD & SON,

NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca

jc30 3m

THE ONLY LIVING

ASTROLOGER.

Go and see the Natural Gifted Astrologer, Prof. Cohen, 530 California street. He only can give you true information as to the Past, Present and Future; on Business Affairs, Law Suits, Matrimony, Love, Absent Friends, Sickness, etc. He tells the events of your whole life, and how to avoid trouble.

A large number of people have been benefited by his knowledge. As an evidence of his reputation, he has received upwards of 18,000 consultations here since his residence of five years in San Francisco.

N. B.—When consultation is had it will not be necessary to give the age. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart.

☞ Sickness will be discovered and cured through his science, only known by himself. se16 3m.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND

MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000.
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

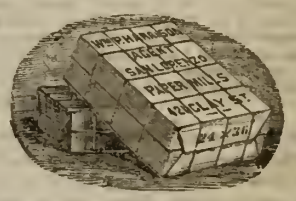
Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19-3m



GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my26

FIRE, MARINE, LIFE, AND ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE.

We would respectfully call the attention of property owners to the increased facilities for Insurance which we are now prepared to offer, surpassing any agency in the world.

MARINE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Capital, - - - $7,000,000

Home Insurance Co., of N. Y., assets				- -	$4,000,000
Security	do	do	do	- -	2,000,000
Phenix	do	do	do	- -	1,000,000

War Risks and partial loss covered on the most favorable terms. Liberal rebates paid parties bringing business to this office. All losses paid in gold coin without any deduction.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Assets, - - - $10,000,000

Home Insurance Co., N. Y.		Washington Ins. Co., N. Y.
Phenix	no do	Security	do do
Arctic	do do	Hartford Fire	do do

LIFE INSURANCE.

Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. of Hartford :
Assets nearly - - - - - - $8,000,000
Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States : Assets - - - - - - - $1,000,000

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

New York Accident Insurance Company :
Capital - - - - - - $250,000

In the Fire Department we issue participation policies on all hazardous and not hazardous property, entitling the assured to 60 per cent. in the profits of the company, thereby lessening their premiums at least 30 per cent.

In the Life Department, the companies we represent are the best and cheapest in the world. Manuals descriptive of the various plans issued gratis to the public. No charge for physicians' examinations.

Agents in all the principal towns on this coast.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
GENERAL AGENTS.
au29

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14 3m

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15*TH OF EVERY MONTH.*

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1865.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES, VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR.

ON FRIDAY, - - - - DECEMBER 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

DR. C. W. MOORE'S Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16 3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO., PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT AMERICAN PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800
PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S STEAM PRINTING HOUSE, 533 CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
a28 44 Liedesdorff street San Francisco.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, state of California.

In the matter of the estate of RICHARD GRAHAM, deceased. Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of ELIZABETH GRAHAM, executrix of the last will and testament of Richard Graham, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees and devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said Richard Graham, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Monday, the eleventh day of December, A. D. 1865, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees and devisees of the said Richard Graham, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said eleventh day of December, A. D. 1865, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated November 8th, 1865. GEO. B. MERRILL.
no11 5t Attorney for Executrix.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled.

H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.
no11 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS: That I, BRIDGET STANNAH, wife of WILLIAM STANNAH, intend to make application to the Twelfth District Court of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on the

23*d day of December, A. D.* 1865, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, at the court room of said Court, in said city and county, for an order of said Court permitting her to carry on business in her own name and on her own account—the nature of the business to be carried on by virtue of such order being that of keeping a boarding and lodging house, and purchasing lots and houses to be used and occupied in that business, and erecting houses therefor. That for this purpose I am desirous of availing myself of the benefit of An Act to authorize married women to transact business in their own name as sole traders, approved April 12th, 1852, and of the acts amendatory thereof.

BRIDGET STANNAH.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for petitioner—Office, 636 Clay street. nov25 5t

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

M. H. GARLAND, & CO.,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

No. 765 Market street, near Fourth street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

ap22-tf

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Building Fund.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOAD OF TRUSTEES of the Mercantile Library Association, held October 10th, 1865, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the Trustees form themselves into a Committee of the Whole, to obtain Life Memberships and Donations, with a view of purchasing a lot and erecting a building thereon for the use of the Association.

The payment of one hundred dollars in gold coin secures a Life Membership, and it is hoped that the sum of twenty thousand dollars may be subscribed in this way alone. No subscriptions are binding unless the above sum shall be raised by Life Memberships and Donations before February 1, 1866. Subscription books may be found at the Library, or with any of the following members of the

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:

G. W. Bell.....President
*C. Wolcott Brooks.....Vice President
H. S Homans.....Corresponding Secretary
David Wilder.....Recording Secretary
John G. Clark.....Treasurer

J. H Wildes,	A. M. Ebbetts,
J. W. Cox,	F. D. Kellogg,
A. T. Green,	Chas. R. Bond,
Geo. Hewston, M. D.,	*Daniel Rogers,
F. L. Castle.

*On leave of absence. oc21-tf

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner:
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky. Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO

Corner of Bush and Powell streets.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
no18-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & C
my28 624 Clay street, San F

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE . . . . . PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES . . . . . STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON . . . . . TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, DEC. 9TH,
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE.

JANET PRIDE,

This Evening, December 9th,
For the Second Time in California, Tom Taylor and Chas. Reade's Sensation Drama entitled the SECRET CIPHER!

Or, THE CONSPIRATORS OF ULVERSONE!

Father Radcliff, (under the assumed name of Reuben Fisher).....G. C. Boniface
Sir Gervaise Bokewood.....C. R. Thorne, Jr
John Daw.....Harry Jackson
William.....Louis Aldrich
Ruth Revenscar, Letter Carrier.....Harry Jackson
Anne Masgrate, daughter of the Postmaster.....Mrs. Sophie Edwin

MONDAY EVENING, First Night of the Latest Irish Drama,

KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats $1 00
Parquet 50
Gallery . . . . . 25 cents
Private Boxes, ... $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

ANNIVERSARY BALL

OF THE

Mechanics' Institute,

TO BE HELD AT

UNION HALL,

ON THE EVENING OF DECEMBER 14, 1865.

Committee of Arrangements:

C. H. Harrison.....517 Front street.
D. A. Macdonald.....corner Market and Beale.
H. F. Williams.....626 Clay street.
Gardner Elliot.....2 Washington Market.
J. W. Reay.....319 California street.

Of whom Tickets may be had, and also from P. B. DEXTER, the Secretary of the Institute.

WILSON'S CELEBRATED BAND has been engaged for the occasion.

PRICE OF ADMISSION for a Gentleman and Ladies . . $2

☞ The Street Cars will run to and from the Hall during the night. no18 td

SPECIAL NOTICE.

IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE

GREAT REDUCTION

IN

THE PRICE OF COTTON

AT THE EAST,

Kerby, Byrne & Co.,

ARE NOW OFFERING:

5,000 yards 4-4 Preston Muslin, at 32½c.;
5,000 yards 4-3 Blackstone, at 35c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 Lonsdale, at 35c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 White Rock, at 37½c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 Wamsatta, at 40c.

AND

50,000 DOLLARS WORTH

OF

ALL OTHER KINDS OF DOMESTICS,

And Housekeeping Goods in Proportion.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
de9-1t NO. 7 MONTGOMERY STREET.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;
NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;
CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH.....Lessee and Manager.
JAMES DOWLING.....Stage Manager.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
FOR FAMILIES!
ADMISSION, 50 cents. Children half-price.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY, DEC. 9TH,
Positively for the Last Time,

Arrah na Pogue!

SATURDAY EVENING, DEC. 9TH,
Will be presented the Elegant Comedy, in 3 acts, entitled.

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND!

Major Wellington DeBoots..Mr. Charles Wheatleigh
Felix Fentherly.....Geo. Pauncefort
Mr. Icebrookn.....F. Percy
Mrs. Swandown.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Mrs. Featherly.....Miss Sallie Hinckley
Mrs. Major DeBoots.....Mrs. Judah
Funny.....Mrs. C. Wheatleigh

To conclude with the Screaming Farce of That Blessed Baby!

John Thomas.....H. D. Thompson
Frank Finnicke.....F. Percy
Mrs. Lever.....Mrs. Judah
Mary Jane.....Miss Sallie Hinckley

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $5 and $10.

No extra price for Reserved Seats. Doors open at 7 o'clock; Performance to commence at 8 o'clock.
Seats can be secured three days in advance.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES

OF

Standard Books,

ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on

Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of

ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!

CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE

Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

ELEGANT HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

USEFUL, ORNAMENTAL, AND INSTRUCTIVE.

FINE GOLD SPECTACLES and EYE GLASSES,

SETS OF IVORY

TABLE CUTLERY,

Stereoscopic Views of California;
(OVER ONE THOUSAND NEW VIEWS.)

Richly Mounted Opera Glasses

For sale by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
317 and 319 Montgomery street.
CATALOGUES with Price List, FREE. de9-1m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

GRAND BALL.

THE SECOND ANNUAL

Ball of the Fire Department,

Will be given at

UNION HALL,

ON THURSDAY EVENING, DEC. 28.

No care or expense will be spared to make it the grandest and most fashionable Ball of the season.

MANAGERS.

Governor F F Low,	Hon Ogden Hoffman,
Maj-Gen H. W. Halleck,	" Milton S Latham,
" I McDowell,	" S H Dwinelle,
" J F Miller,	" Thos B Shannon,
Col R C Drum,	" Frank Soule,
Com Selim Woodworth,	" R F Perkins,
Maj-Gen L H Allen,	" Wm J Shaw,
Chas de Cazotte,	R H Sinton,
Louis McLane,	Wm. Alvord,
J Whitney, Jr,	J H Baird,
I W Raymond,	Wm F Babcock,
Chas B Polhemus,	Henry Bigelow,
Eugene L Sullivan,	A Austin,
J Mora Moss,	S C Hastings,
R B Swain,	Camilo Martin,
E W Burr,	Maj A D Grimwood,
S P Dewey,	Abel Guy,
James Lick,	Wm B Johnston,
Nicholas Larco,	Geo W Gibbs,
Leland Stanford,	Hall McAllister,
Joseph P Hodge,	Henry B Platt,
B F Lowe,	M Livingston,
James Bowman,	Samuel M Wilson,
D O Mills,	Francisco Sanjarjo,
Lafayette Maynard,	Lewis Leland,
F L A Pioche,	Louis Scellier,
Jos G Eastland,	Alpheus Bull,
Ira P Rankin,	John S Henning,
Henry Carlton, Jr,	A Seligman,
John B Felton,	Michael Skelly,
Samuel Brannan,	A Coleman,
R H Magill,	Wm H Tillinghast,
Geo C Boardman,	Joseph Austin,
David Seannell,	John H Gardiner,
R B Woodward,	Wm P Taaffe,
O Livermore,	W H L Barnes,
A L Tubbs,	Henry Voorman,
Marcus D Borack,	Dr A J Bowie,
W Lane Booker,	Edward S Spear,
Eugene Casserly,	Wm. McKibbea,
Oliver Eldridge,	Michael Castle,
H M Newhall,	John Parrott,
Joseph A Donohoe,	Wm C Talbot,
Wm C Ralston,	Erwin Davis,
Wm M Leut,	Fred'k MacCrellish,
James Otis,	H H Haight,
R J. Vanderwater,	Maj John Stratman,
Caleb T Fay,	James H Cutter,
Martin R Roberts,	Henry Barriolhet,
James R Bolton,	John A. McGlynn,
W E Barron,	W W Haney,
S R Harris,	John J Kelly,
Morris Spyer,	Chas. R Peters,
Alfred Barstow,	Claus Spreckles,
R C Ferguson,	David Stern,
Geo H Howard,	G J Byrne,
Elie Lazard,	F W Macondray,
Edward J. Pringle,	John O Earl,
John H Saunders,	Emanuel Berri,
Jos W Winans,	Fred'k Billings,
James Bell,	E T Pease,
E W Leonard,	Louis Cohn,
S. J. Hensley,	Thos Tobin,
Geo B Gammans,	H Heyneman,
S H Parker,	Horace W. Carpenter,
Col Wm Harney,	M M Henston,
A H Titcomb,	Wm G Badger,
M C Hillyer,	Louis Schloss,
Frank McCoppin,	Henry G Langley,
John Hewston, Jr,	A J Houghtaling,
J C L. Wadsworth,	W W Stow,
Joseph Pierce,	W B Farwell,
C F Mebias,	John T Doyle,
Chas Walcott Brooks,	Warren R Payne,
Albert Miller,	Dr Joseph Haine,
J G Kittie,	Robert Cashiag,
Jonathan Hunt,	Peter Donahue,
John Middleton,	James L Fink,
C Adolphe Low,	T McCarthy.

☞ The number of Tickets to be sold is limited; they are not transferable, and none will be sold at the door. Ladies' invitations can be procured, free of charge, on application.

TICKETS (including Supper) TEN DOLLARS.
de9-3t

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

JUST RECEIVED,

Per last Steamer, a magnificent collection of

Fancy Glove and Odor Boxes,
Fine Fans, Opera Glasses,
Novelties in Back Combs,
Ornamental Cigar Stands,
Writing Desks, Albums,

DRESSING CASES, PARIS JEWELRY,

REAL LACE COLLARS, SLEEVES AND HANDKERCHIEFS,

REAL CHANTILLY AND POINT BARBES, VEILS, VALENCIENNE COLLARS, HANDKERCHIEFS, Etc.

Fashionable Cloaks and Shawls

Received by every Steamer from New York. Also,

CLOAKS AND LADIES' UNDERGARMENTS
MADE TO ORDER,

AT S. ROSENBLATT'S
PALACE OF FASHION,
123 AND 125 MONTGOMERY STREET,
de2 Opposite Occidental Hotel.

DRY GOODS!

NEW GOODS FOR THE

HOLIDAYS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

Have received by late Steamer from Europe,

AN IMMENSE STOCK OF

ELEGANT DRESS GOODS

SUITABLE FOR

Holiday Presents!

All of which they will exhibit

AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,

And will offer them all

AT PRICES THAT WILL

DEFY COMPETITION!!

DRESS GOODS.

SILKS, in rich Moire Antique, Brocade, Plaid, Plain and Chine, in all the most Fashionable colors, Black Silk of manufacture of "Bonnet," "Bischuff and Tonson," from $1 00 to $8 00 per yard.

PIM'S super. Irish Poplins and Tabinets in all colors.

MERINOS, in all the most beautiful colors, at 75c, $1 00, $1 25, $1 50, $1 75 per yard.

EMPRESS CLOTHS and OTTOMAN CLOTHS, in Plain, Striped and Chine, manufactured expressly to order.

MOURNING GOODS.

In Bombazines, Cashmeres, Merinos, Tamise, Poplins, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Silks, Alpacas, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

SHAWLS.

Super. Broche Long and Square Shawls, from $10 to $150, in all colors and new designs.

FINE FRENCH CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS, in Long and Square, from $50 to $400, all in new and elegant designs. Plaid Wool do., in long and square.

CLOAKS.

500 Beautiful stylish Garments direct from Paris, comprising the richest ever brought to this city.

HOSIERY.

For Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, of every description.

LACES AND EMBROIDERIES.

CHANTILLY VEILS, all prices and new designs.

CAMBRAY VEILS, from $2 50 to $5 00.

CHANTILLY LACES, all widths.

ELEGANT CHANTILLY FLOUNCES.

DENTELES de Valencienne et Applique.

APPLIQUE and Point de Venise Collars at $2 00, $2 50, $3 00, $5 00, &c., &c.

POINT D'ALENCON and Point Duchesse Sleeves and Collars.

DENTELLES de Guipre, all widths and patterns.

A Beautiful Assortment of Linen Sets,

PLAIN AND EMBROIDERED.

Embroidery Bands, Edgings, Insertions, Jaconet, and Dimity Bands.

KID GLOVES.

2000 doz. Alexander's best, at $1 25 per pair.

ALSO,

AT REDUCED PRICES,

COTTON SHEETING and SHIRTING, of all the best brands.

4,000 DRESSES DE LAINE, best quality, at $3 00 per dress.

10,000 EMPRESS CLOTH DRESSES, from $3 00 to $10 00 per dress.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
de2-1m NO. 9. LICK HOUSE.

The Californian

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 3. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 16, 1865. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, December 15th, 1865.

THE population of California is now divided into two classes: Those who contributed to Outcroppings and those who did not.

The latter have decidedly the advantage, so far as number is concerned. Merit, I think, is pretty evenly divided.

For my part. I think there is something better in life than to be an Outcropper.

But there is no accounting for tastes. If the aspiration expressed in a song which I heard the other evening is to be credited, a very healthy looking young man wished "to be a nangel."

I don't think I'd like to be an angel just at present..even if choice were offered me as to the color of wings and I was permitted to choose blue tail-feathers.

The wings would probably be a nice thing to have in the house, and extremely convenient for dusting furniture with, but I should very likely end by brushing out some one's eyes with them, and get brought up on a charge of assault and battery in some ultra-mundane Police Court.

My harp would be a source of vexation to me, especially if it were a golden one. The chances that it would find itself pawned some day are more than even. Or it would very likely get bet off on some contested election or hippogriff race ..for I never won a wager yet.

If any of the other angels bothered me much it would very likely get smashed over some of their heads.

For I don't think we change our natures in that state of existence beyond the moon as much as some people suppose.

For one, I feel confident that I shall go on liking my friends, hating my enemies, and doing unto others just exactly as they do unto me, to all eternity.

Of course I am wrong, wholly wrong, but as I never claim to be right, it is, perhaps, just as well not to argue the matter.

If the truth were to be told on all sides I should have to confess that the greater part of my life has been spent in breaking the golden rule..so it is fair to infer that a golden harp wouldn't have much of a chance in my hands.

I never prided myself much on breaking the commandments, but if premiums were offered for keeping them, modesty would interfere to prevent my putting in a claim for the first prize.

Moses, though, broke all the commandments at once..and didn't count it a very hard day's work either. His people were not using him very well just then, and I suppose he thought he'd turn the tables on them.

Seriously, I suppose I am very wicked. A young lady told me so the other evening..and she ought to know all about it.

She says I spend my Sundays badly, smoke a pipe and drink lager..all of which is true.

Now when a person approaches me fairly and squarely, and tells me that I'm wicked..desperately wicked..there is no chance for an argument.

For I always acknowledge that I am..and when I ask them repentantly to point out precisely in what my wickedness consists. I always feel immensely relieved, for I know I'm a good deal worse than they think I am.

And if any one doesn't think that this is pleasant and agreeable, they should hear my long-drawn sigh of relief when my feminine monitors uncork my sins upon me.

They worry and bully me until I suppose they have got the dead-wood on me..I hold my breath as one does when a 15-inch gun is being touched off under his nose..and, behold, a sort of champagne cork is drawn.

Spending Sundays badly is an old charge..I'm used to it. In my visits home, when I lived within reach of that blessed place..which I never appreciated until I got so far away from it..the whole village used to arraign me on a similar accusation.

I admire country villages. The people have a wondrous business aptitude..they can attend not only to their own business but even to their neighbors'..and this is one reason of my admiration for San Francisco..for I think that in this one partienlar it can discount any other big country village on the continent.

But to resume. My Sundays in the country were in reality the only pleasant days I had..and I used to thank the inventor of them exceedingly. On that blessed day there were no callers and no parties. I did not have to come into the parlor and talk to some old lady who had smoothed the wrinkles out of my ears the morning of my birth. or sit and exchange disagreeable recollections with some remorseless old maid who had taught me the catechism. And I was delivered from those inexorable whist parties. where I invariably had a partner who trumped my trick. found fault with my most brilliant finesse, and objected, with uplifted hands, to playing for a bit a point.

It was nuts for me, when these worshippers of the dead and mouldy past found fault with what I conceived to be a really brilliant play, to propose a short session of "Draw"..for a merely nominal ante. Oh, the horror that the proposition excited!

But Sunday brought me release. The house was generally clear of every one..the man-servant, the maid-servant and the stranger that happened to be within the gates, long before I was up.

My breakfast was in waiting..and I didn't have to wait on any one but myself. There is a great deal in that.

Breakfast finished I could stick papers and books in my pocket, light my pipe, and start out into the orchard or the woods.

There was a great deal of satisfaction in being permitted to light that pipe in the house. It was a splendid meerschaum ..colored like a cherry and cheery as a cherub..but the feminine element of the household always recoiled from its mouth as they would from the muzzle of a columbiad. It was a "horrid thing," and it blackened the ceilings and tainted the window-curtains..there was no enormity in the catalogue which was not laid upon that pipe. Had the cholera-infantum carried off the baby the sin of murder would have been about equally divided, in the household estimation, between myself and that pipe. And to get that pipe alight in that house, and blow a great cloud up to the ceiling in utter defiance of white-wash and curtains, was a luxury indeed.

Oh, what days those were in the orchards and woods. Lying lazily on my back, rolling great clouds of blue smoke up against the blue heavens. I astonished the wood-peckers.. they dropped their apples in fright and went swiftly away to the woods, telling their feathered gossips, probably, that they had discovered a volcano in a state of active eruption. The squirrels would creep cautiously aronnd me...

Have you ever seen a squirrel suddenly gather himself up, when surprised, and take a view of the situation? If not you have something yet to see.

Pigeons availed themselves of the day, and sailed and swooped over my head until the air was blue with them. If I stirred to go down to the spring for a drink, a wood cock or quail would start up in my path and go off in a direct line.. they always flew zig-zag on week days. I used to think seriously of sending to New York for an air-gun that would make no evil report for me by its noise, or at least having the barrels of a double gun sawed off. so I could slip it under my coat..but I of course knew that if I consummated any such arrangement there wouldn't be a quail, wood-cock, pigeon or even a chippadee-bird to be found in the whole country.

Some people talk about always having their dish upside down when it rains. Nonsense! I believe in luck and predestination and all that. If it isn't calculated, by those who preside over such things, that you are to catch water, depend upon it you won't, though it rain forty days and forty nights, and you have the Bensley Water Company tapping somebody else's pipes for you. I find that when my dish is right side up it doesn't rain..or if it does the dish won't hold water, so it may as well be bottom up as any other way.

But to return to our squirrels..those were delicious days When tired of reading, I could count the leaves over my head, or watch the hawks that went sailing on sleepy wings above the tops of the trees, occasionally breaking the Sabbath by dropping down on a wagtail. Surely I was the type of bucolic innocence.

And yet it was said that I spent the Sundays badly!

Really I think it was about the best behaved day of the week..if Sunday can be called a week day. Under ordinary circumstances, I can commit about as many sins of omission and commission as anybody else. I do not flatter myself particularly on the accomplishment, but, all things being equal. perhaps I could break more commandments in less time than any other man of my size and weight that you can pick up in a day's travel..that is if I set seriously about it. And it must be acknowledged that if I did nothing remarkably good on that seventh day I certainly did nothing very bad.

Had I gone to church I should probably have caught flies, held the hymn book upside down, or done something else to bring discredit upon myself and scandal to the congregation.

And I still pride myself on the way I spend my Sundays.. so much so that I feel really aggrieved and injured when fault is found with the method by even the sweetest and most discursive lips in the world.

On that one blessed day I write no bad verses..make no execrable puns. You couldn't persuade me to one of those exciting horse races, where the drivers throw off on you, and the whole thing is put up on outsiders from the beginning. I read letters..and answer them, which latter may be considered an exercise of one of the cardinal virtues. Hating work with my whole heart and strength, it is delightful to have a day come around when it is wicked to work, and one can loaf and be at ease with a clean conscience.

It suddenly occurs to me that, perhaps, all this formal detail may not be very interesting or amusing to the general public, but, as I write solely for my own amusement, I don't know that it matters much...

We were speaking of Outcroppings.

A better title for the book could not have been found, for a good many croppings are left out..out in the cold, so to speak.

I have looked for "The Prophetess," but she is not there. Why is this thus? as Artemus Ward says.

Have prophetesses no honor in their own country, as well as prophets?

One of the house of Roman remarked, when I commented upon finding no prophetess in the book, that he didn't see much profit there either.

It grieves me to think that among so many singers the seat of one should be vacant..was there no room in the Pitt?

My opinion is that in making his selections, the editor's aim was to select the worst verse the State afforded..and he has succeeded admirably. Indeed, the title would so indicate; for what are outeroppings but rough surface rock?

I notice that the editor put none of his own compositions in the volume..making a feint of modesty. May we not say to him? "feint, Harte, never won fair lady."

A man is on trial for murder, and last evening's paper tells us that the fact of his writing bad verses is put in as a plea to establish his insanity.

Once admit this plea and a wide gate is opened to all who wish to commit crime with impunity. Any one of the Outcroppers thereafter might ravage and slay at his case.

Perhaps the man on trial is an Outcropper. The verses which are published in his defence are certainly bad enough to entitle him to be one.

One of the Outcroppers astonished me the other day..I allude to Mr. Charles Warren Stoddard.

There had always been a purity and etherealness about his verse that delighted me. He was the centre of a pastoral picture, to my imagination..a Corydon, sitting on daisy mounds, a crook in his hand, a pipe in his mouth..I don't mean a meerschaum, but that other kind of a pipe traditional with Shepheards..and no Phillis within hearing. There were violets in his verses but never a tint of scarlet.

But latterly he has revealed himself..he is a Corydon no longer. Remember you those lines, "My Sweetheart," published in THE CALIFORNIAN two or three weeks ago?

Certainly I never expected to see him crop out in that style.

Young men were deceivers ever, and my confidence in this particular one is betrayed..shaken, ruined..gone for ever. I should not be surprised now to catch him singing Bacchanalian songs..shouting perhaps, over a bottle of bad Burgundy: "Let the toast be. Dear woman."

Let the toast be, dear woman, is what the impolite gentleman said to his wife, one morning, when there was not enough for two...

By the way, Christmas is coming. It has been coming for some time, but it is nearer now than it was a while ago.

And I am ready to receive presents.

I don't mean that I want anybody to send me poems..they would be called instances of presents of mind, I suppose; but no one need mind about sending me any.

I already have a volume of Outcroppings, and that is nearly as much as one crop can stand.

But diamonds, jewelry, vases, corner lots, coal-scuttles.. anything neat, ornamental, and valuable, will be gratefully eceived by

INIGO.

TO A WATER-FOWL.

WHITHER, midst falling dew,
While glow the heavens with the last steps of day,
Far, through their rosy depths, dost thou pursue
Thy solitary way?

Vainly the fowler's eye
Might mark thy distant flight to do thee wrong,
As, darkly seen against the crimson sky,
Thy figure floats along.

Seek'st thou the plashy brink
Of weedy lake, or marge of river wide,
Or where the rocking billows rise and sink
On the chafed ocean side?

There is a Power whose care
Teaches thy way along that pathless coast—
The desert and illimitable air—
Lone wandering, but not lost.

All day thy wings have fanned,
At that far height, the cold, thin atmosphere,
Yet stoop not, weary, to the welcome land,
Though the dark night is near.

And soon that toil shall end;
Soon shalt thou find a Summer home and rest,
And scream among thy fellows: reeds shall bend,
Soon, o'er thy sheltered nest.

Thou'rt gone, the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet, on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given,
And shall not soon depart.

He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

[Wm. Cullen Bryant's "Voices of Nature."

JENKINS AGAIN.

"OUR Jenkins, Punch's Jenkins, is not dead." He has neither been translated into the seventh heavens by chronicling Lord Granville's wedding for the Times, nor sunk below the nether deep by the heavy sarcasms of the Saturday Review. Jenkins is immortal: and like Brahma hath many avatars. Following the fashion of those nobles of the land whom he loves, Jenkins is on the moors! Yes, he is at this present writing incarnate in a Scottish body—called there "buddy"—and wears the grey kilt and blue bonnet of the Gillie. But even there and thus attired, instead of rifle or spy-glass, he wields the immortal pen, wherewith he stalks a statelier game that even the great red-deer—the princes of the Land! Hark to the crack of the well-known weapon!

"On Friday last, a grand deer drive took place in the forest of Abergeldie. To the wooded profile of Craig Yoniso the antlered monarchs were driven from the sheltered dales and corries around. Capital sport was had by the Prince of Wales and party, amongst whom was the Chief of Invercauld, the gallant Colonel Farquharson, who shot down two fine stags as the swaying herd swept past. Bang, bang, went the Prince of Wales's rifle, and other two noble stags bit the dust, and rolled dead in the blooming purple heather. Other two stags fell, one of which was killed by the youthful Mr. Phipps. On the home route two pretty roebucks were shot by the party, which concluded the day's sport."

This is something like word-painting. How the scene rises before us. The "antlered monarchs" driven to "the wooded profile of Craig Yoniso." Ossian, by heavens!—the grim suspense and murderous aim of the Chief Invercauld, the gallant Farquharson, "as the swaying herd swept past"—the "bang! bang!" of the Prince's rifle—the noble stags performing that kotow to a Prince which Jenkins loves, and winding up their rapid act of submission by the well-known feats of "biting the dust," and "rolling over in the purple heather!"

Then how instinct with the delicately discriminated Jenkinsian color, is the rallentando movement. "Other two stags fell, one of which was killed by the youthful Mr. Phipps." It would take a column of comment to bring out all the subtlety of compliment, the latent grace of suggestion, in this short sentence. Observe, the stags that fall to the rifle of the Prince are "noble;" not so the creatures that succumb to the more plebeian bullets of the suite—they are "stags" simple, and unadorned. Nor are their deaths of the ornately respectful kind practiced by the happy quadrupeds who are honored by the Prince's ball in their briskets. They "bite the dust," and "roll over in the purple heather;" the stags killed by the commonalty content themselves by "falling." Then note the sense of that dignified courtesy which should enshrine all belonging to a Court in "the youthful Mr. Phipps"—not "Phipps Junior," nor "Young Phipps," nor even "Young Mr. Phipps," but "the Youthful Mr. Phipps!"

This is how history should be written! Touched thus by a master hand, what delicacies of respect may be conveyed by language—how tropes and figures, epithets and idioms, nay plain adjectives and substantives, may be compelled to pay homage to rank and station, and to bow them down at the shrine of Snobocracy, of which Jenkins is the high-priest! Punch.

LITERARY NOTES.

DR. SPENCER HALL, a very distinguished London physician recently declined to obey the law which requires that all infants shall, within a certain period after their birth (six months, I believe,) be vaccinated. When called upon by the authorities, he responded in a very remarkable letter, which was read before the authorities of Marylebone parish, stating why he had determined to pay the fine rather than have his child vaccinated. He declares that he has never been able to find a cow with the disease, nor can he find in England a farmer who has ever seen one with it, consequently the virus which is now used in England is nearly or quite all taken from human subjects. On inquiring at the various hospitals, he finds from the medical men employed in them that it is next to impossible to get any real vaccine matter, i. e., from the cow. He also gives reasons for supposing that nearly all of the virus in use has come through the bloods of some 300 different persons, many of which must be tainted with some disease. Dr. Hall prefers that his child should incur the risk of the small-pox to these taints. The dying out of the disease among cows has been attended by a singular decrease in the virulence of small-pox among human beings. The disease, from being the most formidable, has now almost lost its terrors. He thinks that for some reasons or other—possibly because the whole community has become gradually inoculated—the small-pox may die out altogether. The Marylebone authorities were considerably staggered by the doctor's very able letter, and did not know whether to impose the fine or not—the fine being arranged for the negligent, not for the philosophical. They finally agreed to allow the doctor four months to hunt up some original vaccine virus for his child.

THE Pall Mall Gazette has the following paragraph: Whilst Mr. Adams and Earl Russell are squabbling about the want of cordiality displayed by their respective countries to one another of late, the vexed question of the popularity of the Yankee nation in England has been settled by those certain indicators of public opinion—the street boys of London. The notion that "Confederate sympathy" ever prevailed in this country is not altogether absurd, perhaps, though it is declared to be so by at least one of the morning papers; nevertheless, there is significance in the different reception now given to the war songs of the combatants. It is true that "My Maryland" and "The Bonnie Blue Flag" may still be heard in the abodes of unfortunate but spiteful sufferers by the "cotton loan;" but the Federal war song is the favorite of the people—of those who sing in the highways. The somewhat lugubrious refrain, "Glory, glory, hallelujah!" has excited their admiration to a wonderful degree, and almost threatens to extinguish that hard worked, exquisite effort of modern minstrelsy, "Slap Bang." The slight flavor of blasphemy which "Old John Brown" contains does not apparently give any offence to the popular appetite; rather the contrary effect is observable.

THE "Journals and Correspondence" of Horace Walpole's friend, Miss Berry, abound in gossip and ana of the men and times to which they relate, as witness this glimpse of French celebrities, seen by Miss Berry, when she was presented to Madame Mere, in 1802. Moreau is "a middle-sized quiet-looking man, who at a distance gave me a little idea of Sir G. Beaumont, though shorter and blacker; but I was not near enough to see his countenance." Eugene Beauharnois "was among the dancers; he is rather good-looking, but by no means distinguished."... "General Bruue (who commanded in Holland) is one of the very tallest men I ever saw, between thirty and forty, rather awkward, with a sensible but not agreeable countenance. Massena was there, but not in uniform; a crop with thick black hair, a vulgar-looking intelligent countenance, and rather a short, thick figure."... "Cambraceres, the Second Consul, was among the company; he came late, and was received without any sort of distinction. He is an uncommonly ill-looking, shortish, thick man, with his eyes sunk in his head, his hair badly dressed, his dress the undress uniform of the consuls—blue velvet, with a broad gold embroidery, fustian breeches, and common turndown boots."

MR. CHARLES READE'S powerful novel, It is Never Too Late to Mend, turned by himself into a play of the same name, was lately the cause of a great row at the Princess's Theatre in London, the whole house being in a tumult over the prison scenes, which were represented with shocking fidelity. The manager, Mr. Vining, was made to appear before the curtain, but he gave the audience little satisfaction and no apology at all, merely stating that he considered Mr. Reade's object, which was to show up the brutal treatment received by prisoners in England, a laudable one. The length of the performance, which is said to have been between five and six hours, may have had something to do with the ill-feeling on both sides. We have known audiences to tire of even two hours of Shakspeare, whose plays are at least as good as those of Mr. Reade, who is really not a dramatist, but a novelist, and a very powerful one, as the readers of "It is Never Too Late to Mend" cannot but remember.

MARTIN FRANC
AND
THE MONK OF SAINT ANTHONY.

BY HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

IN times of old, there lived in the city of Rouen a tradesman named Martin Franc, who, by a series of misfortunes, had been reduced from opulence to poverty. But poverty, which generally makes men humble and laborious, only served to make him proud and lazy; and in proportion as he grew poorer and poorer, he grew also prouder and lazier. He contrived, however, to live along from day to day, by now and then pawning a silken robe of his wife, or selling a silver spoon, or some other trifle saved from the wreck of his better fortunes; and passed his time pleasantly enough in loitering about the market-place, and walking up and down on the sunny side of the street.

The fair Marguerite, his wife, was celebrated through the whole city for her beauty, her wit, and her virtue. She was a brunette with the blackest eye, the whitest teeth, and the ripest nut-brown cheeks in all Normandy; her figure was tall and stately, her hands and feet most delicately moulded, and her swimming gait like the motion of a swan. In happier days she had been the delight of the richest tradesmen in the city, and the envy of the fairest dames.

The friends of Martin Franc, like the friends of many a ruined man before and since, deserted him in the day of adversity. Of all that had eaten his dinners, and drunk his wine, and flattered his wife, none sought the narrow alley and humble dwelling of the broken tradesman save one, and that one was Friar Gui, the sacristan of the abbey of Saint Anthony. He was a little, jolly, red-faced friar, with a leer in his eye, and rather a doubtful reputation; but, as he was a kind of travelling gazette, and always brought the latest news and gossip of the city, and besides was the only person that condescended to visit the house of Martin Franc—in fine, for the want of a better, he was considered in the light of a friend.

In these constant assidnities, Friar Gui had his secret motives, of which the single heart of Martin Franc was entirely unsuspicious. The keener eye of his wife, however, soon discovered two faces under the hood; but she persevered in misconstruing the friar's intentions, and in dexterously turning aside any expression of gallantry that fell from his lips. In this way Friar Gui was for a long time kept at bay; and Martin Franc preserved in the day of poverty and distress that consolation of all this world's afflictions—a friend. But, finally, things came to such a pass, that the honest tradesman opened his eyes, and wondered he had been asleep so long. Whereupon he was irreverent enough to thrust Friar Gui into the street by the shoulder.

Meanwhile the times grew worse. One family relic followed another—the last silken robe was pawned, the last silver spoon sold; until at length poor Martin Franc was forced to "drag the devil by the tail:" in other words, beggary stared him full in the face. But the fair Marguerite did not even then despair. In those days a belief in the immediate guardianship of the saints was much more strong and prevalent than in these lewd and degenerate times; and as there seemed no great probability of improving their condition by any lucky change which could be brought about by mere human agency, she determined to try what could be done by intercession with the patron saint of her husband. Accordingly she repaired one evening to the abbey of St. Anthony, to place a votive candle and offer her prayer at the altar, which stood in the little chapel dedicated to St. Martin.

It was already sunset when she reached the church, and the evening service of the Virgin had commenced. A cloud of incense floated before the altar of the Madonna, and the organ rolled its deep melody along the dim arches of the church. Marguerite mingled with the kneeling crowd, and repeated the responses in Latin, with as much devotion as the most learned clerk of the convent. When the service was over, she repaired to the chapel of St. Martin, and lighting her votive taper at the silver lamp which burned before his altar, knelt down in a retired part of the chapel, and, with tears in her eyes, besought the saint for aid and protection. While she was thus engaged, the church became gradually deserted, till she was left, as she thought, alone. But in this she was mistaken; for, when she arose to depart, the portly figure of Friar Gui was standing close at her elbow!

"Good evening, fair Marguerite," said he, "St. Martin has heard your prayer, and sent me to relieve your poverty."

"Then, by the Virgin,' replied she, "the good saint is not very fastidious in the choice of his messengers."

"Nay, goodwife," answered the friar, not at all abashed by this ungracious reply, "if the tidings are good, what matters it who the messenger may be? And how does Martin Franc these days?"

"He is well," replied Marguerite; "and were he present, I doubt not would thank you heartily for the interest you still take in him and his poor wife."

"He has done me wrong," continued the friar. "But it is our duty to forgive our enemies; and so let the past be forgotten. I know that he is in want. Here, take this to him, and tell him I am still his friend."

So saying, he drew a small purse from the sleeve of his habit, and proffered it to his companion. I know not whether it were a suggestion of St. Martin, but it is true that the fair wife of Martin Franc seemed to lend a more willing ear to the earnest whispers of the friar. At length she said:

"Put up your purse; to day I can neither deliver your gift nor your message. Martin Franc has goue from home."

"Then keep it for yourself."

"Nay, Sir Monk," replied Marguerite, casting down her eyes; "I can take no bribes here in the church, and in the very chapel of my husband's patron saint. You shall bring it to me at my house, if you will."

The friar put up the purse, and the conversation which followed was in a low and indistinct undertone, audible only to the ears for which it was intended. At length the interview ceased; and—O woman!—the last words that the virtuous Marguerite uttered, as she glided from the church, were:

"To-night—when the abbey-clock strikes twelve—remember!"

It would be useless to relate how impatiently the friar counted the hours and the quarters as they chimed from the ancient tower of the abbey, while he paced to and fro along the gloomy cloisters. At length the appointed hour approached; and just before the convent bell sent forth its summons to call the friars of St. Anthony to their midnight devotions, a figure, with a cowl, stole out of a postern gate, and, passing silently along the deserted streets, soon turned into the little ally which led to the dwelling of Martin Franc. It was none other than Friar Gui. He rapped softly at the tradesman's door, and casting a look up and down the street, as if to assure himself that his motions were unobserved, slipped into the house.

"Has Martin Franc returned?" inquired he in a whisper.

"No," answered the sweet voice of his wife; "he will not be back to-night."

"Then all good angels befriend us!" continued the monk, endeavoring to take her hand.

"Not so, good Monk," said she, disengaging herself. "You forget the conditions of our meeting."

The friar paused a moment; and then, drawing a heavy purse from his girdle, he threw it upon the table; at the same moment a footstep was heard behind him, and a heavy blow from a club threw him prostrate upon the floor. It came from the strong arm of Martin Franc himself!

It is hardly necessary to say that his absence was feigned. His wife had invented the story to decoy the monk, and thereby to keep her husband from beggary, and to relieve herself, once for all, from the importunities of a false friend. At first Martin Franc would not listen to the proposition; but at length he yielded to the urgent entreaties of his wife; and the plan finally agreed upon was, that Friar Gui, after leaving his purse behind him, should be sent back to the convent with a severer discipline than his shoulders had ever received from any penitence of his own.

The affair, however, took a more serious turn than was intended; for, when they tried to raise the friar from the ground—he was dead. The blow aimed at his shoulders fell upon his shaven crown; and, in the excitement of the moment, Martin Franc had dealt a heavier stroke than he had intended. Amid the grief and consternation which followed this discovery, the quick imagination of his wife suggested an expedient of safety. A bunch of keys at the friar's girdle caught her eye. Hastily unfastening the ring, she gave the key to her husband, exclaiming:

"For the holy Virgin's sake, be quick! One of these keys doubtless unlocks the gate of the convent-garden. Carry the body thither, and leave it among the trees!

Martin Franc threw the dead body of the monk across his shoulder, and with a heavy heart took the way to the abbey. It was a clear, starry night; and though the moon had not yet risen, her light was in the sky, and came reflected down in a soft twilight upon earth. Not a sound was heard through all the long and solitary streets, save at intervals the distant crowing of a cock, or the melancholy hoot of an owl from the lofty tower of the abbey. The silence weighed like an accusing spirit upon the guilty conscience of Martin Franc. He started at the sound of his own breathing, as he panted under the heavy burden of the monk's body; and if, perchance, a bat flitted near him on drowsy wings, he paused, and his heart beat audibly with terror. At length he reached the garden-wall of the abbey, opened the postern-gate with the key, and, bearing the monk into the garden, seated him upon a stone bench by the edge of the fountain, with his head resting against a column, upon which was sculptured an image of the Madonna. He then replaced the bunch of keys at the monk's girdle, and returned home with hasty steps.

When the prior of the convent, to whom the repeated delinquencies of Friar Gui were but too well known, observed that he was again absent from his post at midnight prayers, he waxed exceedingly angry; and no sooner were the duties of the chapel finished, than he sent a monk in pursuit of the truant sacristan, summoning him to appear immediately at his cell. By chance it happened that the monk chosen for this duty was an enemy of Friar Gui; and very shrewdly supposing that the sacristan had stolen out of the garden-gate on some midnight adventure, he took that direction in pursuit. The moon was just climbing the convent wall, and threw its silvery light through the trees of the garden, and on the sparkling waters of the fountain, that fell with a soft lulling sound into the deep basin below. As the monk passed on his way, he stopped to quench his thirst with a draught of the cool water, and was turning to depart, when his eye caught the motionless form of the sacristan, sitting erect in the shadow of the stone column.

"How is this, Friar Gui?" quoth the monk. "Is this a place to be sleeping at midnight, when the brotherhood are all at their prayers?"

Friar Gui made no answer.

"Up, up! thou eternal sleeper, and do penance for thy negligence. The prior calls for thee at his cell!" continued the monk, growing angry, and shaking the sacristan by the shoulder.

But still no answer.

"Then, by Saint Anthony, I'll wake thee!"

And saying this, he dealt the sacristan a heavy box on the ear. The body bent slowly forward from its erect position, and, giving a headlong plunge, sank with a heavy splash into the basin of the fountain. The monk waited a few moments in expectation of seeing Friar Gui rise dripping from his cold bath; but he waited in vain; for he lay motionless at the bottom of the basin—his eyes open, and his ghastly face distorted by the ripples of the water. With a beating heart the monk stooped down, and, grasping the skirt of the sacristan's habit, at length succeeded in drawing him from the water. All efforts, however, to resuscitate him were unavailing. The monk was filled with terror, not doubting that the friar had died untimely by his hand; and as the animosity between them was no secret in the convent, he feared that, when the deed was known, he should be accused of murder. He therefore looked round for an expedient to relieve himself from the dead body; and the well known character of the sacristan soon suggested one. He determined to carry the body to the house of the most noted beauty of Rouen, and leave it on the door-step: so that all suspicion of the murder might fall upon the shoulders of some jealous husband. The beauty of Martin Franc's wife had penetrated even the thick walls of the convent, and there was not a friar in the whole abbey of Saint Anthony who had not done penance for his truant imagination. Accordingly, the dead body of Friar Gui was laid upon the monk's brawny shoulders, carried back to the house of Martin Franc, and placed in an erect position near the door. The monk knocked loud and long; and then, gliding through a by-lane, stole back to the convent.

A troubled conscience would not suffer Martin Franc and his wife to close their eyes; but they lay awake lamenting the doleful, events of the night. The knock at the door sounded like a death-knell in their ears. It still continued at intervals, rap—rap—rap! with a dull, low sound, as if something heavy were swinging against the panel: for the wind had risen during the night, and every angry gust that swept down the alley swung the arms of the lifeless sacristan against the door. At length Martin Franc mustered courage enough to dress himself and go down, while his wife followed him with a lamp in her hand; but no sooner had he lifted the latch, than the ponderous body of Friar Gui fell stark and heavy into his arms.

"Jesu Maria!" exclaimed Marguerite, crossing herself: "here is the monk again!"

"Yes, and dripping wet, as if he had just been dragged out of the river!"

"O, we are betrayed!" exclaimed Marguerite, in agony.

"Then the devil himself has betrayed us," replied Martin Franc, disengaging himself from the embrace of the sacristan; "for I met not a living being; the whole city was as silent as the grave."

"Saint Martin defend us!" continued his terrified wife. "Here, take this scapulary to guard you from the Evil One; and lose no time. You must throw the body into the river, or we are lost! Holy Virgin! How bright the moon shines!"

Saying this, she threw round his neck a scapulary, with the figure of a cross on one end, and an image of the Virgin on the other; and Martin Franc again took the dead friar upon his shoulders, and with fearful misgivings departed on his dismal errand. He kept as much as possible in the shadow of the houses, and had nearly reached the quay, when suddenly he thought he heard footsteps behind him. He stopped to listen; it was no vain imagination; they came along the pavement, tramp, tramp! and every step grew louder and nearer. Martin Franc tried to quicken his pace—but in vain; his knees smote together, and he staggered against the wall. His hand relaxed its grasp, and the monk slid from his back and stood ghastly and straight beside him, supported by chance against the shoulder of his bearer. At that moment a man came round the corner, tottering beneath the weight o a huge sack. As his head was bent downwards, he did not perceive Martin Franc till he was close upon him; and when, on looking up, he saw two figures standing motionless in the shadow of the wall, he thought himself waylaid, and, without waiting to be assaulted, dropped the sack from his shoulders and ran off at full speed. The sack fell heavily on the pavement, and directly at the feet of Martin Franc. In the fall the string was broken; and out came the bloody head, not of a dead monk, as it first seemed to the excited imagination of Martin Franc, but of a dead hog! When the terror and surprise caused by this singlar event had a little subsided, an idea came into the mind of Martin Franc, very similar to what would have come into the mind of almost any person in similar circumstances. He took the hog out of the sack, putting the body of the monk into its place, secured it well with the remnants of the broken string, and then hurried homeward with the animal upon his shoulders.

He was hardly out of sight when the man with the sack returned, accompanied by two others. They were suprised to find the sack still lying on the ground, with no one near it, and began to jeer the former bearer, telling him he had been frightened at his own shadow on the wall. Then one of them took the sack upon his shoulders, without the least suspicion of the change that had been made in its contents, and all three disappeared.

Now it happened that the city of Rouen was at that time infested by three street robbers, who walked in darkness like the pestilence, and always carried the plunder of their midnight marauding to the Tete-de-Bœuf, a little tavern in one of the darkest and narrowest lanes of the city. The host of the Tete-de-Bœuf was privy to all their schemes, and had an equal share in the profits of their nightly excursions. He gave a helping hand, too, by the length of his bills, and by plundering the pockets of any chance traveller that was luckless enough to sleep under his roof.

On the night of the disastrous adventure of Friar Gui, this little marauding party had been prowling about the city until a late hour, without finding anything to reward their labors.

At length, however, they chanced to spy a hog, hanging under a shed in a butcher's yard, in readiness for the next day's market; and as they were not very fastidious in selecting their plunder, but, on the contrary, rather addicted to taking whatever they could lay their hands on, the hog was straightway purloined, thrust into a large sack, and sent to the Tete-de-Bœuf on the shoulders of one of the party, while the other two continued their nocturnal excursion. It was this person who had been so terrified at the appearance of Martin Franc and the dead monk; and as this encounter had interrupted any further operations of the party, the dawn of the day being now near at hand, they all repaired to their gloomy den in the Tete-de-Bœuf. The host was impatiently waiting their return; and, asking what plunder they had brought with them, proceeded without delay to remove it from the sack. The first thing that presented itself, on untying the string, was the monk's head.

"The devil take the devil!" cried the host, as he opened the neck of the sack; "what's this? Your hog wears a cowl!"

"The poor devil has become disgusted with the world, and turned monk!" said he who held the light, a little surprised at seeing the head covered with a coarse gray cloth.

"Sure enough he has," exclaimed another, starting back in dismay, as the shaven crown and ghastly face of the friar appeared. "Holy St. Benedict be with us! It is a monk stark dead!"

"A dead monk, indeed!" said a third, with an incredulous shake of the head; how could a dead monk get into this sack? No, no; there is some diablerie in this. I have heard it said that Satan can take any shape he pleases; and you may rely upon it this is Satan himself, who has taken the shape of a monk to get us all hanged."

Then we had better kill the devil than have the devil kill us!" replied the host, crossing himself; "and the sooner we do it the better; for it is now daylight, and the people will soon be passing in the street."

"So say I," rejoined the man of magic; "and my advice is, to take him to the butcher's yard, and hang him up in the place where we found the hog."

This proposition so pleased the others that it was executed without delay. They carried the friar to the butcher's house, and, passing a strong cord round his neck, suspended him to a beam in the shade, and there left him.

When the night was at length passed, and daylight began to peep into the eastern windows of the city, the butcher arose and prepared himself for market. He was casting up in his mind what the hog would bring at his stall, when, looking upward, lo! in its place he recognized the dead body of Friar Gui.

"By St. Denis!" quoth the butcher, "I always feared that this friar would not die quietly in his cell; but I never thought I should find him hanging under my roof. This must not be; it will be said that I murdered him, and I shall pay for it with my life. I must contrive some way to get rid of him."

So saying, he called his man, and, showing him what had been done asked him how he should dispose of the body so that he might not be accused of murder. The man, who was of a ready wit, reflected a moment, and then answered—

"This is indeed a difficult matter; but there is no evil without its remedy. We will place the friar on horseback—"

"What! a dead man on horseback?—impossible!" interrupted the butcher. "Who ever heard of a dead man on horseback!"

"Hear me out, and then judge. We must place the body on horseback as well as we may, and bind it fast with cords; and then set the horse loose in the street, and pursue him, crying out that the monk has stolen the horse. Thus all who meet him will strike him with their staves as he passes, and it will be thought that he came to his death in that way."

Though this seemed to the butcher rather a mad project, yet, as no better one offered itself at the moment, and there was no time for reflection, mad as the project was, they determined to put it into execution. Accordingly the butcher's horse was brought out, and the friar was bound upon his back, and with much difficulty fixed in an upright position. The butcher then gave the horse a blow upon the crupper with his staff, which set him into a smart gallop down the street, and he and his man joined in pursuit, crying—

"Stop thief! Stop thief! The friar has stolen my horse!"

As it was now sunrise, the streets were full of people—peasants driving their goods to market, and citizens going to their daily avocations. When they saw the friar dashing at full speed down the street, they joined in the cry of "Stop thief!—Stop thief!" and many who endeavored to seize the bridle, as the friar passed them at full speed, were thrown upon the pavement, and trampled under foot; others joined in the halloo and the pursuit; but this only served to quicken the gallop of the frightened steed, who dashed down one street and up another like the wind, with two or three mounted citizens clattering in full cry at his heels. At length they reached the market-place. The people scattered right and left in dismay; and the steed and rider dashed onward, overthrowing in their course men and women, and stalls, and piles of merchandise, and sweeping away like a whirlwind. Tramp—tramp—tramp! they clattered on; they had distanced all pursuit. They reached the quay; the wide pavement was cleared at a bound—one more wild leap—and splash!—both horse and rider sank into the rapid current of the river—swept down the stream—and was seen no more!

MARTINSTOWER.

"IT is almost dark, said Lizzy Elliott, perched on the bars that led into the solemn quietude of the Martinstower woods, with her brown hood hanging from one arm, and a scarlet shawl drawn over her tangled black curls. "I wonder why papa don't come!"

Lizzy was a self-reliant sort of a damsel, with black eyes and peach-red cheeks, and a lilac calico dress fearfully torn by some jagged bramble. She was not particularly graceful, nor were the hands that held the shawl together under the chin, "slender and snowy." On the contrary, the March wind had reddened them, and blown her short curls about until you could scarcely have told, from any outward indication, whether she were boy or girl.

"Lizzy! child! come down this instant! When will you learn to be a little more ladylike?"

And Lizzy slipped guiltily down from her seat on the topmost bar, as a stout old gentleman, with iron gray hair and a suit to match, came trotting down the road on a stout pony.

"Oh, papa! I thought you were never coming!"

"I'll tell you what I am going to do," said the old gentleman irascibly, as Lizzy sauntered along by the pony's side, with one arm thrown over its shaggy mane, and her reddened fingers playing with the loose locks. "I'm going to buy you a pair of blue trousers and a coat, and set you to work cutting trees with the rest of the menfolks. It's all a mistake trying to make a young lady of you!"

"I wish you would, papa!" ejaculated Lizzy, gleefully, "it would be such fun!"

"Fun!" echoed the old gentleman. Now I give you fair warning, Miss Lizzy, you have got to behave yourself a little more circumspectly in future. Mr. Martin is coming home."

"Mr. Martin of Martinstower?"

"The same."

Lizzy looked back where the sunset was turning the vast gothic windows of the gray stone mansion among the Martinstower woods to gold, and opened her black eyes very wide. "I wish he would stay at Para—Parn—what's its name? I can't steal any more roses from the lawn, nor play at hide-and-seek with "Nero" in the great stone portico any more. What does he want to come back for?"

"Probably because he is tired of living in foreign countries," dryly responded her father.

"And when will he be here?"

"In the course of a month or two. His confidential clerk comes immediately, to see about refurnishing and decorating Martinstower for his reception, and—"

"He must be a very fine young gentleman if the old furniture isn't good enough," said Lizzy, elevating her little nose.

"Will you hold your saucy tongue, Miss? How dare you speak in that way of a man who must be worth, at the least computation, a quarter of a million? I was going to say that I hope Mr. Martin will make it his home at our house for a day or two, before he takes possession of his new residence. Viola is a very pretty girl, and it mayn't be a bad idea to establish some little intimacy between our place and Martinstower before—"

"I understand," said Lizzy, nodding her head knowingly. "Viola would make a splendid fine lady, and so would Blanche. Wouldn't it be glorious?"

"Lizzy," said her father, sharply, "you will oblige me by moderating your tone somewhat. There is somebody coming down the road—hush!"

The words were yet on his lips as a tall, well built young man, in a coarse gray overcoat and a soft felt hat, came up.

"Can you tell me the way to Martinstower, sir?"

"Martinstower!" repeated Elliott, staring at the stranger, while Lizzy's black eyes dilated wider than ever. "Upon my word, it is a strange coincidence, young sir. You are undoubtedly Mr. Hartwell, referred to in the letter I this morning received from Maurice Martin—and I beg leave to introduce myself as Job Elliott, agent for the estate."

"Letter!" repeated the young man; has the letter but just arrived?"

"This morning," returned Elliott, courteously. "Perhaps you will return with me to-night, and we can go over the property to-morrow. I have the less hesitation in extending an invitation to you, young man, as your employer gives me to understand that you are an exceedingly worthy person, although—ahem—of commonplace extraction."

The stranger had removed his hat, probably out of compliment to the red-fingered young lady, and stood with a pair of large blue eyes fixed on Elliott's rather pompous face

"Thank you, sir," he said, composedly, "As it is late, and I am totally unacquainted in the vicinity, I shall accept your hospitable offer."

Viola Elliott, a handsome, olive-cheeked girl of about twenty, was eagerly awaiting her father, just within the threshold of the cosy, though plainly furnished family room.

"Oh, papa! Is it true that Martin is—"

She stopped short, and Blanche, a plump, languishing blonde who was curled up on the sofa, with a novel in her hand, burst into a giggle as the confidential clerk's tall figure loomed up behind her portly parent.

"My dear," said Elliott, flourishing his hand, "this is Mr. Hartwell, the secretary—clerk—I scarcely know what to call him—dispatched by Mr. Martin to prepare the mansion for his fitting reception."

Viola bent her head stiffly. Blanche just nodded. Truly the confidential clerk felt that his greeting could scarcely be characterized as over warm.

"Papa," whispered Viola, following her father into the dining room, "what made you ask him home with you just when you are so hurried?"

"Hurried, Viola?"

"That's just a man's view of things," pouted the young lady. "You might have known that Blanche and I have nothing fit to wear—we must have our new pink dresses made against Mr. Martin's return—and the best bedroom must be repapered, and the parlor paint is shocking, and here you bring a great staring fellow to lounge round in the way. Why couldn't he go to the village tavern?"

"My dear, you forget that he is Maurice Martin's confidential clerk."

"No papa, I don't forget anything of the sort," retorted Viola sharply. "But I am sure that it is no way to give Mr. Martin a favorable impression, for him to find us hand and glove with his trumpery clerk. He will suppose—he must suppose—that our associations are of the very lowest! Papa, it is too bad!"

And Miss Viola burst into tears.

"I am astonished at papa," added Blanche, who had entered to participate in the discussion. "Inviting a clerk—a common clerk—to our house! At any rate he must sleep in the little dark room over the kitchen. So Viola, we can have the best bedroom papered just as if he were not here."

"Papa," resumed Viola, still brooding on the original grievance, "what did possess you to invite him here?"

"My dear," returned the perplexed paterfamilias, "I wished to conciliate Mr. Martin by every means in my power. Of course I don't care for the young man personally. We can get rid of him in a day or two."

The Confidential Clerk, standing in front of the bright red sparkle of the fire in the room beyond, smiled to himself even while a deep indignant flash mounted to his forehead, as he involuntarily overheard the little sotto voce by-play in the other room.

"And this," he murmured to himself, sadly watching the gloomy masses of coal, "is all the welcome a wanderer receives, after twenty years spent upon the sterile rocks of a foreign land! Home! the word has a pretty echo, yet there is something hollow in its sound after all."

"Mr. Confidential Clerk you are crying!"

He started with a quick blush, as a little hand, red and frosted with cold, was laid upon his coat sleeve.

"Crying! I!"

"You needn't try to deceive me, sir," nodded Lizzy Elliott, who had crept to his side, with a white kitten in her arms. "I saw the bright drop sparkling on your eye-lashes like a great diamond, and then I saw it fall upon the hearth. Why are you crying? Is it because you are poor and friendless, and of—of—what did papa call it! Oh, of common place extraction!"

He did not answer. There was something in the soft pitying shine of those black eyes that enthralled his gaze. Lizzy came close to him, winking hard to keep a sympathetic moisture from her own dark lashes.

"Don't cry!" she pleaded, softly. "Cheer up! I know papa is patronizing and the girls are cross, but I'll be your friend! Only think how many men have begun the world as poor and friendless as yourself, and yet have triumphed over fortune."

He smiled.

"My dear little girl——"

"I'm not a little girl!" interrupted Lizzy, indignantly. "I was sixteen last November."

"Well, then, my dear young lady," resumed the Confidential Clerk, smiling, "I will accept your words as an omen of coming good fortune. Tell me about Martinstower. Is it a pretty place?"

"It is a splendid place," corrected Lizzy, with grave enthusiasm. "With marble mantles, you know, all carved like ancient gods and goddesses, and floors of inlaid wood, and ceilings all painted to look like yellow sunsets and spots in the woods when the vines are growing overhead. And there are lawns and wide gravel walks, and I once peeped through the glass doors of the conservatories and saw the great blue passion flowers and cactuses like tassels of flame, and orange trees, with real ripe oranges growing on them. It's like a fairy story."

"Lizzy! Lizzy! you are talking far more than is proper for a child," interrupted Viola, sharply, breaking in upon their tete-a-tete. "Put down that kitten and go to your French immediately."

And as the abashed damsel with the tangled curls obeyed her elder sister's behest, the energetically whispered words, "dignity of the family—nothing but a confidential clerk," reached Hartwell's ear, together with Miss Lizzy's pettish reply: "I don't care—I like him!"

The next morning the Confidential Clerk exchanged "the little room over the kitchen" for a more comfortable and spacious apartment in the village inn, whence he calmly superintended the projected improvements at Martinstower, and all the gossip exchanged between himself and Lizzy was in the course of her daily rambles through the Martinstower woods. If Blanche and Viola had only known the rapidly cementing friendship that had sprung up between the two, what a shock their aristocratic tendencies would have received!

"Lizzy! Lizzy Elliott! I am ashamed of you."

"But, papa, he says he loves me!"

"Loves you!" echoed Viola, holding up her hands. "Papa, only listen to her. A paltry clerk, to dare to fall in love with our Lizzy"

"A mere child, too—not seventeen," chimed in Blanche, whose twenty seventh birthday was looming darkly over her. "Papa, I wish you would buy Lizzy a doll and send her to boarding school."

"Girls! girls! will you give me a chance to speak?" panted Mr. Elliott, despairingly. "Lizzy, I don't know which astonishes me the most—this fellow's audacity or your ridiculous folly?"

"Papa," said Lizzy, gravely, "I intend to marry him."

"Silence!" thundered the old gentleman. "You shall not marry him! I'll write to Maurice Martin to discharge him at once!"

The evening meal was already spread, and the lamps lighted, when Mr. Elliott came in, the next night. Blanche was reading, in a graceful pose that she studied on all occasions, and Viola was clipping the dead leaves off her favorite geranium.

"Where's Lizzy, girls?" said the old gentleman, taking his seat in front of the pile of buttered toast, and liberally helping himself.

"In her room, I suppose," returned Viola. "I have twice rung the bell."

"Go after her, then. She's sulking after her beloved clerk, I suppose," commented Mr. Elliott.

Viola went, but returned almost immediately with a pale, frightened face.

"She's not there, papa; but this note lay on her table."

Mr. Elliott broke the seal, and hurriedly glanced over the tremulously written words, with a face that had grown like ashes:

"By the time you read these words, dearest papa, your Lizzy will be another's. I shall marry Mr. Hartwell. I hope it is not wrong. Indeed, indeed, I loved him."

As he folded the note with stern, rigid features, a light

step crossed the threshold, and Lizzy's arms were around his neck, the Confidential Clerk standing by the door, with a face where pride and indomitable resolution struggled for mastery

"Papa, forgive me—forgive us!"

"I'll see you hanged first!" roared the old gentleman, turning pale round the mouth. "Begone both of you. Beg, starve, if you like; but never come to me for aid or help!"

"Ridiculous!" sobbed Viola.

"Preposterous!" scolded Blanche.

"Be it so," said the clerk, quietly. "Lizzy, we need nothing more than one another's love. Come, my little wife!"

"But, papa," persisted Lizzy, "I wanted to explain—"

"Will you begone!" ejaculated Mr. Elliott, opening the door wide, and motioning towards the twilight road."

"The unnatural minx!" murmured Blanche.

"Married at sixteen—the impertinent thing!" sputtered Viola.

And so Lizzy and her husband left the unfriendly shadow of the paternal roof.

Blanche Elliott, surrounded by an atmosphere of lavendar, vinegar, and eau de-cologne, was just coming out of the hysterics into which Lizzy's unprecedented conduct had thrown her, when there was a low tap at the door, and a young man, bearing a peculiar looking foreign carpet-bag in his hand appeared.

"This is Mr. Elliott, I suppose."

"Yes, sir;" returned the old gentleman, hesitating whether to embrace the stranger as Maurice Martin, or repel him as an emissary from the obnoxious Confidential Clerk.

"Ah—so I concluded. Has Mr. Martin been here to-day?" Elliott started.

"Mr. Martin is in Parnahàm, Brazil."

"I beg your pardon, sir," returned the young man; "I am his secretary, and am quite convinced that he is at this present time at his family estate of Martinstower. Perhaps I had better seek him there. I am told that it is but a mile or two further on."

He retreated, bowing with a foreign profusion of courtesy, leaving Mr. Elliott overwhelmed with amazement.

"My dear!" he said, hurrying back to the sitting-room, "I must go up to Martinstower at once. Mr. Martin has arrived at last."

Blanche sat up, tossing the bright drops of cologne from her curls.

"Oh, papa! you will be sure to bring him back to supper?"

"I'll try, my dear—I'll try," said the flurried senior.

"Papa!" ejaculated Viola, "you are trying to pull your boots on over your slippers!"

"Confound it, so I am—but this affair of Lizzy's has completely unsettled me! Very strange of Maurice to come home without a word of notice to me, his agent!"

So saying, Mr. Elliott darted forth into the darkness like some new style of projectile.

The lights of the stained Gothic window at Martinstower were streaming brightly across the lawn, as he came hurriedly up the broad stone steps and rang the bell.

"Mr. Martin—has he arrived?"

The servant bowed and ushered him into a large room, whose superbly arranged furniture struck Mr. Elliott with an indefinite idea of Luxury. Lizzy was standing by a tall alabaster vase of clinging tropic vines that occupied one of the bay windows, with a colored lamp burning above.

"Papa! oh, papa! you have forgotten me?"

He turned frigidly from her pleading eyes to her husband.

"I have just called to see your master, young man!"

"To see whom, sir?"

"Mr. Martin, of Martinstower."

"I am at your service, Mr. Elliott."

"You are! Who the—mischief cares whether you are or not? I tell you I want to see Mr. Martin."

"Maurice Martin is my name, sir."

Elliott stood aghast.

"Why, I—I thought you were the confidential clerk!"

"I never told you that I was, sir. You chose to take it for granted, and I allowed you that privilege. As the confidential clerk, I wooed and won your daughter—as Maurice Martin, I could have gained no greater treasure!"

"It's all a mistake from beginning to end," exclaimed poor Elliott, wiping the streams of perspiration from his fevered brow. "Lizzy, my dear, come here and kiss me! Son-in-law, you're a trump! Why didn't you tell me of this before?"

"I didn't know it, myself, papa, until we were married," said Lizzy, laughing and blushing; and when I tried to tell you all about it to-night, you wouldn't let me."

"So you were Maurice Martin all the while," said Elliott, with a deep breath. "Well, upon my word and honor! And my little Lizzy is Mrs. Martin, of Martinstower! What will the girls say?"

She nestled up to the aforesaid Maurice, as she spoke, and his look of fond pride sent a strange thrill down into the father's heart. Maurice did love the sixteen year old child—and Lizzy's instincts had led her to the haven of happiness!

"I know I'm very young," faltered Lizzy; "but I'm going to leave off playing with the white kitten: and brush out my curls smooth; and stop climbing fences and jumping across brooks, and—and Maurice says he loves me just as much as if I were a dignified wife forty years old!"

[For the Californian.]

DOING WITHOUT IT.

BY CHARLES G. AMES.

I'VE found some wisdom, in my quest,
That's richly worth retailing:
I've learned that, when one does his best,
There's little harm in failing.

I thought to gather wealth untold,
And made my boast about it:
My wit and toil bring little gold;
I'm just as rich without it.

I said, "The world shall hear my name,
And down the ages shout it!"
I shall not win the bauble, fame;
I'm just as great without it.

Another thing I've had to prove,
Though much I used to doubt it:
One can't be sure of human love,
But one can live without it.

I saw the world with wrong o'ergrown,
And set myself to rout it;
Some age will see it overthrown,
So I can die without it.

I thought to know philosophy,
And teach mankind about it:
My plummet will not sound the sea;
My ship sails on without it.

I may not reach what I pursue,
Yet will I keep pursuing;
Nothing is vain that I can do,
For soul-growth comes of doing.

But wherefore tell you what I know,
When you will not receive it?
When you have lived and learned, I trow,
You're certain to believe it.

THE MINERS' CONVENTION.

THE Board of Trustees of the California Mining Bureau Association, at the suggestion of numerous mining journals and representatives of mining interests, have called a Convention to meet at Sacramento on the 17th day of January. The following is the resolution of the Association:

Resolved, That a Mass Convention of the miners of the State of California be and is hereby called to assemble in the city of Sacramento on Wednesday, the 17th day of January, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock, and that any person engaged in actual mining operations shall be eligible to a seat in said Convention.

That such a Convention of those interested in mining enterprises will result in great benefit to those directly interested as well as to the best interests of the State, is admitted by all. For two years the propriety of such action has been urged, but has failed because no definite plan was arranged. The Association above named has taken the initiatory, and we have no doubt that miners throughout the State will do their part toward making the Convention next month a decided success.

The most important question to come up is the question of Congressional legislation for the mines. Already a bill has been introduced looking to the sale of mineral lands, and no doubt other legislation will be attempted. The wishes of the miners of this coast would not be disregarded by Congress, and the action of the proposed Convention may prevent injudicious legislation by that body.

The State Legislature will be in session during the meeting of the Convention, and will no doubt be enabled to understand the wants of miners, and meet them much better on account of the information gained from practical miners.

Besides these advantages, the mutal benefit to those in attendance will be great. Heretofore there has been little or no system in the working of the mines. Men enter upon mining enterprises without experience and without any knowledge whatever of the business, and in nine cases out of ten they fail, and instead of the failure being charged to the real cause—ignorance of the business—it is set down as evidence of the uncertainty of mining operations.

In farming, manufacturing, and all other kinds of business, frequent meetings are held by those interested for mutual improvement. Those who are experienced in business make their information the common stock of the trade or craft, and these deliberations being published are a source of improvement to all concerned. Such will be the result of the deliberations of those engaged in mining. The experience and processes of a dozen intelligent miners and prospectors communicated to a Convention, would be of more real advantage to the mining interests of the State than a year's experience.—Nevada Transcript.

INTERIOR ITEMS.

THE Reese River Reveille tells an amusing story of a mill attache who, on a late dark night, coming up with two men, over the back of one of whom hung what appeared to be a pair of human legs, thought he had unearthed a murder, and, suddenly presenting his pistol, in a voice of thunder commanded the two to stop. They did stop, when he found the dead body was only a pair of trousers, the legs of which had been tied at the bottom and then filled with innumerable small packages by the miners, who were returning from town, where they had been making necessary purchases, and having a good Thanksgiving time. The legs and waist of the pantaloons had been so filled and stuffed, that hanging over the shoulders of a man travelling with unwonted speed at the inauspicious hour of midnight, they had induced the pardonable error of the man of the mill. Explanations followed amid roars of laughter.

THE Visalia Delta of December 6th has the following: "We learn that two-thirds of the Hate lead, on Clear creek, has been sold to Loveland, Hagerman & Co., of San Francisco, for $20,000. Ten thousand dollars has been refused for one-half of the McKidney mine. Neiswander, Park & Donnell are clearing from $4,000 to $5,000 per week with their mill of five stamps. Another claim has been sold in a lode but recently discovered and scarcely known, for $15,000.

SODA CREEK and other northern tributaries of the Sacramento river, at the head of Shasta valley, says the Yreka Journal, are paying good wages to the miners. The claims are contiguous to plenty of water all the year round, and miners are constantly making good wages when other camps are idle from want of water. Such is the case with all the diggings along the Sacramento river.

THE Los Angeles News of the 5th says a heavy mantle of snow covers the summit of the adjacent coast range of mountains, as also upon the San Bernardino mountains—the evident result of the recent stormy weather experienced there during the part three or four days.

AT the September election in Klamath county there was a tie vote on the offices of County Assessor and County Surveyor, whereupon it has been ordered by the Board of Supervisors of that county that an election be held on the 30th day of December next to fill these offices.

THE Catholics are making arrangements for the establishment of a Female Academy and Parochial School in Oakland, to be under the care of the Sisters of the Order of Jesus and Mary, who are expected to arrive here in the spring from Moutreal, Canada.

MR. TAYLOR, to whom was awarded by the Board of Trustees the contract for laying down a Nicolson pavement on J. street, between Front and Second, says the Sacramento Bee, commenced operations, and is having said portion of J street levelled off for the reception of the base planking.

THE Wide West shaft, which was delayed on account of water, says the Esmeralda Union, is now progressing finely. The Company have put in a pump which answers every purpose in freeing the shaft of drainage.

TO SMOKERS.—Dr. Richardson has found that one good Havana cigar will yield, when its smoke is condensed, a sufficient amount of poisoned matter to induce active convulsions in a rabbit, and six pipes of common shag tobacco will yield sufficient poison to destroy a rabbit in three minutes.—California Youths' Companion.

The deduction is plain and simple: It is very unhealthy for rabbits to smoke good Havana cigars, especially if they aggravate their folly by "condensing" the smoke—a thing which must infallibly produce "active convulsions" of laughter, or some other kind of convulsions, the author of the above treatise being in a manner obscure on this point. Also, it would be in the last degree fool-hardy and absurd for a rabbit to indulge in more than five pipes of "common shag tobacco" unless circumstances rendered it an object with the rabbit to destroy itself "in three minutes" and the advantages to accrue from that object would be impaired by procrastinating to the extent of a minute or two. The moral of the treatise is palpable—rabbits should indulge in tobacco only in the strictest moderation, and it would even be good judgment in them to abstain from its use altogether. But we will remark here casually, in a spirit of friendly consideration for the editor of the California Youths' Companion, that articles written for the instruction of rabbits ought always to be accompanied by the most explicit explanations, because of so inferior an order is their intellectual capacity that they might otherwise fail to understand even the simplest proposition, notwithstanding it contained information of the utmost importance to their well-being. We are compelled to offer this suggestion inasmuch as it will be impossible for us to supply omissions of this nature in future, unless they occur at long intervals. We have done this favor this time at considerable inconvenience, and we must protest against such an office being imposed upon us with any degree of frequency.—Dramatic Chronicle.

THE WICKED BLACK MAN.

CHAPTER I.

MY husband and I were married at the cathedral in Calcutta, in the month of May. Not long after, his health became delicate, and he was compelled to apply for leave of absence, so that the following February found us in our native country. George laughingly said that he was much obliged to his liver for giving him the opportunity of exhibiting his newly-wedded wife before his friends and relatives in the pride of her youth. But I did not sit down to write about myself, nor, indeed, about George, although, if I once begin to speak about him, I can,t leave off, he is such a dear good fellow. My sisters had the impudence to call him plain, but they don't understand the expression that lights up his face when he is animated. But enough of this—I took up my pen to tell you a story—a rather curious affair that happened when I was staying in London.

We were on a visit to my husband's maternal uncle, Sir Peter Peckover, the great railway director, who lives at No. 9 Turtle Gardens, Gormandy square—that is to say, I was on a visit there, for George very soon got tired of the long, wearisome parties, and indeed I am sure they were very bad for his stomach; so he went twenty miles into the country to see an old school-fellow, a clergyman, who has some excellent fishing, and left poor me all alone with his grand relations. I did not like it much, for Sir Peter is very stiff and pompous; Lady Peckover ever so kind, but rather fond of keeping everybody in order; and as for Julia, with whom George was so anxious that I should cultivate an intimacy—well, we have not an idea in common, except on the subject of Venetian point-lace, which we both adore.

One reason why I don't like Julia is, that she has such a dreadfully bad opinion of her fellow-creatures. She thinks deception is the rule, and sincerity the exception, and refuses to believe anything except on what she calls the evidence of her senses. This, however, does not prevent her believing in spirit-rapping. I will give you an instance of her incredulity; it appears trifling, but it leads naturally up to the story which I wish to tell.

One day Julia and I had been to the London Crystal Palace to buy some useless little ornament or other, and were returning on foot. Just as we entered Gormandy square, I cried out: "O, Julia, there's a native of India sweeping a crossing! Poor man! I should so like to speak Hindustani to him, and give him sixpence. How cold he must be, this biting March day!"

"My dear child," returned Julia, with an air of superior wisdom, "you were brought up in the country, were you not, before you went out to India?"

"Entirely," I answered.

"Well, then, take the benefit of my metropolitan experience, and don't waste your sixpence on so unworthy an object. If your sixpence is burning in your pocket, give it to mamma for her 'Laundresses' Mutual Benefit Club.'"

"But it would be such fun talking Hindustani to a native in London," I pleaded.

"You would only be encouraging laziness and vice," said Julia severely. "This man, if really a native of India, must be a Lascar, and ought to have returned home with his ship. But I don't believe he is an Indian at all. He is probably an Irishman."

"An Irishman! my dear Julia; look at his dress and his complexion."

"The effects of walnut-juice," replied Miss Peckover sternly. "If you were to come behind him unawares and run a pin into him" (Julia said this with quite a relish, as if she would really like to do it,) "the bad language which he would infallibly make use of would be in the Irish dialect."

Julia had dragged me along while we were talking, so that by the time she had spoken this last sentence, we had reached home.

Two gentleman called that afternoon—one was Mr. Fish-plate Gage, who is said to be a very clever person, but I don't care the least about him, for he talks of nothing but railway matters; the other, Mr. Arthur Long Bowman, a barrister in the Temple, who never gets any briefs, but lives partly on his father, and partly on his contributions to the magazines. He is very amusing, and we had a most agreeable conversation together, while Julia and Mr. Gage were solemnly discussing the prospects of the bill which the Great Extension Railway had brought before Parliament for a line between Pedlington Parva and Stoke Pogis.

"Apropos of the number of foreign nationalities settled in London, Mr. Bowman," I said, "do you believe there are any Hindu crossing-sweepers? My cousin Julia declares they are all Irishmen."

"Miss Peckover must be extra-skeptical, then, even in this skeptical age," replied Mr. Bowman. "Why, there is an unmistakable Hindu who sweeps a crossing within two hundred yards of this house."

"The very man whom I noticed as my cousin and I were coming home! In Gormandy square, is he not?"

"Yes. Now, I am not skilled in Oriental languages, but I have not the least doubt he is a genuine native. Besides, I have studied the crossing-sweeper, as an interesting variety of the human species, in all his phases. I have watched him slink homewards with his broom under his arm; I have seen him, having deposited that valuable tool in his humble garret, re-emerge in a pea-jacket, with an independent bearing, for the purpose of purchasing the tripe, or the sheep's-head, or the saveloy which forms his savory evening meal. As for the Hindu in London, my dear Mrs. Miles, he is a wonderful creature—wonderful for the tenacity with which he clings to the customs of his fatherland. I could take you, if it were a fit place for a lady to visit, to an oriental colony in the far east of London, where, but for the difference of buildings and climate, you might conceive yourself in Calcutta. No. 11 in that street (I like to be exact,) to outward appearance an ordinary house, is in reality a heathen temple, chock full of idols, where, regardless of the clergyman of the parish, the expatriated Hindu does solemn poojah; while in the back-yard, aided by the poles and lines of a conniving washerwoman, the dread ceremonies of the churruck are inaugurated. You know what I mean?"

"Of course: swinging with hooks fastened in their flesh."

"Precisely. Nay, I have heard, but will not vouch for the fact," continued Mr. Bowman, gravely, "that, on one occasion, a worn-out Blackwall omnibus was purchased at Aldridge's Repository by a number of Hindus. Can you guess their object, Mrs. Miles?"

"I can," I answered with a shudder—"for a Juggernaut-car."

"Just so," said Mr. Bowman. "The massive figure-head of a condemned East Indiaman served for the god; while the omnibus, crammed with yelling devotees, was driven up and down the confined space of that back-yard. To depict such a scene, with its combined elements of grotesquerie and horror, would require the pencil of a Fuseli."

Compared with this exciting conversation, how tame and prosaic sounded our neighbors' dialogue!

"The only real opposition proceeds from Jackson," I heard Mr. Gage say. "Everybody else has been bought off. We've offered him a station close to his park-gates, if he likes, but he won't listen to it."

"His ideas must be very old-fashioned," observed Julia quietly.

I forgot to say that Mr. Gage and Julia were lovers, and that this was their way of courting. When I think of my dear George, and remember his romantic sentiments, his chivalric enthusiasm, so accordant with my own feelings, I cannot be too thankful that—but I will say no more on that subject.

For a wonder, there was no dinner party that night, and we passed a very pleasant and quiet evening: that is to say, Sir Peter dozed comfortably in an arm-chair by the fire, with an anti macassar over his head; Lady Peckover examined a formidable pile of red-covered tradesmen's books; Julia practiced choice morceaux from "Mirella" on the piano-forte; and I composed a delightful y long letter (four sides of close writing and crossed) for dear George, in exchange for his shabby little epistle of ten lines, which was all occupied with the description of a gigantic pike which he had captured. About 11 o'clock, we all went up stairs; but I sat up till 12 brushing my hair, and reading over a choice packet of George's love-letters—models of manly devotion and—but I forbear.

My fire had begun to burn low, as a hint that I had better go to bed: and I had just folded the last of these beloved letters, when I recollected that I had left my workbox down stairs. I did not like to leave it there till the morning, for it contained a bracelet which was George's first present, and I could not have slept quietly if it had not been in my own keeping. It was very provoking, for at the Peckovers' house there is nothing but gas burned—gas in the kitchen, in the sitting-rooms, and in the bedrooms. If there had been a wax-taper in the room, I should have lighted it, of course; and if there had been a box of lucifers, I should have taken them with me: but there was no taper, and not a single match in the ornamental box placed on my dressing-table. I did not care to carry a lighted allumette in my hand, for fear of setting fire to Sir Peter's beautiful carpets; so I determined to go down in the dark. I remembered exactly where I had left the workbox: it was on the left-hand corner of the Louis-Quatorze table in the breakfast parlor; I felt that I could lay my hand on it at once.

My heart beat a little quicker than usual as I descended the stairs, everything seemed so preternaturally quiet; but I reached the breakfast-parlor in safety, felt about for the Louis-Quatorze table, discovered it, and found my workbox. I was just about to quit the room, when I heard a slight noise outside, which startled me terribly; it was as if somebody had dropped two or three spoons and forks. I felt half inclined to faint, and opened the door as noiselessly as possible. My attention was immediately attracted by a light, which streamed out from under a closed door in the passage.

"Perhaps, after all," I said to myself, "I have alarmed myself needlessly. I remember now that that is the pantry-door; and no doubt Mr. Jeakes, the butler has sat up late to-night gossiping, and is now counting his plate." The thought had scarcely passed through my mind, when the door slowly, and a figure appeared, bearing in one hand a kitchen candlestick, in the other a plate-basket full of silver. Was it the figure of any person belonging to the house? If it had been, my knees would not have trembled under me, nor should I have sunk down upon the floor in a semi-conscious swoon. At length, by a strong mental effort, I recovered sufficient strength to raise myself up; and, nervously clutching my workbox, I made my way slowly up stairs. As soon as I entered my room, I locked and bolted the door, and then sat down in a chair to reflect. The fire had gone out, but the gas, which I had turned up to its highest point made the room look bright and cheerful. I looked at the clock—it was past one. I must have lain for upwards of an hour in the half-fainting state. It was too late now to alarm the house. The mischief was done; and the perpetrator of the deed had doubtless long since departed with his spoil. Besides, to tell the truth, I did not dare to venture out into those long dark passages again; so I crept into bed.

CHAPTER II.

"THIS is a most extraordinary story, my dear Isabella," said Lady Peckover to me, as she slowly and majestically descended the stairs on the following morning.

"Neither Sir Peter nor I heard anything, and I am the very lightest of sleepers. Nor did Bunce"—this was the lady's maid—"report anything wrong when she came in with the hot water. However, here is Jeakes; we will question him."

Mr. Jeakes was a portly person, with a bald head, a reddish nose, and a most formal style of address; in fact, the very beau ideal of a butler.

"Jeakes," said Lady Peckover, "were the doors all properly fastened this morning?"

"I've heard no complaint to the contrary, my lady."

"None of the plate missing?"

"Dear me; no, my lady," answered Mr. Jeakes with almost an injured air. "I count it overnight, and again every morning regular at height o'clock."

"There, Isabella!" said Lady Peckover, turning to me; "you see, my dear, you must have been mistaken. It was most likely an attack of nightmare."

"I assure you," I began. But Lady Peckover gave me a meaning glance, as much as to say: "Speak no more about it in the presence of the servants."

When breakfast was over, and Sir Peter had gone to the city, and the servants had left the room, Julia said: "Mother, what is this mystery between you and Isabella? I heard you talking about it as I was coming down stairs."

"Merely, my dear, that your cousin dreamed that she saw a thief last night stealing the plate."

"Dreamed! aunt?" I exclaimed

"The proof that it was only a dream, my dear Isabella," answered Lady Peckover, "is, that the plate is in perfect order. As soon as I heard your account, I felt it would be satisfactory to Jeakes that he should count over the spoons and forks in my presence. He did so, and none were missing."

"But what was your dream, Isabella?" asked Julia.

"It was no dream at all," I said, quite pettishly, "but a real occurrence. I went down stairs about twelve o'clock to fetch my work-box, and saw a man come out of the pantry with the plate-basket in his hand—"

"The curious thing, Julia," interrupted Lady Peckover, "is that Isabella persists in saying that he was a black man with a turban on his head."

"I can explain it all," exclaimed Julia, triumphantly. "He was like the crossing-sweeper in Gormandy square, wasn't he?"

"Yes, very like," I replied.

"An excellent illustration of the theory of dreams!" cried Julia. "You were talking to me about the crossing-sweeper yesterday, and I heard that silly Mr. Bowman telling you a number of apocryphal anecdotes on the same subject. You possess a vivid imagination, my dear Isabella—I envy you the gift—and the result is that your waking thoughts form the subject of your dreams."

"Really, cousin, you are very provoking," I said, vehemently. "I suppose you won't believe that I came down stairs at all last night."

"Of course, I don't," she answered. "I believe your dream visited you when you were snugly in bed."

At these words I rang the bell.

"Why are you ringing, my dear?" asked Lady Peckover.

"Because I want Mrs. Bunce's evidence to support mine."

"I am particularly anxious not to make a fuss about this," said Lady Peckover. "We shall end in making all the women servants so nervous that they will be giving me warning."

"But, my dear aunt," I replied, "I want to clear my character. I cannot bear to be looked upon as a silly school-girl, magnifying a mere dream into a real occurrence. Now, Julia, you don't believe that I ever went down stairs at all last night—I say I did; and, as a proof of it, I could only find one of my slippers when I got up this morning. I then remembered that when I swooned one of them came off, and, as I was in too great a fright on coming to my senses to look for it, I hobbled up stairs without it. Oh! here is Mrs. Bunce."

"Bunce," said Lady Peckover, "where did you find one of Mrs. Miles's bedroom slippers this morning?"

"The housemaid found it, my lady, the first thing this morning, in the breakfast parlor."

"Now, Julia, I exclaimed, "will you believe that I went down stairs."

"I begin to think there is more in this than a mere dream," said my cousin, thoughtfully. "I am doubting whether it may not be a case of spiritual manifestation."

"Fiddlestick!" cried Lady Peckover.

"Isabella," pursued my cousin, "possesses just that susceptible sort of organization to which the spirits love to render themselves visible."

"Nonsense, Julia," said Lady Peckover, sternly. "You are frightening Bunce; she is growing quite pale. What's the matter, Bunce?"

"Nothing, my lady," answered Mrs. Bunce, submissively; "only I hope Mrs. Miles haven't seen the ghost."

"The ghost!" exclaimed my aunt, angrily. "What nonsense is this, Bunce?"

"The ghost of the Black Man, my lady," said Bunce, rather unwillingly.

The lady's-maid's words took us all aback. Nobody had disclosed to any of the servants the nature of the appearance which I had just seen, yet Mrs. Bunce had at once guessed it correctly.

Even Lady Peckover looked rather uneasy, while Julia seemed pleased, as if she expected some confirmation of her spiritual theories.

"What is this story, Bunce?" she asked.

"Well, miss, I've never seen anything myself, and Mr. Jeakes and John Thomas, the footman told us woman servants to say nothing about it, for fear of frightning the family! but as Mrs. Miles has seen something, I don't mind mentioning what Mr. Jeakes told me. He says: 'Mrs. Bunce,' he says, 'I would advise you as a friend, being a lady of delicate nerves, not to go down to the basement story, nor, indeed, on the ground floor, after the family's abed.' 'Why not,' I says, 'Mr. Jeakes?' 'Because,' he says, 'the Black Man is reputed to walk.' And then he told us this story. The first tenant that occapied this house was a Colonel Culpepper, a terrible passionate gentleman, as I've heard is the case with most Indian gentlemen, always excepting Mr. Miles, who is the sweetest tempered of—"

"Never miud my husband, Mrs. Bunce," I said "Go on with your story."

"Well, miss—ma'am, I should say—the Colonel had a black servant whom he treated very cruelly, indeed. Nothing came amiss to throw at him when the Colonel was vexed. Paper-weights, dish-covers, books from the circulating library, anything. One day he threw the clothes-brush at him. The poor black man took to his bed and died. An inquest was held, miss, as was only right and proper; but the Colonel, who was rolling in money, bribed the parish beagle, and he summonsed a packed jury, composed entirely of retired civilians, who retured a verdict of sun stroke, caused by the peculiar effect of the British sun in January on the Hindu constitution. And now, as Mr. Jeakes says, his spirit goes perambulating about, demanding justice."

"What became of Colonel Culpepper?" asked Lady Peckover.

"Took ill directly after, my lady," replied Mrs. Bunce, in an awful voice, "and died in a state of raving madness in Charing Cross Hospital, with a straight-waistcoat on, and two medical students holding a feather bed beneath the wiudow perpetually, for fear he should leap out."

As soon as Mrs. Bunce had concluded her story, and retired to her own domain, Lady Peckover said: "It is extraordinary how superstitious uneducated people still are! Bunce evidently believes this absurd tale."

"I am inclined to believe it also, mother," observed Julia. "These phenomena, singular as they may seem, are in strict accordance with natural laws, if we could but ascertain what these laws are. I am only surprised that the Colonel's spirit does not manifest itself as well as that of the Hindu."

"I should be very much surprised, Julia," I commenced, quietly, "if it did, considering that Colonel Culpepper is still living."

"Still living!" exclaimed my cousin.

"Yes—at Cheltenham. He is an old friend of my mother's family, and, though a little impatient in temper, one of the kindest of men. I believe Mrs. Bunce's story to be a cruel libel, and, for the sake of Colonel Culpepper's reputation, I am determined to find out the truth of this affair. You cannot help allowing, my dear aunt," I said, "without agreeing in Julia's supernatural view, that there is something more in it than a mere dream?"

"There is," answered Lady Peckover; "and I assure you, my dear, it makes me feel thoroughly uncomfortable."

"Then I shall insist," I said "on George's coming back to town at once, and assisting me to ferret it out."

CHAPTER III.

George was a little unwilling to leave his pike fishing and his clergyman (I confess I felt rather jealous of that clergyman,) but he is such an excellent, self-denying creature, that he was as amiable as possible when he returned. He had been away for nearly three weeks, and it was so pleasant to feel my hand once more resting on his arm when we went out sight-seeing, instead of being dependent on Julia, who really wears such preposterous skirts (although I try to impress upon her that the fashion is changing,) that it is difficult to get within a yard of her. George listened most patiently to my account of the ghost-story, and I could see a clever sort of twinkle in his eyes when I had finished it, as much as to say: "Trust me for unravelling the matter." Then my dear husband spoke thus:

"Write a letter to Colonel Culpepper, detailing the lady's-maid's story, and ask him for an immediate reply. Don't let the servants see the letter, but drop it into the pillar-box at the street corner."

I did as my husband bade me; and three days aftewards received the following reply, brought by a commissionaire from the Oriental Club:

My Dear Isabella—I certainly did not expect that the first letter written to me by you since your marriage would contain an accusation of "aggravated manslaughter," but so it is, and you will perhaps be surprised to learn that I think the charge sufficiently grave to require my presence in London for the purpose of rebutting it; so I have come up from Cheltenham; and if your husband (whose acquaintance I wish to make—I knew his father during the first Burmese war) will give me a call at the Club this evening, I thiuk our two wise heads may devise a scheme which will effectually absolve me from having to sign myself "the conscience-smitten murderer." Ferdinand Culpepper.

When George came home that night, he whispered to me: "Don't say a word to uncle, aunt, or Julia, about Culpepper's arrival. And now, Bella, would you like to see the ghost again?"

I shuddered slightly, and answered: "Dear George, I think I would rather not."

"Because I have a notion," he continued, "that it may walk to-night. Culpepper is coming here to try and get a sight of it. I am to let him in quietly at the front door at half-past eleven."

"Do you know, George," I said gravely, "Colonel Culpepper's conduct makes me feel very uneasy. I cannot bear to think it of such a nice old gentleman, and yet I can't help fancying there is some foundation for that dreadful story of Mrs. Bunce's.

George's reply to this was a burst of laughter, which he checked suddenly, and then said in a hollow voice: "In good truth, there is a very serious foundation for that story."

"O George," I exclaimed, "you make me feel as if you had put a cold key down my back! I am getting quite nervous."

"Then you had better not stop to see the ghost, dear Bella. Go up stairs, and get ready for bed. But don't make yourself thoroughly deshabillee—I may have occasion to summon you and the rest of the family between this and morning."

After imploring George to be careful, I crept unwillingly up stairs, waving my hand over the bannisters at each successive landing, until the dear fellow was no longer visible. I then entered my bedroom, and, sitting down in the easy-chair by the fire, pretended to read a book. It was of no use; I could not read, so, instead of reading, I set my door ajar, and listened intently.

The Peckovers are early people when they have no company, and by half past eleven the house was perfectly quiet. The French clock on my mantelpiece had just chimed the half-hour, when I heard the front door opened in a very stealthy manner. My female curiosity could resist no longer, and I stole down stairs, hiding myself in an especially dark angle near the drawing room. I heard Colonel Culpepper's well-remembered voice; I also heard George whisper to him: "Better take off your boots, Colouel. Here are a pair of list slippers."

From the smothered merriment which proceeded from the two gentlemen, I judged that the Colonel had seated himself in one of the hall chairs, and that my husband was acting as boot-jack in ordinary.

There was a long pause after this, during which I had gradually descended still nearer to the unconscious ghost-watchers. Presently George whispered: "Colonel, d'ye see that light over the kitchen stairs? He's come!"

At these terrifying words, I flew up stairs, three steps at a time, with a horrible dread that some skeleton form was clutching at my skirts. I did not feel safe till I had put a double-locked door between myself and the supernatural world outside.

More than a quarter of an hour had elapsed, when a series of rapid footfalls were heard in the passage; and Something began to twist the handle of my door; my heart died within me, and I had only strength to murmur, "Who's there?" when my husband's voice said: "Why, Bella, are you asleep? Open—quick."

I believe I said: "Why didn't you knock, ducky?" and almost fainted on his shoulder.

"We've managed matters capitally down below," said George; "and now I've roused up uncle and aunt, and Julia, and Jeakes, and Mrs. Bunce; in fact, the whole household. Put a shawl round your shoulders, and come down to the breakfast parlor as soon as you see Sir Peter and my aunt march forth. I've told everybody that they needn't hurry—that it'sn't fire, and that they can make themselves look as elegant as they please."

At length we were all assembled. "George," said Sir Peter, rather surlily, as he suppressed a yawn: "I hope this is not intended for a practical joke?"

"O no, sir—nothing of the sort," replied my husband. "I have invited you all down stairs in order to show you the celebrated Black Man."

I glanced round the room at these words, and observed with some surprise that while the countenances of all the others expressed merely curiosity or astouishment, there was a look of guilty apprehension in the face of Mr. Jeakes, the butler, and of his subordinate, John Thomas, the footman.

"Before proceeding further," continued my husband, "you must allow me to call an important witness into court—Colonel Culpepper."

At these last two words, pronounced in a loud tone, the door was opened, and Colonel Culpepper entered, bowing gravely and ceremoniously to Sir Peter and Lady Peckover.

"Sir Peter," said the Colonel, "you must pardon my intrusion into your house at this unseasonable hour; but I wish to clear my character from a stigma that has been cast upon it. I have been accused by your butler yonder of having died in a state of insanity, after murdering my Bengalee manservant, Ramchunder. The story of my death is manifestly untrue. If you, Sir Peter, will have the kinduess to unlock the pantry door, you will be able to decide on the remainder of the allegation."

At these words we all crowded into the passage, where George had turned the gas on brilliantly. Sir Peter unlocked the door, and disclosed to view the trembling figure of the crossing sweeper of Gormandy square!

"Now, ladies and gentlemen," said Colonel Culpepper, "that is Ramchunder, whom I was forced to dismiss from my service for making too free with my spirit-chest, as well as for other irregularities. Speak English, Ramchunder, and say if that be not true."

"Iss, sahib," answered Ramchunder, joining his hands together, after the imploring fashion of Asiatics.

"And now, uncle," interposed my husband, "I well tell you what we found this worthy colored gentleman doing: we found him doing the footman's work—cleaning the plate and brushing your clothes."

"Is this true?" demanded Sir Peter magisterially.

"Iss, sahib," said Ramchunder. "Mas'r Jeake, he say he very much tire; Mas'r Thomas, he say he very much tire too. He say: 'You nigger, I give you two shilling a week do my work.' What could poor Ramchunder do? He very bad off now, since leave good Colonel Sahib, sweeper's trade bad now, plenty March wind. Gentlefolks say: 'No dirt now—no copper sweeper give.'"

"Well, Jeakes, what have you to say to this?" asked the master of the house.

"I don't deny it, Sir Peter," said Mr. Jeakes, with dignified suavity of manner; "but I cannot 'elp asserting, Sir Peter, that you brought it on yourself by the non-providing of a boy in buttons. Me and John Thomas will not demean ourselves by vulgar work, such as plate-cleaning, knives, and clothes; and we thought we was doing a hact of charity by employing this pore benighted heathen for such hinferior occupations."

It is not necessary for me to state who was dismissed and who was not; it is enough to say that the house was never afterwards haunted by the Black Man.

The last number of the British Quarterly contains an interesting paper, "Notes on the United States since the War," from the pen of its editor, Dr. Vaughan, who vacates the chair which he has filled for twenty-one years with advantage to himself and to the satisfaction of his readers. In this paper Dr. Vaughan describes an interview which he had with General Grant, whom he makes to speak thus: "If your newspapers are to be believed, we never went into the field but to be beaten. I have been in more engagements than any other man in the service, and have not been beaten yet. On the continent of Europe, too, the disposition, it appears, has been to harp on the same string. Say what they will, this war has been the biggest job of its sort that has been done in this world, and it will be a chapter to itself in the history of war—nothing like it has gone before."

Steffanone has been singing lately in Odessa. She has added to her repertoire the part of Amelia in the "Ballo."

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, WM. J. BINGHAM. } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

FRANCIS BRET HARTE, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1865.

WHEN "WOMAN" SHOULD NOT BE "LOVELY."

IT has been the weak delusion of poets, moralists, and romancers of all ages that it was the especial duty and privilege of woman to be charming at all times. That the peculiar graces of her person, and the tasteful elegancies of her dress were never so acceptable as when they came in contact with and softened the hard material quality of business, and the harsh, cold abstraction of masculine pursuits. When it has pleased her to take part in man's avocations, any lack of force or energy was fully condoned by the accession of refinement and gentleness in the functions of her particular trade or profession. The Rev. Laurence Sterne—perhaps a too enthusiastic witness—has left on record her fascinating qualities as a glove-vender; there are some of us who can bear evidence to her gentle ministrations as Hebe at restaurants and hotel-tables, and some who have felt her gentle wisdom as a medical practitioner. But in all these instances, muliebrity was the central attraction. We were willing she should take any occupation: we only stipulated she should carry into it the sweet influences of her sex.

But this is a ridiculous and fatal error; we are the victims of a miserable fallacy, and we learn the fact from a woman. Mrs. Jane Swisshelm, as the advocate of her sex, in a letter to the Washington Chronicle, on the employment of women in the Departments, utterly explodes our sentimental theories. We have been laboring under a mild delusion. Mrs. Swisshelm asserts distinctly that the quality of feminine fascination is inimical to business; that there is a time to captivate and a time to repair from captivating; that the time to captivate is not during business hours, and that a woman's capacity as a "business man" is in inverse proportion to her attractions as a woman. Mrs. S. thinks that in the present misconception of this idea, woman demoralizes her business associates. By not rendering herself unattractive, she distracts their attention. "Women," says Mrs. S. severely, "persevere in carrying the drawing-room into the office." To enforce this assertion, she gives the following singular illustration:

"A fixed rule of good breeding excludes the shop from the parlor. A man who lugs his business, habitually, into his social hours is always a bore; and what should we think of one who went to his counting or consulting-room in the ball-dress of the previous evening?"

We cannot help hoping, for the credit of the sex, that Mrs. S. is a little careless in her illustration. Certainly, Thackeray, Reade, About, or Balzac, in their most cynical moments, were never guilty of so gross an incivility. "The shop," indeed. We have been willing to admit the force of woman's fascination in the sphere of business, but, if we are to infer from Mrs. Swisshelm that these fascinations are in the line of business, our position becomes untenable at once through the force of her irresistible logic. We are crushed, and Mrs. S. triumphs over us. She continues severely:

"During business hours men require to be released from the restraints of the drawing-room—not certainly from the rules of good manners or good morals, but from the etiquette of society. In the social circle it is all right; they should pay all due attention to their "natural enemies" who continue to present them with the old apple of disobedience; but to ask them to keep up a state of chronic admiration for taper waists, glossy ringlets, bewitching smiles, and all the et ceteras, is a strain upon human endurance which must snap the cord. In business hours men must 'mind their own business,' or the world's work will be left undone; and, if the presence of women among them disturbs the even flow of thought, the women must and should get out of the way."

But our fair philanthropist does not confine herself to uttering these abstract truths. She gives us concrete expression, and details the faults and follies of business women. She is incensed at the jaunty and coquettish appearance of the female clerks at Washington. She inveighs against their tight shoes, their "spreading hoops and flashily festooned and ornamented skirts," which invite attention to their feet, "the jaunty hats and cunning feathers, the poor hair stuffed with 'rats' and 'mice' and bundles of buffalo hide, which make one sick with disgust, and then bedizened with buds and spangles enough to satisfy the vanity of a brace of Chippewa squaws;" and, carried away by her disgust, she asserts that it would "be better for humanity that all this class of Government employees should starve at home than that they should corrupt public morals." Terrible as this picture is, we think it is not as strong as it might be made. Mrs. Swisshelm should have completed it by painting the effects of this battery of fascination. She should have drawn for us the demoralizing spectacle of grave officials lifting their hats to the fair invader; of young clerks of the Fifth and Sixth class allowing their eyes to stray from their work to follow the little feet and jaunty hats; of the increased expenditure for patchouli, gay neckties and new vests among the younger clerks; of the distracting effects of contiguous desks; of the utter oblivion to arithmetic and calculation produced by proximity to graceful heads, taper waists, and natty holland aprons with coquettish pockets; of time taken from public duties in whispering recollections of last evening's party, or of quotation from Maud or Locksley Hall taking precedence of the comparison of public documents. Mrs. S. might have wound up with an affecting tableau of the male and female clerks going home together. We can only account for this omission in the belief that the spectacle was too trying for feminine contemplation.

With these terrible conditions affecting female employment, we turn anxiously to Mrs. S. for some suggestion of relief and remedy. That recommended by her is to the effect that woman should totally free herself from all entangling charms—should make herself particularly ugly and uninteresting. How this is to be done, we are told in the following incident from the career of that noble and self-sacrificing woman:

A brother editor, by whose desk mine had stood for nearly two years, turned to me one day with a puzzled look, and asked:

"Is anything the matter with your hair?"

To my answer that there was not, he replied:

"Then why do you wear that thing on it?"

I said it kept my hair out of the way.

"But,' he added, "do you know how old it makes you look? A gentleman, speaking of you but yesterday, thought you were fifty. He was surprised when I said you could not be more than thirty."

I knew before that my toilette was a success.

Brief and epigrammatic as this is, we could have wished it had been more explicit. We should like to have known the peculiar shape of that disorganizing head-dress, and we cannot help fearing that the practical value of this incident is lost through Mrs. S.'s unwarrantable reticence. The style and pattern should have been given for the benefit of the sex who may be similarly situated, and we ought to know how much the natural appearance of the woman has to do with the effect. A head-dress that could make any woman look old and ugly would at least be an event in millinery. But there is one feature of this incident which should not be lightly passed over—its similarity to an episode in the career of Miss Sally Brass, in The Old Curiosity Shop. We can fancy the blush of womanly satisfaction which suffused Mrs. S.'s cheeks at the unconscious compliment of her brother editor, but what if she had been subjected to a previous experience like that to which Dick Swiveller subjected Miss Sally Brass. We are tempted, as a companion picture to Mrs. Swisshelm's incident, and as a warning to others, to extract a portion of that episode:

"Mr. Swiveller, by degrees, began to feel strange influences creeping over him—horrible desires to annihilate this Sally Brass—mysterious promptings to knock her head dress off, and try how she looked without it. There was a very large ruler on the table—a large black shining ruler. Mr. Swiveller took it up and began to rub his nose with it.

"From rubbing his nose with the ruler, to poising it in his hand, and giving it an occasional flourish after the tomahawk manner, the transition was easy and natural. In some of these flourishes it went close to Miss Sally's head; the ragged edges of the head-dress fluttered with the wind it raised; advance it but an inch, and the brown knot was on the ground; yet the unconscious maiden worked away, and never raised her eyes."

"Well, this was a great relief. It was a good thing to wait doggedly and obstinately until he was desperate, and then snatch up the ruler, and whirl it about the brown head-dress with the consciousness that he could have it off if he liked."

We do not mean to suggest that Mrs. Swisshelm's brother editor did anything of this kind. On the contrary, he was evidently subdued from the first. But we merely offer it as a hint, that the wearing of even such articles are fraught with peril from the hands of men. The exact medium between attraction and repulsion—the precise garment that shall not provoke a laying on of masculine hands either through love or hate—seems to be a delicate question as yet undecided.

It was not only in this instance that Mrs. S. asserted her superiority over the weakness of her sex. She snubbed a sub-editor once, who politely offered to accompany her home when her duties had kept her at her desk until near midnight. She otherwise so conducted herself that, in her own language, "I think it seldom occurred to any of them that I was not one of them." "This may appear unwomanly," adds our fair reformer, "but I insist that if women are to be the companions of men in public employment, the idea of sex must not be the prevailing thought of their lives. They must establish 'business relations,' and keep them purely and entirely business relations. The display of personal charms, of adornment, of dress, of graces of conversation, should be reserved for the social circle."

We can add nothing to this. Most reformers and enthusiasts have a feminine nature, and are apt to argue more from instinct and impulse, than reflection and judgment. They are prone to generalize and to spread their one fact over a space so large that it finally becomes imperceptible, and its effect is lost. Seldom massing their forces to one point, it is the experience of these feminely-minded philanthropists to be beaten in detail. Mrs. Swisshelm—with all her ambition—has this radical weakness in her logic. She has spoken some half-truths, but their effect is lost through the extra shrillness of her declamation. It is not thus that the painful problem of woman's employment, is to be settled. To make the follies of a few giddy girls the text of a philippic on womanly graces, and to declare an experiment a failure because it does not involve an impossibility and a total change of woman's nature, is a poor way to advocate the rights of the sex. The war has thrown thousands of helpless wives, daughters, and sisters upon the hard world. Better that the Government should employ them even if they do flirt, and wear hoops, jaunty hats and tight shoes at their business, than that they should be left open to those temptations to which, by Mrs. Swisshelm's own argument, their nature renders them peculiarly susceptible. We trust Mrs. Swisshelm was only in bad temper, but in her abuse of the vanities of her sex, she should remember that there may be as much foolish vanity in the wearing of such a head dress as she has triumphantly described as in the most jaunty hat and cunning feather of her weaker sisters.

DRAMATIC.

AT Maguire's Opera House, on Monday evening, "Kathleen Mavourneen" was brought out, to a very fair house. Irish drama seems to be the rage of late. Boucicault is not the author of "Kathleen Mavourneen," but his repertoire has been largely drawn upon for its construction, the "Colleen Bawn" lending an abundance of material, and "Arra-na-Pogue" contributing a fair quota. The scenic effects of "Kathleen Mavourneen" are decidedly the best points of the drama. But it seems singular that so much should have been lavished to illustrate a dream—for all the woe and anguish and murder turn out to have been but the heroine's dream at last. After the interest of the audience has been excited by so much stirring and sentimental business, the dénouement seems a sell—and as a general thing the victims of a sell are the very ones who do not enjoy the joke. Had it not been for the rollicking fun introduced in the last scene—a dance on St. Patrick's Eve—the curtain would have fallen on an indifferently satisfied audience. Tom Taylor's prize play of "The Serf" is underlined for production on Tuesday evening. It will be placed on the stage with new scenic effects and costumes, and accompanied with the original music. This afternoon and evening "Kathleen Mavourneen" will be performed.

At the Academy, on Thursday evening, J. B. Rochette took a benefit—a benefit which, alas! witnessed many a row of empty seats. This evening Mme. Anna Bishop opens (with "Norma") an opera season of six nights, having every prospect of success.

The Metropolitan opened the week with the "Octoroon," giving the "Colleen Bawn," on Tuesday, "Jeannie Deans" on Wednesday, and "Arrah-na-Pogue" (for the last time,) on Thursday. Friday evening Mrs. Judah, about as popular a lady as the stage of the present day contains, an excellent actress and a most estimable woman, took a benefit which was very largely attended, if the box sheet early in the day may be built upon for conclusions. This evening the treasurer appeals to his friends. The French drama, the Buislays, and a Ballet are down for the occupancy of the Metropolitan hencelorth, Mr. Wheatleigh retiring from the management. We trust that Mrs. Sedley Brown the new favorite, Mrs. Judah, Mr. Leach, and the many other pleasing ladies and gentleman of this theatre will not absent themselves permanently.

The Young Ladies' Festival.—There will doubtless be a large attendance at Dashaway Hall next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings to join in the festivities, and to see how grand an entertainment the young ladies can get up. As the object is to sustain the Rev. Mr. Benton, of the Taylor street church, very many will go, and the more so because wit, beauty and grace will spread the table and furnish the articles. Willis' Brass Band will be in attendance every evening, and on Wednesday evening there will be dancing.

The Sunday Magazine, an American reprint of an English periodical, has been furnished us by the San Francisco agent, Mr. Loomis. Its contents, as the title would imply, are designed apparently more for moral and religious instruction than literary entertainment. It has a mild flavor of tracts, and a serious complexion.

The California Steam Navigation Company's new boat the Capital made her trial trip on Thursday.

NEW BOOKS.

ANNUALS AND HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

THICK as autumnal leaves and as delicately tinted, Holiday Books, Annuals, and Keepsakes strew the counters of our publishers. The window of A. Roman & Co., contains a kind of Stratford-on-Avon Shakspeare monument of over fifty different editions and styles of the Great Dramatist, from miniature toy volumes to heavy quartos Shakspeare with new readings; Shakspeare according to Johnson, Stevens, and Collier; Shakspeare annotated and emended to such an extent that the rivulet of original text is lost sight of in the heavily embossed margin of commentary; Shakspeare plain, unadorned, and adorned the most; Shakspeare exquisitely illustrated; Shakspeare bound in all styles; printed on all shades of tinted paper, and in all type from pica to diamond. The show-cases within the store are filled with gift books richly and lavishly ornamented, or fashioned in a nicety of taste—the very dilettanteism of book-making. "The Royal Gallery of British Art," a large folio of handsome engravings, occupies a prominent position. A beautiful volume entitled "The Festival of Song," a series of evenings with the Poets illustrated with seventy-three original drawings by the leading artists of the Academy of Design; "Jean Ingelow's Songs of Seven," with characteristic illustrations of the seven periods in the life of woman; "Shakspeare's Songs and Sonnets," "Melodies and Madrigals," mostly from the old poets, and "The Poets of the Elizabethan Age" are volumes so equally meritorious, that it is difficult to choose among them.

Gems from Tennyson. With illustrations by Henessy, Kensett, etc., etc. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

"Many a fall of diamond rillets musical," is the appropriate motto of these selections. And certainly a choice more tasteful or one more worthy of the author's genius, could not have been made. The volume comprises not only such short poems as "The Bugle Song," "The Swallow," the songs of "Enid, Elaine, and Vivian," "Break, Break, Break," and others which might, from their size and value, be worthy of the title of gems, but those rare idylls, "Locksley Hall," "Morte D'Arthur," "The Talking Oak," "Godiva," "Sir Galahad," and the "Day Dream." The illustrations (over thirty in number) are from the designs of some of the first English and American artists, and are, with but few exceptions, exquisite reflections of the genius of the text. Those of "Locksley Hall," "The Talking Oak," St. Agnes," "Godiva," and the "Brook" are especially meritorious. The printing and press-work are in the highest style of typographical art; the paper is tinted, and the covers are bevel-edged and adorned with a quaint device and legend. The whole volume in style and keeping is instinct with the refinement and purity of the author's genius.

The remainder of our book review is crowded out this week. The following works have been received, and will be noticed in our next issue:

From H. H. Bancroft & Co.:

De Vane. A Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard, ex-member of the United States House of Representatives from Alabama. Two volumes in one. New York: Blelock & Co.

The Bushrangers. A Yankee's Adventures during his second visit to Australia. By William Thomes. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Prison Life in the South—During the years 1864 and 1865. By Lieut. A. O. Abbott. With illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Sir Jasper's Tenant. A Novel. By Miss M. E. Braddon. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald.

Only a Clod. A Novel. By Miss M. E. Braddon. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald.

From A. Roman & Co.:

Handbook of the Steam Engine. Containing all the rules required for the right construction and management of engines of every class, with the easy arithmetical solution of those rules. Illustrated by sixty seven wood-cuts and numerous tables and examples. By John Bourne, C. E. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

De Vane. A Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard, ex-member of the United States House of Representatives from Alabama. Two volumes in one. New York: Blelock & Co.

Atlantic Tales. A collection of stories from the Atlantic Monthly. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Georgy Sandon; or, A Lost Love. By Ashford Owen. Second edition. Boston: Loring.

What Came Afterwards. A Novel. Being a sequel to Nothing But Money. By T. S. Arthur. New York: Carleton.

The Tenth and Twelfth Books of the Institutions of Quintilian. With explanatory notes. By Henry S. Frieze, Professor of Latin in the State University of Michigan. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

Train's Speech to the Fenians. At the Philadelphia Academy of Music, October 18, 1865. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers.

[For the Californian.]

A VENERABLE IMPOSTER.

BY BRET.

AS I glance across my table, I am somewhat distracted by the spectacle of a venerable head whose crown occasionally appears beyond, at about its level. The apparition of a very small hand—whose fingers are bunchy and have the appearance of being slightly webbed—which is frequently lifted above the table in a vain and impotent attempt to reach the inks: and, always affects me as a novelty at each recurrence of the phenomenon. Yet both the venerable head and bunchy fingers belong to an individual with whom I am familiar, and to whom, for certain reasons hereafter described, I choose to apply the epithet written above this article.

His advent in the family was attended with peculiar circumstances. He was received with some concern—the number of retainers having been increased by one in honor of his arrival. He appeared to be weary—his pretence was that he had come from a long journey—so that for days, weeks, and even months he did not leave his bed except when he was carried. But it was remarkable that his appetite was invariably regular and healthy, and that his meals, which he required should be brought to him, were seldom rejected. During this time he had little conversation with the family, his knowledge of our vernacular being limited, but occasionally spoke to himself in his own language—a foreign tongue. The difficulties attending this eccentricity, were obviated by the young woman who had from the first taken him under her protection—being like the rest of her sex peculiarly open to imposition—and who at once disorganized her own tongue to suit his. This was effected by the contraction of the syllables of some words, the addition of syllables to others, and an ingenious disregard for tenses and the governing powers of the verb. The same singular law which impels people in conversation with foreigners to imitate their broken English, governed the family in their communications with him. He received these evidences of his power with an indifference not wholly free from scorn. The expression of his eye would occasionally denote that his higher nature revolted from them. I have no doubt myself that his wants were frequently misinterpreted; that the stretching forth of his hands toward the moon and stars might have been the performance of some religious rite peculiar to his own country, which was in ours misconstrued into a desire for physical nourishment. His repetition of the word "goo-goo"—which was subject to a variety of opposite interpretations—when taken into conjunction with his size, in my mind seemed to indicate his aboriginal or Aztec origin.

I incline to this belief, as it sustains the impression I have already hinted at, that his extreme youth is a simulation and deceit; that he is really older and has lived before at some remote period, and that his conduct fully justifies his title as A Venerable Imposter. A variety of circumstances corroborate this impression: His tottering walk, which is a senile as well as a juvenile condition; his venerable head thatched with such imperceptible hair that, at a distance, it looks like a mild aureola, and his imperfect dental exhibition. But beside these physical peculiarities may be observed certain moral symptoms, which go to disprove his assumed youth. He is in the habit of falling into reveries, caused, I have no doubt, by some circumstance which suggests a comparison with his experience in his remoter boyhood, or by some serious retrospection of the past years. He has been detected lying awake, at times when he should have been asleep, engaged in curiously comparing the bedclothes, walls and furniture with some recollection of his youth. At such moments he has been heard to sing softly to himself fragments of some unintelligible composition, which probably still linger in his memory as the echoes of a music he has long outgrown. He has the habit of receiving strangers with the familiarity of one who had met them before and to whom their antecedents and peculiarities were matters of old acquaintance, and so unerring is his judgment of their previous character that when he withholds his confidence I am apt to withhold mine. It is somewhat remarkable that while the maturity of his years and the respect due to them is denied by man, his superiority and venerable age is never questioned by the brute creation. The dog treats him with a respect and consideration accorded to none others, and the cat permits a familiarity which I should shudder to attempt. It may be considered an evidence of some Pantheistic quality in his previous education, that he seems to recognize a fellowship even in inarticulate objects; he has been known to verbally address plants, flowers and fruit, and to extend his confidence to such inanimate objects as chairs and tables. There can be little doubt that, in the remote period of his youth, these objects were endowed with not only sentient natures but moral capabilities, and he is still in the habit of beating them when they collide with him, and of pardoning them with a kiss.

As he has grown older—rather let me say, as we have approximated to his years—he has, in spite of the apparent paradox, lost much of his senile gravity. It must be confessed that some of his actions of late appear to our imperfect comprehension inconsistent with his extreme age. A habit of marching up and down with a string tied to a soda-water bottle, a disposition to ride anything that could by an exercise of the liveliest fancy be made to assume equine proportions, a propensity to blacken his venerable white hair with ink and coal dust, and an omnivorous appetite which did not stop at chalk, clay, or cinders, were peculiarities not calculated to excite respect. In fact, he would seem to have become demoralized, and when, after a prolonged absence the other day, he was finally discovered standing upon the front steps addressing a group of delighted children out of his limited vocabulary, the circumstance could only be accounted for as the garrulity of age.

But I lay aside my pen amidst an ominous silence and the disappearance of the venerable head from my plane of vision. As I step to the other side of the table, I find that sleep has overtaken him in an overt act of hoary wickedness. The very pages I have devoted to an exposition of his deceit he has quietly abstracted, and I find them covered with cabalistic figures and wild-looking hieroglyphs traced with his forefinger dipped in ink, which doubtless in his own language conveys a scathing commentary on my composition. But he sleeps peacefully, and there is something in his face which tells me that he has already wandered away to that dim reign of his youth where I cannot follow him. And as there comes a strange stirring at my heart when I contemplate the immeasurable gulf which lies between us, and how slight and feeble as yet is his grasp on this world and its strange realities, I find too late that I also am a willing victim of the Venerable Imposter.

NEALL'S PICTURES.—D. D. Neall's Sketches in Germany—a thin portfolio of photographs taken from his sketches abroad and lately received in this city—are the best introduction to his last picture, the original of one of the "sketches," which now occupies a prominent position on the walls of the Art Union. Like Mr. Neall's other pictures, it is an architectural study, and represents the staircase of the Town Hall at Ratisbon. There are two figures in the foreground, one of whom is relieved against the deep shadow of a vaulted hall beyond, whose mediæval gloom is inteusified rather than softened by the dim light which struggles through a window in the background. The details, wherever the light falls, are faithfully and artistically reproduced, the varied tints of the stones changed with age, or the steps worn with the footprints of past generations. The same accuracy and delicacy of finish which lend such charms to Mr. Neall's sketches of the "Church of Maria Hilf," and "Bamberg Cathedral," as depicted in his portfolio, are visible in his larger painting. It may be detected in one of his earliest designs, the study of a young girl sitting at a gothic window—which was painted in San Francisco, and exhibited at the Fair some five or six years ago. It is scarce three years since this talented young artist left our city with the intention of studying his art in the Continental schools. In that time he has entered the Academy at Munich, connected himself by marriage with a representative of European Art, painted a picture of "St. Marks," which, after eliciting the praise of our first American artists, was finally sold in New York for a handsome sum, and has sent to his fellow citizens in San Francisco this picture of the Town Hall, and the sheaf of sketches already alluded to, as an evidence of his progress and remembrance.

FROM all we can gather, says the Sacramento Bee, a serious fight is going on among the Fenians at the East, the chief seat of the Order being New York, where the Head Centres are located. The same causes which have hitherto prevailed to defeat Irish Independence are at work in America. Dissension is doing its business more surely and rapidly than the slow-going British authorities, and there is a prospect that the great Fenian movement will finally resolve itself into a struggle for political ascendancy in the United States—a struggle which will be severe, but which will be subject to the same drawback which is now bringing ruin to Fenianism.

THE OPERA.—Madame Anna Birhop's opera season will be inaugurated this evening at the Academy of Music with the production of Norma. We are pleased to announce that the six nights have been liberally subscribed, the box-sheet being well dotted with representative season tickets, which augurs favorably for a brilliant little season, and a prospective one of larger import to follow. The principal members of the troupe are Mesdames Bishop and Fleury, and Signors Carmini Morley and Roncovieri, and Mons. Charles. Mr. A. Riet, Jr., will act as conductor. The Opera nights will be Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. On Monday evening next, Donizetti's L'Elisir d' Amore will be given.

MESSRS. H. H. BANCROFT & CO. announce in our advertising columns, this week, that they are fully prepared for the holiday season, with Gilt-Books, Albums, Stationery, etc.

CHILION BEACH, (opposite the Lick House,) make a fine display of holiday presents, Bibles, Juveniles, Illustrated Books, etc. See advertisement.

A FIRST CLASS RESTAURANT.

[The Nation, in an artlele on restaurants and thelr functions, gives the following description of "Delmonlco's:"]

IN 1861 the restaurant was opened which is the most widely known. It is since the beginning of this, at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, that "Delmonico's" has become generally known outside of New York. At first, the corner house, formerly Mr. Grinnell's, contained the whole establishment, but after a few months the house next door was added, and the entire building, a hundred feet wide on Fourteenth street, devoted to the purposes of a restaurant.

If there is any reader of this who has never dined or breakfasted at Delmonico's, he will like to know what the accommodations are. There are two large public dining-rooms, both on the ground floor (rez-de-chaussée, shall we say, when talking of a French restaurant?) and connected. Each of these is about twenty, or perhaps twenty-two feet wide, and about seventy-five feet long. Back of these, also on the ground floor, is the café, an enormous room, perhaps thirty-five by an hundred feet. According to strict etiquette that fare only which is usually supplied by a café ought to be served in this room, to wit: coffee, chocolate, and tea; all wines and liquors and drinks of various kinds: bread and butter; raw oysters; boiled eggs, perhaps, or an omelet, if any one wants to spoil his morning's coffee with them; radishes, olives, cheese, and all the hors d'œuvres; ices. But the kitchen is near and the waiters obliging: you can have almost anything you want at the marble tables, if you are afraid to face the ladies in the dining-room. Smoking is, of course, allowed here, but nowhere else in the building. Over the café is a room as large, amply lighted by large windows and skylight, smoothly floored—a ball-room all winter, but in summer, when balls are not and when the crowd is great in the evenings of those who seek ices and iced champagne, a dining-room. The pleasantest public dining-room, to us, is one so large that we are solitary and isolated in it, how near soever our nearest neighbor's table may be. The rest of the building is nearly all taken up with rooms for private parties; there are half-a-dozen pleasant little cabinets where not more than eight persons can be seated at table, and there are large rooms where stately dinners of two or three score guests are held.

There is skill in using a restaurant aright, just as there is skill in using a microscope; you shall work at your magnifier six months before you understand it; you may dine many times at the best restaurant, and not know how to dine there after all. There is no day that people do not sit down at Delmonico's tables, and, if there are two of them, order roast beef for two and boiled potatoes and another vegetable for two, and then wonder what dessert (as they call it, meaning sweet dish.) they shall have, finding no names on the carte of the pies and puddings they know. They are not only ignorant what to order, but they do not know how to order, how to use the facilities offered them and get the full benefits of the cooks' labors; two connoisseurs at the next table will order nothing which, like a joint, has to be cooked and kept hot; they order only those dishes which are freshly prepared at their order; and they order nothing "for two," but soup for one, fish for one, and so on, or very often leave it all to the head waiter: "A nice little dinner, Louis, and such and such wine;" or else to the waiter at their table, "such a soup and such a fish, and the rest as you please." They can trust the waiter to tell them if there is anything unusual in the carte du jour. To be sure there is a difference in waiters. And there may be a difference in the same waiter between his attendance on the gentleman who treated him politely and gave him a big fee yesterday and his attendance on an unprepossessing stranger. But the tendency at Delmonico's is towards first-rate attendance on all and at all times. We hasten to avoid the large subject of waiting on table and service in general, and hurry on.

The luxury attainable at a restaurant like this, ought to teach our people something about comfort. It ought to raise their standard. Hotel tables and private tables alike ought to be always compared with Delmonico's table—to their confusion, it is true, but to their bettering as well. Married people keeping house, unless they are very highly trained already, should dine at Delmonico's once a month at least, oftener if possible; vary their entertainment as much as seemeth to them good, and think of nothing but their dinner. If they do not learn something, it will be because they cannot learn from experience. The standard cannot be set too high. You need not grumble and scold because you know that the dinner at home is not as good as it might be: in fact, you ought to know that it is not as good as it might be (if that is the case,) and you ought not to grumble and scold. Ignorance is very seldom bliss; it is only the painlessness of torpor. Know all about it, see where the fault is, notice how others avoid it, discover speedily that you might be better fed than you are without added expense. If you are the right sort of man or woman, you will be not a bit less comfortable yourself or less agreeable to others; but you will somehow help the matter, if your table can be improved, and influence others to advance the good cause of good living.

BRAHMA.

BY RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

IF the red slayer thinks he slays,
Or if the slain thinks he is slain,
They know not well the subtle ways
I keep, and pass, and turn again.

Far or forgot to me is near,
Shadow and sunlight are the same,
The vanished gods to me appear.
And one to me are shame and fame.

They reckon ill who leave me out;
When me they fly, I am the wings;
I am the doubter and the doubt,
And I the hymn the Brahmin sings.

The strong gods pine for my abode,
And pine in vain the sacred Seven;
But thou, meek lover of the good!
Find me and turn thy back on heaven.

The Providence Journal finds in the Bibliotheca Sacra for 1852 an extract from the "Mahabharata," a Hindoo epic poem, which, it opines, is the germ of Emerson's verses. It was composed about three centuries before the Christian era. We may call it the

KEY TO "BRAHMA."

For he that thinks to slay the soul, or he that thinks the soul is slain,
Are fondly both alike deceived; it is not slain; it slayeth not.
It is not born—it doth not die; past, present, future, knows it not;
Ancient, eternal and unchanged, it dies not with the dying frame.
Who knows it incorruptible, and everlasting, and unborn,
What heeds he whether he may slay, or falls himself in battle slain?

EXISTING BY MACHINERY.—The degree to which we do this is scarcely realized by a common observer. An essayist, in London, tells us: "At the highest point of Egyptian civilization wheat was ground by women in a hand-mill made of two stones; or at best, by larger stones turned by oxen. The fine linen of Egypt was spun from a hand distaff, and woven in a loom of the simplest description. Thousands of men were employed in works which would now be done almost entirely by machinery. Now, machinery does a large proportion of all our work, and is every day coming into wider use. Machines make almost everything, and machines make machines. If we travel, the steam engine propels us. Our food is prepared by complex machinery. Our clothing is spun, woven, and sewed by machines; machines knit our stockings, and do the largest part of the work in making our shoes. The pin that fastens our garments is completely made, headed, pointed and polished by a series of machines. The hook and eye are made from the reel of wire by a machine which seems to possess human intelligence. Unless our readers are very considerate, they scarcely know how much they are indebted to machinery. The paper you hold in your hand has come through a long series of machines. It has passed through the cotton-gin—a very simple, but most important invention: few have done more for modern civilization. It has been squeezed in the cotton-press. It has been carded, spun, woven, worn to rags; then washed, picked in pieces, bleached, ground to pulp, squeezed through rollers, and finally come out an endless sheet of white paper. The linen and hempen portions are passed through their peculiar processes. Then come type-making machines and printing machines, and, with some little brain labor, (which cannot yet be done by machinery,) you have your newspaper."

A FRENCH chemist, M. Emile Duchemin, has invented and put into practical operation a marine electric pile, which promises to be as useful as it is simple. He pierces a disk of cork, which serves as a buoy, with a cylinder of charcoal and zinc, and throws it into the sea. The water acts upon this elemental couple and produces an electric current. Several of these buoys grouped together constitute a battery which may be employed like any other. The latest report of an experiment by the inventor at Fécamp is, that a bell had been kept sounding by his apparatus for fifty-eight days and nights. A number of useful purposes to which this discovery is applicable will readily suggest themselves to every mind. If a bell may be rung on shore, it may on a reef The coming-in of the tide can be announced by a provision for hoisting a signal. Telegraphing can be carried on between different points of a harbor, and many offices on shipboard might be performed by the constant, self-regulating agency of the floating pile. It has even been suggested that a sufficiently powerful combination might produce the electric light, and so feed every beacon on our coasts.

GARIBALDI lately caused two of his horses to be sold, in Genoa, on the public market-place. King Victor Emmanuel having learned what was going to occur, gave orders to purchase the two animals, which brought three thousand francs, and then offered them as a present to the general. The latter, however, positively refused to receive them.

QUEEN ISABELLA of Spain has given another instance of generosity. Some time ago she relinquished a portion of her income in consequence of the low state of the public exchequer. She has now renounced a further portion, and has ordered that the amount of the civil list so saved shall be devoted to the sufferers by the cholera and by the floods which took place some months since.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE OF "FOURTEEN STONE!"—Recently, Mr. Addison, accompanied by his daughter and Mr. Sothern, visited Blarney Castle (says a Cork paper.) Of course the celebrated "stone" was enquired after. Evidently deeply impressed with Milliken's song:

"There is a stone there
That whoever kisses
He never misses
To grow eloquent," etc.

Mr. Addison approached the edge of the parapet, determined to embrace its lapis offensionis. Nothing daunted by the discovery that the party performing this kissing operation must, of necessity, be held by the heels over a parapet some hundred feet from the ground, he insisted on Mr. Sothern seizing him round the ankles, two guides also holding Mr. Sothern. The stone was triumphantly kissed, and Mr. Addison, almost black in the face, at once proved that he had "grown eloquent," for he screamed out at the top of his voice:

"A clever sponter
He'll sure turn out, or
An out-and-outer."

Possibly he might have concluded the verse, but Mr. Sothern, becoming rather tired of the novel position of holding fourteen stone by the heels, suddenly called out to the guides, "Now, then, pull away." They all did so; but the fourteen stone, not anticipating such an energetic hoist, without some signal, still clung to the iron bar by which the celebrated pebble is supported. The consequence was, one of Mr. Addison's "elastic side" boots came off, and, for fully a quarter of a minute, he was held in this frightful position by one ankle only. By a great effort, however, he at last succeeded in giving Mr. Sothern his other foot, and he was hauled up. During this scene his daughter was so terrified that she became speechless and sunk to the grass Her father's safety, however, speedily recovered her, and the trio returned to Cork.

ABOUT COMING TO BELIEVE ONE'S OWN LIE.—It has been remarked of Lady Morgan, as an autobiographer, that, Irish in all things, she was pre-eminently Irish in her facts, for which she depended very little on her memory. Not that, retaining one impression of a scene or incident, she deliberately stated or wrote down another; but that, retaining none, or an imperfect one, she stated or wrote down what was best calculated for immediate effect, most pleasing to her public, or most flattering to herself. We are told that she once wrote to Lady Charleville from some town in Warwickshire, to say that she had settled down to finish one of her books in a charming country, in a pretty apartment opening on a conservatory, with a velvet lawn before her door; and that Lady Charleville, returning shortly afterwards from London to Dublin, stopped at that place, hunted up the address, and found "Glorvina" in a small lodging in the suburb looking on a cabbage garden. "Paradoxical as it may seem, there was as much self-deception as vanity in this. She had fancied herself into the heroine of one of her own romances, with the accessories, and wrote accordingly. The real and the fictitious were so blended in her, that it gradually surpassed her power to separate them."—Bentley's Miscellany.

FOUL PLAY.—A writer in the Paris Siecle calls the attention of the authorities to a brutal sport entitled Tier á la pierre, (cock throwing,) which has just been revived at a fête in the neighborhood of Dieppe. A cock is attached to a cord fixed to a stake driven into the ground. A heap of stones is placed at a short distance, and, for two sous, any one has a right to five throws at the unfortunate bird, which remains the prize of the marksman who kills it. On the occasion referred to, after an eye had been knocked out, the head cut, and a leg broken, a blow full in the breast extended the poor cock on the ground apparently lifeless; but it was found to still breathe, and, according to the rules of the game, it had still to remain as a target.

COMMON "CRIERS."—It is surprising (says a recent writer) how infectious tears are at a wedding. First of all, the bride cries, because she's going to be married; and then, of course, the bridemaids cry, perhaps, because they are not; and the fond mamma cries, because she'll l-l-lose her d-d-darling: and then the fond papa cries, because he thinks it's proper; and then all the ladies cry, because ladies, as a rule, will never miss a chance of crying; and then, perhaps, the groomsmen cry, to keep the ladies company; and then the old pew-opener cries, to show what deep pecuniary interest she takes in the proceedings; and then, perhaps, the public cries, the public being, of course, composed exclusively of petticoats. But, notwithstanding all these Niobes, who make quite a Niagara of eye-water around him, we own we never yet have seen the bridegroom cry, and should about as soon expect to hear the beadle whimper.

A MARBLE bust of the tenor Negrini is to be erected in the Argentino theatre in Rome.

Two musical composers of note—Sinico and Villanis—have died lately.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Pre payment optional

Letters to France, 15 cents for each ¼ ounce. Prepayment optional.

Letters to other foreign countries vary in rate according to the route by which they are sent.

Letters to any part of the United States, 3 cents for each ½ ounce or part thereof.

Advertised letters, 1 cent in addition to the regular rates.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO

No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.

In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.

First and Highest Premium

TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.

In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.

First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,

AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,

11 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

TRIAL IS THE BEST AND Surest Test of Merit!

OVER TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND (200,000)

HAVE BEEN SOLD

Since they were Introduced to Public Notice,

F. L. TILESTON, Agent,

Corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets,

se30 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND
SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances

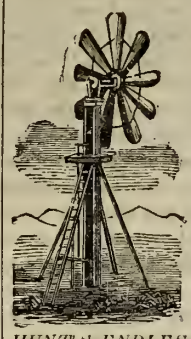
SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11 3m

---

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.



THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,

jy29 3m San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,
jy29 3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

THE MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3,500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - - -	6,500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14-3m

OVERSTOCKED! AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET,

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES.

se23 3m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

se30 3m San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

THE CELEBRATED JUMPING FROG OF CALAVERAS COUNTY.

BY MARK TWAIN.

]THE Saturday Press introduces this sketch in the following complimentary manner: "We give up the principal portion of our editorial space to-day, to an exquisitely humorous sketch—'Jim and his Jumping Frog'—by Mark Twain, who will shortly become a regular contributor to our columns. Mark Twain is the assumed name of a writer in California who has long been a favorite contributor to the San Francisco press, from which his articles have been so extensively copied as to make him nearly as well known as Artemus Ward."]

MR. A. WARD—DEAR SIR: Well, I called on good-natured, garrulous old Simon Wheeler, and I inquired after your friend Leonidas W. Greeley, as you requested me to do, and I hereunto appeud the result. If you can get any information out of it you are cordially welcome to it. I have a lurking suspicion that your Leonidas W. Greeley is a myth—that you never knew such a personage, and that you only conjectured that if I asked old Wheeler about him it would remind him of his infamous Jim Greeley, and he would go to work and bore me nearly to death with some infernal reminiscence of him as long and tedious as it should be useless to me. If that was your design, Mr. Ward, it will gratify you to know that it succeeded.

I found Simon Wheeler dozing comfortably by the bar-room stove of the old dilapidated tavern in the ancient mining camp of Angel's, and I noticed that he was fat and bald-headed, and had an expression of winning gentleness and simplicity upon his tranquil countenance. He roused up and gave me good-day. I told him a friend of mine had commissioned me to make some inquiries about a cherished companion of his boyhood named Leonidas W. Greeley—Rev. Leonidas W. Greeley—a young minister of the Gospel, who he had heard was at one time a resident of Angel's Camp. I added that if Mr. Wheeler could tell me anything about this Rev. Leonidas W. Greeley, I would feel under many obligations to him.

Simon Wheeler backed me into a corner and blockaded me there with his chair—and then sat me down and reeled off the monotonous narrative which follows this paragraph. He never smiled, he never frowned, he never changed his voice from the gentle-flowing key to which he turned the initial sentence, he never betrayed the slightest suspicion of enthusiasm—but all through the interminable narrative there ran a vein of impressive earnestness and sincerity, which showed me plainly that so far from his imagining that there was anything ridiculous or funny about his story, he regarded it as a really important matter, and admired its two heroes as men of transcendent genius in finesse. To me, the spectacle of a man drifting serenely along through such a queer yarn without ever smiling was exquisitely absurd. As I said before, I asked him to tell me what he knew of Rev. Leonidas W. Greeley, and he replied as follows. I let him go on in his own way, and never interrupted him once:

—

There was a feller here once by the name of Jim Greeley, in the winter of '49—or maybe it was the spring of '50—I don't reco'lect exactly, some how, though what makes me think it was one or the other is because I remember the big flume wasn't finished when he first come to the camp; but anyway, he was the curiosest man about always betting on anything that turned up you ever see, if he could get anybody to bet on the other side, and if he couldn't he'd change sides—any way that suited the other man would suit him—any way just so's he got a bet, he was satisfied. But still, he was lucky—uncommon lucky; he most always come out winner. He was always ready and laying for a chance; there couldn't be no solitry thing mentioned but that feller'd offer to bet on it—and take any side you please, as I was just telling you: if there was a horse race, you'd find him flush or you find him busted at the end of it: if there was a dog-fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a cat fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a chicken-fight, he'd bet on it; why if there was two birds sitting on a fence, he would bet you which one would fly first—or if there was a camp-meeting he would be there reglar to bet on Parson Walker, which he judged to be the best exhorter about here, and so he was, too, and a good man; if he even see a straddle-bug start to go any wheres, he would bet you how long it would take him to get wherever he was going to, and if you took him up he would foller that straddle-bug to Mexico but what he would find out where he was bound for and how long he was on the road. Lots of the boys here has seen that Greeley and can tell you about him. Why, it never made no difference to him—he would bet on anything—the dangdest feller. Parson Walker's wife laid very sick, once, for a good while, and it seemed as if they warn't going to save her; but one morning he come in and Greeley asked how she was, and he said she was considerable better—thank the Lord for his inf'nit mercy—and coming on so smart that with the blessing of Providence she'd get well yet—and Greeley, before he thought, says: "Well, I'll resk two-and-a-half that she don't, anyway."

Thish-yer Greeley had a mare—the boys called her the fifteen-minute nag, but that was only in fun, you know, because, of course, she was faster than that—and he used to win money on that horse, for all she was so slow and always had the asthma, or the distemper, or the consumption, or something of that kind. They used to give her two or three hundred yard's start, and then pass her under way; but always at the lag-end of the race she'd get excited and desperate like, and come cavorting and spraddling up, and scattering her legs around limber, sometimes in the air, and sometimes out to one side amongst the fences, and kicking up m-o-r-e dust, and raising m-o-r-e racket with her coughing and sneezing and blowing her nose—and always letch up at the stand just about a neck ahead, as near as you could cipher it down.

And he had a little small bull pup, that to look at him you'd think he warn't worth a cent, but to set around and look onery, and lay for a chance to steal something. But as soon as money was up on him he was a different dog—his under-jaw'd begin to stick out like the for'castle of a steamboat, and his teeth would uncover, and shine savage like the furnaces. And a dog might tackle him, and bully-rag him, and bite him, and throw him over his shoulder two or three times, and Andrew Jackson—which was the name of the pup—Andrew Jackson would never let on but what he was satisfied, and hadn't expected nothing else—and the bets being doubled and doubled on the other side all the time, till the money was all up—and then all of a sudden he would grab that other dog just by the joint of his hind leg and freeze to it—not chaw, you understand, but only just grip and hang on till they throwed up the sponge, if it was a year. Greeley always came out winner on that pup till he harnessed a dog once that didn't have no hind legs, because they'd been sawed off in a circular saw, and when the thing had gone along far enough, and the money was all up, and he come to make a snatch for his pet holt, he saw in a minute how he'd been imposed on, and how the other dog had him in the door, so to speak, and he 'peared surprised, and then he looked sorter discouraged like, and didn't try no more to win the fight, and so he got shucked out bad. He give Greeley a look as much as to say his heart was broke, and it was his fault, for putting up a dog that hadn't no hind legs for him to take holt of, which was his main dependence in a fight, and then he limped off a piece, and laid down and died. It was a good pup, was that Andrew Jackson, and would have made a name for hisself if he'd lived, for the stuff was in him, and he had genius—I know it, because he hadn't had no opportunities to speak of, and it don't stand to reason that a dog could make such a fight as he could under them circumstances, if he hadn't no talent. It always makes me feel sorry when I think of that last fight of his'n, and the way it turned out.

Well, thish-yer Greeley had rat-tarriers and chicken cocks, and tom cats, and all them kind of things, till you couldn't rest, and you couldn't fetch nothing for him to bet on but he'd match you. He ketched a frog one day and took him home and said he cal'lated to educate him; and so he never done nothing for three months but set in his back yard and learn that frog to jump. And you bet you he did learn him, too. He'd give him a little punch behind, and the next minute you'd see that frog whirling in the air like a doughnut—see him turn one summerset, or maybe a couple, if he got a good start, and come down flat-footed and all right, like a cat. He got him up so in the matter of catching flies, and kept him in practice so constant, that he'd nail a fly every time as far as he could see him. Greeley said all a frog wanted was education, and he could do most anything—and I believe him. Why, I've seen him send Dan'l Webster down here on this floor—Dan'l Webster was the name of the frog—and sing out "Flies! Dan'l, flies," and quicker'n you could wink, he'd spring straight up, and snake a fly off'n the counter there, and flop down on the floor again as solid as a gob of mud, and fall to scratching the side of his head with his hind foot as indifferent as if he hadn't no idea he'd done any more'n any frog might do. You never see a frog so modest and straightforward as he was, for all he was so gifted. And when it come to fair-and square jumping on a dead level, he could get over more ground at one straddle than any animal of his breed you ever see. Jumping on a dead level was his strong suit, you understand, and when it come to that, Greeley would ante up money on him as long as he had a red. Greeley was monstrous proud of his frog, and well he might be, for fellers that had travelled and been everywheres, all said he laid over any frog that ever they see.

Well, Greeley kept the beast in a little lattice box, and he used to fetch him down town sometimes and lay for a bet. One day a feller—a stranger in the camp, he was—come across him with his box, and says:

"What might it be that you've got in the box?"

And Greeley says, sorter indifferent like, "It might be a parrot, or it might be a canary, maybe, but it ain't—it's only just a frog."

And the feller took it, and looked at it careful, and turned it round this way and that, and says, "H'm—so 'tis. Well, what's he good for?"

"Well," Greeley says, easy and careless, "He's good enough for one thing I should judge—he can out-jump any frog in Calaveras county."

The feller took the box again, and took another long, particular look, and give it back to Greeley and says, very deliberate, "Well—I don't see no points about that frog that's any better'n any other frog."

"Maybe you don't," Greeley says. "Maybe you understand frogs, and maybe you don't understand 'em; maybe you've had experience and maybe you ain't only a amature, as it were. Anyways, I've got my opinion, and I'll resk forty dollars that he can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

And the feller studied a minute, and then says, kinder sad, like, "Well—I'm only a stranger here, and I ain't got no frog—but if I had a frog I'd bet you."

And then Greeley says, "That's all right—that's all right—if you'll hold my box a minute I'll go and get you a frog;" and so the feller took the box, and put up his forty dollars along with Greeley's, and set down to wait.

So he set there a good while thinking and thinking to hisself, and then he got the frog out and prized his mouth open and took a teaspoon and filled him full of quail-shot—filled him pretty near up to his chin—and set him on the floor. Greeley he went to the swamp and slopped around in the mud for a long time, and finally he ketched a frog and fetched him in and give him to this feller and says:

"Now if you're ready, set him alongside of Dan'l, with his fore-paws just even with Dan'l's, and I'll give the word." Then he says, 'one—two—three—jump!" and him and the feller touched up the frogs from behind, and the new frog hopped off, but Dan'l give a heave, and hysted up his shoulders—so—like a Frenchman, but it wa'nt no use—he couldn't budge; he was planted as solid as an anvil, and he couldn't no more stir than if he was anchored out. Greeley was a good deal surprised, and he was disgusted too, but he didn't have no idea what the matter was, of course.

The feller took the money and started away, and when he was going out at the door he sorter jerked his thumb over his shoulders—this way—at Dan'l, and says again, very deliberate: "Well—I don't see no points about that frog that's any better'n any other frog."

Greeley he stood scratching his head and looking down at Dan'l a long time, and at last he says, "I do wonder what in the nation that frog throw'd off for—I wonder if there ain't something the matter with him—he 'pears to look mighty baggy, somehow," and he ketched Dan'l by the nap of the neck, and lifted him up and says, "Why blame my cats if he don't weigh five pound," and turned him upside down, and he belched out about a double-handful of shot. And then he see how it was, and he was the maddest man—he set the frog down and took out after that feller, but he never ketched him. And——

[Here Simon Wheeler heard his name called from the front-yard, and got up to see what was wanted.] And turning to me as he moved away, he said: "Just set where you are, stranger, and rest easy—I ain't going to be gone a second."

But by your leave, I did not think that a continuation of the history of the enterprising vagabond Jim Greeley would be likely to afford me much information concerning the Rev. Leonidas W. Greeley, and so I started away.

At the door I met the sociable Wheeler returning, and he buttonholed me and recommenced:

"Well, thish-yer Greeley had a yaller one-eyed cow that didn't have no tail only just a short stump like a bannanner, and——"

"O, curse Greeley and his afflicted cow!" I muttered, good-naturedly, and bidding the old gentleman good-day, I departed.

Your, truly, MARK TWAIN.

THE Annual Christmas Festival of the Trinity Sunday School will take place on Christmas Eve at Platt's Hall. The children of the Protestant Orphan Asylum have been invited, and will be present to participate in the festivities. A Christmas Tree will be prepared for contributions intended for their especial benefit. We trust the tree will be a large one, and that the public will see to it that it be bountifully supplied. Contributions will be received by the Superintendent, Mr. William G. Badger, at Badger & Lindenberg's store. An especially interesting feature will be the presence of the Second U. S. Artillery Band. This Band played the music to which the boys entered Richmond at the time of its capture, and Brigadier-General French has kindly acceeded to the superintendent's request that they be present at the festival.

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco. Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well-assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality. They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland. Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

TO HEADS OF FAMILIES.—Are your little ones subject to croup? If so, don't fail to use Newell's Pulmonary Syrup. A few doses given in time may save the life of a darling child. Do not fail to have it on hand, if you would be safe and free from anxiety.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

PIMPLES, freckles, moth, sunburn, ringworm, and tetter, vanish magically by the application of that toilet excellence, Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, be made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines, getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldbush & Co., 307 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

THE LATEST NEWS!—Haskell & Co. are selling cheaper than the cheapest; 6 pounds Crushed Sugar for $1; 9 pounds Brown Sugar for $1; 3½ pounds Green Coffee, $1; 5 pounds Currants, $1; 4 pounds New Raisins, $1; New Citron, 40 cents per pound; 8 pounds Canary seed for $1; 10 pounds Soda Crackers, $1; 8 pounds Santa Clara Butter Crackers, $1; good Oolong Tea, 75 cents; Japan Teas, 75 to 90 cents, our Mandarin Oolong of the new crop, $1; the best Comet Tea, $1 10, or $1 per pound by the box; Mandarin Mixture (green and black,) 1; at the Mammoth Tea Store, fronting on Market and Sutter streets, below the Market. ☞ Goods delivered promptly. Open Evenings until after the Holidays.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and military at the shortest notice; also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for best the card pictures, and large photographs.

TOYS, REGARDLESS OF COST!

KOHLER SELLING OFF!

THE ENDLESS VARIETY OF

Toys and Fancy Articles,

IN KOHLER'S

Washington Street Store,

(NO. 620,)

MUST BE SOLD AT ANY PRICE,

BETWEEN THIS AND CHRISTMAS, AND

THE BUSINESS CLOSED UP!

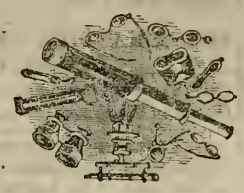
TO RENT—The Store now occupied by

A. KOHLER.

de2 4t

ELEGANT HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

USEFUL, ORNAMENTAL, AND INSTRUCTIVE.



FINE GOLD SPECTACLES and EYE GLASSES,

SETS OF IVORY

TABLE CUTLERY,

Stereoscopic Views of California;

(OVER ONE THOUSAND NEW VIEWS.)

Richly Mounted Opera Glasses

For sale by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

317 and 319 Montgomery street.

☞ CATALOGUES with Price List, FREE. de9 1m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

---

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

MONDAY, JANUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON MONDAY, - - - JANUARY 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

DEC. 19th, - - - SACRAMENTO,

Captain J. M. Cavarly.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,

jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

JUST RECEIVED,

Per last Steamer, a magnificent collection of

Fancy Glove and Odor Boxes,
Fine Fans, Opera Glasses,
Novelties in Back Combs,
Ornamental Cigar Stands,
Writing Desks, Albums,

DRESSING CASES, PARIS JEWELRY,

REAL LACE COLLARS, SLEEVES AND HANDKERCHIEFS,

REAL CHANTILLY AND POINT BARBES, VEILS, VALENCIENNE COLLARS, HANDKERCHIEFS, Etc.

Fashionable Cloaks and Shawls

Received by every Steamer from New York. Also,

CLOAKS AND LADIES' UNDERGARMENTS

MADE TO ORDER,

AT S. ROSENBLATT'S

PALACE OF FASHION,

123 AND 125 MONTGOMERY STREET,

de2 Opposite Occidental Hotel.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY. J. P. BOGARDUS. WM. J. BINGHAM.

☞ No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press on Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN,

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON SATURDAY, - - - - JANUARY 6, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

se23cde16 tf J. WHITNEY, JR., President.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Coutinental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

TOYS! TOYS! TOYS!

BASKET AND WILLOW WARE,

FANCY GOODS, &c.

The Best Selected and Largest Assorted Stock

EVER BEFORE IN CALIFORNIA.

FOR SALE CHEAP BY THE CASE OR DOZEN,

—AT—

THURNAUER & ZINN'S,

320 and 322 Battery street,

Between Commercial and Clay streets,

se16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

J. PEIRCE,

415, 417, and 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the

FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM

FOR

Furniture,

AND THE

FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM

FOR THE

BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

☞ Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

se16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

---

25 PER CENT. SAVED

IS 50 PER CENT. MADE!

PURCHA- SERS OF

Toys and Fancy

Goods, can save 25 per cent. by buying of

Feldbush & Co.,

307 CALIFORNIA STREET.

THEY ARE NOW RECEIVING their Importations o

FALL GOODS,

per steamer nnd sailing vessels from all parts of the world.

For sale by the case or dozen. Also 100 cases of assorted Toys. FIELDUSH & CO., 307 California street

RETAIL STORE, 207 Montgomery street, (Russ House Block.) oc28 3m

---

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital und Surplus.....$750,000

Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000

Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Douohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,

MERCHANDISE,

FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,

ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.

S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.

mh25-3m

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life

INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26 1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half-way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 1m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;

Liquid Slating for Blackboard;

ARITHMETICAL FRAME;

Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,

de9 3m 805 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,

my6 3m Proprietor.

GRAND BALL.

THE SECOND ANNUAL

Ball of the Fire Department,

Will be given at

UNION HALL,

ON THURSDAY EVENING, DEC. 28.

No care or expense will be spared to make it the grandest and most fashionable Ball of the season.

MANAGERS.

Governor F F Low,	Hon Ogden Hoffman,
Maj Gen H. W. Halleck,	" Milton S Latham,
" I McDowell,	" S H Dwinelle,
" J F Miller,	" Thos B Shannon,
Col R C Drum,	" Frank Soule,
Com Selim Woodworth,	" R F Perkins,
Maj-Gen L H Allen,	" Wm J Shaw
Chas de Cuzotte,	R H Sinton,
Louis McLane,	Wm. Alvord,
J Whitney, Jr,	J H Baird,
I W Raymond,	Wm F Babcock,
Chas B Polhemus,	Henry Bigelow,
Eugene L Sullivan,	A Austin,
J Morn Moss,	S C Hastings,
R B Swain,	Camilo Martin,
E W Burr,	Maj A D Grimwood,
S P Dewey,	Abel Guy,
James Lick,	Wm B Johnston,
Nicholas Larco,	Geo W Gibbs,
Leland Stanford,	Hall McAllister,
Joseph P Hodge,	Henry B Platt,
B F Lowe,	M Livingston,
James Bowman,	Samuel M Wilson,
D O Mills,	Francisco Sanjurjo,
Lafayette Maynard,	Lewis Leland,
F L A Pioche,	Louis Scellier,
Jos G Eastland,	Alpheus Bull,
Ira P Rankin,	John S Henning,
Henry Carlton, Jr,	A Seligman,
John B Felton,	Michael Skelly,
Samuel Brannan,	A Coleman,
R H Magill,	Wm H Tillinghast,
Geo C Boardman,	Joseph Austin,
David Scannell,	John H Gardiner,
R B Woodward,	Wm P Tauffe,
O Livermore,	W H L Barnes,
A L Tubbs,	Henry Voorman,
Marcus D Boruck,	Dr A J Bowie,
W Lane Booker,	Edward S Spear,
Eugene Casserly,	Wm. McKibben,
Oliver Eldridge,	Michael Castle,
H M Newhall,	John Parrott,
Joseph A Donohoe,	Wm C Talbot,
Wm C Ralston,	Erwin Davis,
Wm M Lent,	Fred'k MacCrellish,
James Otis,	H H Haight,
R J. Vanderwater,	Maj John Stratman,
Caleb T Fay,	James H Cutter,
Martin R Roberts,	Henry Barriolhet,
James R Bolton,	John A. McGlynn,
W E Barron,	W W Haney,
S R Harris,	John J Kelly,
Morris Spyer,	Chas. R Peters,
Alfred Barstow,	Claus Spreckles,
R C Ferguson,	David Stern,
Geo H Howard,	G J Byrne,
Elie Lazard,	F W Macondrny,
Edward J. Pringle,	John O Earl,
John H Saunders,	Emanuel Berri,
Jos W Winans,	Fred'k Billings,
James Bell,	E T Pense,
E W Leonard,	Louis Cohn,
S. J. Hensley,	Thos Tobin,
Geo B Gammans,	H Heyneman,
S H Parker,	Horace W. Carpenter,
Col Wm Harney,	M M Henston,
A H Titcomb,	Wm G Badger,
M C Hillyer,	Louis Schloss,
Frank McCoppin,	Henry G Langley,
John Hewston, Jr,	A J Houghtaling,
J C L. Wadsworth,	W W Stow,
Joseph Pierce,	W B Farwell,
C F Mebins,	John T Doyle,
Chas Walcott Brooks,	Warren R Payne,
Albert Miller,	Dr Joseph Haine,
J G Kittie,	Robert Cushing,
Jonathan Hunt,	Peter Donahue,
John Middleton,	James L Fink,
C Adolphe Low,	T McCarthy.

☞ The number of Tickets to be sold is limited; they are not transferable, and none will be sold at the door. Ladies' invitations can be procured, free of charge, on application.

TICKETS (including Supper) TEN DOLLARS.

de9 3t

LADIES, ATTENTION!

MRS. READ'S

NEW IMPROVED

Skirt Supporters and Chest

EXPANDERS,

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BRACES, with Suspenders attached; ABDOMINAL SUPPORTERS, BANDAGES, BUSTS, etc

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET,

UP STAIRS, ROOMS 3 AND 4.

Physicians are respectfully invited to call and examine her articles.

All orders promptly attended to. my27 tf

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. B. WARD & SON,

NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca

jc30 3m

THE ONLY LIVING

ASTROLOGER.

Go and see the Natural Gifted Astrologer, Prof. Cohen, 530 California street He only can give you true information as to the Past, Present and Future; on Business Affairs, Law Suits, Matrimony, Love, Absent Friends, Sickness, etc. He tells the events of your whole life, and how to avoid trouble.

A large number of people have been benefited by his knowledge. As an evidence of his reputation, he has received upwards of 18,000 consultations here since his residence of five years in San Francisco.

N B.—When consultation is had it will not be necessary to give the age. Office hours from 8 A. M to 1 P. M., and from 2 to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart.

☞ Sickness will be discovered and cured through his science, only known by himself. ae16 3m.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND

MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - -	$10,000,000.
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

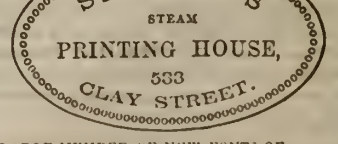
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19 3m

NEW TYPE.



A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF

FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

FIRE, MARINE, LIFE,

AND

ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE.

We would respectfully call the attention of property owners to the increased facilities for Insurance which we are now prepared to offer, surpassing any agency in the world.

MARINE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Capital, - - - $7,000,000

Home Insurance Co., of N. Y., assets	-	-	$4,000,000
Security do	do	do	2,000,000
Phenix do	do	do	1,000,000

War Risks and partial loss covered on the most favorable terms. Liberal rebates paid parties bringing business to this office. All losses paid in gold coin without any deduction.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Assets, - - - $10,000,000

Home Insurance Co., N. Y.	Washington Ins. Co., N. Y.
Phenix do	do	Security do	do
Arctic do	do	Hartford Fire do	do

LIFE INSURANCE.

Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. of Hartford:
Assets nearly - - - - - - - $8,000,000
Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States: Assets - - - - - - - $1,000,000

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

New York Accident Insurance Company:
Capital - - - - - - - $250,000

In the Fire Department we issue participation policies on all hazardous and not hazardous property, entitling the assured to 60 per cent. in the profits of the company, thereby lessening their premiums at least 30 per cent.

In the Life Department, the companies we represent are the best and cheapest in the world. Manuals descriptive of the various plans issued gratis to the public. No charge for physicians' examinations.

Agents in all the principal towns on this coast.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
au29 GENERAL AGENTS.

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated. The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.

oc14 3m

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of these new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - . - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co., PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT AMERICAN PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800

PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my26

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
a28 44 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 10th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled.

H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.

no11 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS: That I, BRIDGET STANNAH, wife of WILLIAM STANNAH, intend to make application to the Twelfth District Court of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on the 23d day of December, A. D. 1865, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day,

or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, at the court room of said Court, in said city and county, for an order of said Court permitting her to carry on business in her own name and on her own account—the nature of the business to be carried on by virtue of such order being that of keeping a boarding and lodging house, and purchasing lots and houses to be used and occupied in that business, and erecting houses therefor. That for this purpose I am desirous of availing myself of the benefit of An Act to authorize married women to transact business in their own name as sole traders, approved April 12th, 1852, and of the acts amendatory thereof.

BRIDGET STANNAH.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for petitioner—Office, 636 Clay street. nov25-5t

---

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,

For Wholesale and Retail Trade,

ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,

AT QUINCY HALL,

NOS. 545, 547, 549,

Washington Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

se30-3m

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Building Fund.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOAD OF TRUSTEES of the Mercantile Library Association, held October 10th, 1865, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the Trustees form themselves into a Committee of the Whole, to obtain Life Memberships and Donations, with a view of purchasing a lot and erecting a building thereon for the use of the Association.

The payment of one hundred dollars in gold coin secures a Life Membership, and it is hoped that the sum of twenty thousand dollars may be subscribed in this way alone. No subscriptions are binding unless the above sum shall be raised by Life Memberships and Donations before February 1, 1866. Subscription books may be found at the Library, or with any of the following members of the

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:

G. W. Belt.....President
*C. Wolcott Brooks.....Vice President
H. S Homans.....Corresponding Secretary
David Wilder.....Recording Secretary
John G. Clark.....Treasurer

J. H Wildes,	A. M. Ebbetts,
J. W. Cox,	F. D. Kellogg,
A. T. Green,	Chas. R. Bond,
Geo. Hewston, M. D.,	*Daniel Rogers,
F. L. Castle.

*On leave of absence. oc21-tf

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco.

ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,

AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & C
my28 624 Clay stree San

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, DEC. 16TH,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN!

This Evening, December 16th,

G. C. BONIFACE, HARRY JACKSON,
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,

nd Every Member of the Popular Company,

Will appear in the celebrated Irish Drama entitled

Kathleen Mavourneen;

OR,

THE DARK HOUR BEFORE DAY!

TUESDAY EVENING, First Night of Taylor's Prize Drama, entitled

THE SERF;

OR, LOVE LEVELS ALL!

Now being performed at Wallack's Theatre, New York; with entirely New Scenery, Costumes and Properties, and Original Music.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days..... 2
Twelve Days..... 3
Twenty Days..... 1
Thirty Days..... 5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16-3m San Francisco.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9 3m 305 Montgomery street.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

Pine street, near Montgomery.

Madame Anna Bishop

Announces a Season of Two weeks of

ITALIAN AND ENGLISH OPERA.

OPENING NIGHT!

THIS SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 16TH,

Bellini's Grand Tragic Opera of

NORMA,

MADAME ANNA BISHOP,
MADAME FLEURY,
SIGNOR CARMINI MORLEY,
SIGNOR RONCOVIERI, MONS. CHARLES.
CONDUCTOR, - - - - MR. A REIFF, JR.

Second Night of the Season,

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 18,

Donizetti's Charming Comic Opera,

L'Elisir d' Amore.

☞ Regular Opera Nights: Monday, Wednesday, and Friday—Matinee, Saturday.

Admission, - - - - - - One Dollar
Reserved seats, Fifty Cents extra.
Gallery - - - - - - - Fifty Cents.
Price of Subscription for the season of six nights and a Matinee - - - Ten Dollars.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES

OF

Standard Books,

ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on

Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of

ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!

CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE

Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

CHILION BEACH

INVITES ATTENTION TO HIS LARGE AND CHOICE ASSORTMENT OF

BOOKS AND STATIONERY,

Suitable for

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS, JUVENILES,
ILLUSTRATED AND GIFT BOOKS,

In great variety.

BEACH'S BOOK-STORE,
No. 34 Montgomery street,
de16 2t Opposite the Lick House.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE

GREAT REDUCTION

IN

THE PRICE OF COTTON

AT THE EAST,

Kerby, Byrne & Co.,

ARE NOW OFFERING:

5,000 yards 4 4 Preston Muslin, at 32½c.;
5,000 yards 4-3 Blackstone, at 35c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 Lonsdale, at 35c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 White Rock, at 37½c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 Wamsutta, at 40c.

AND

50,000 DOLLARS WORTH

OF

ALL OTHER KINDS OF DOMESTICS,

And Housekeeping Goods in Proportion.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
de9 1t NO. 7 MONTGOMERY STREET.

A MAGNIFICENT CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

THE SUPERB NATIONAL PICTURE, by Darley, of WASHINGTON IRVING AND HIS FRIENDS. Prices: Print $15; Proof, $20; Artist's Proof, $50, or framed complete—Print, $20; Proof, $40; Artist's Proof, $100. This is NOT the cheap Lithograph called "Great Authors."

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

JUVENILE BOOKS, Picture Books, Primers, Sunday School Books, Books for Prizes, Cloth Picture Books, Games and Blocks for Children, Puzzles, Card Pictures, Fairy Albums, Books for Girls, Books for Amusements, Books for Boys.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

CHRISTMAS STATIONERY.

DESKS, PORTFOLIOS, Chess, Backgammon, Dominoes, Color Boxes, Cabinets, Scrap Books, Diaries 1866, Inkstands, Pocket Knives, Pencil Cases, Pocket Books, Papier Mache Goods.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS.

FIVE HUNDRED STYLES at the lowest prices.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

GIFT BOOKS.

AN ENDLESS VARIETY, at very low prices.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

FINE BOOKS FROM LONDON.

POETRY, SCIENCE and GENERAL LITERATURE, in elegant bindings, with Photographic Illustrations, and plain and colored steel engravings.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

BLOOD PURIFIER.

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

The best Blood Purifier yet known. It expels all Mercurial and Constitutional Diseases, and gives Health and Strength.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
no19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

GRAND CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL

OF THE

Trinity Mission Sunday School

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL.

THE TRINITY MISSION SUNDAY SCHOOL will hold their

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL,
AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL, SATURDAY EVENING,
December 23d.

The Children of the

PROTESTANT ORPHAN ASYLUM

Have accepted an invitation, and will unite with us on that occasion.

A Christmas Tree

Will be prepared expressly for them. Friends wishing to contribute to the ORPHANS' TREE, can do so by sending to the Hall on the day of the Festival, or at any time previous to the Superintendent of the Trinity Mission School.

The Exercises of the evening will consist of

SPEAKING AND SINGING,

AND

A VISIT FROM SANTA CLAUS!

The Hall will be splendidly decorated for this occasion by Thomas Blair, Esq.

A FULL BAND OF MUSIC

Will be in attendance. The Hall will be thrown open at four o'clock P. M., at which time the Band will be present. Exercises of the evening will commence at

EIGHT O'CLOCK PRECISELY.

SINGLE TICKETS, - - ONE DOLLAR.

To be had at the Hall during the day and evening of the Festival, and at all the principal Bookstores of the city.

de16 2t WM. C. BADGER, Superintendent

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

ly2 SAN FRANCISCO

DRY GOODS!

NEW GOODS FOR THE

HOLIDAYS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

Have received by late Steamer from Europe,

AN IMMENSE STOCK OF

ELEGANT DRESS GOODS

SUITABLE FOR

Holiday Presents!

All of which they will exhibit

AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,

And will offer them all

AT PRICES THAT WILL

DEFY COMPETITION!!

DRESS GOODS.

SILKS, in rich Moire Antique, Brocade, Plaid, Plain and Chine, in all the most Fashionable colors, Black Silk of manufacture of "Bonnet," "Bischuff and Tonsou," from $1 00 to $3 00 per yard.

PIM'S super. Irish Poplins and Tabinets in all colors.

MERINOS, in all the most beautiful colors, at 75c, $1 00, $1 25, $1 50, $1 75 per yard.

EMPRESS CLOTHS and OTTOMAN CLOTHS, in Plain, Striped and Chine, manufactured expressly to order.

MOURNING GOODS.

In Bombazines, Cashmeres, Merinos, Tamise, Poplins, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Silks, Alpacas, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

SHAWLS.

Super. Broche Long and Square Shawls, from $10 to $150, in all colors and new designs.

FINE FRENCH CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS, in Long and Square, from $50 to $100, all in new and elegant designs. Plaid Wool do., in long and square.

CLOAKS.

500 Beautiful stylish Garments direct from Paris, comprising the richest ever brought to this city.

HOSIERY.

For Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, of every description.

LACES AND EMBROIDERIES.

CHANTILLY VEILS, all prices and new designs.

CAMBRAY VEILS, from $2 50 to $5 00.

CHANTILLY LACES, all widths.

ELEGANT CHANTILLY FLOUNCES.

DENTELES de Valencienne et Applique.

APPLIQUE and Point de Venise Collars at $2 00, $2 50, $3 00, $5 00, &c., &c.

POINT D'ALENCON and Point Duchesse Sleeves and Collars.

DENTELLES de Guipre, all widths and patterns.

A Beautiful Assortment of Linen Sets,

PLAIN AND EMBROIDERED.

Embroidery Bands, Edgings, Insertions, Jaconet, and Dimity Bands.

KID GLOVES.

2000 doz. Alexander's best, at $1 25 per pair.

ALSO,

AT REDUCED PRICES,

COTTON SHEETING and SHIRTING, of all the best brands.

4,000 DRESSES DE LAINE, best quality, at $3 00 per dress.

10,000 EMPRESS CLOTH DRESSES, from $3 00 to $10 00 per dress.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
de 1m NO. 9. LICK HOUSE.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 4.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 23, 1865.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, December 22d, 1865.

IS it possible? Three days more and Christmas, like Monsieur Tonson, will have come again!

When I remember the joy which the approach of these holidays used to bring to me, I become sad.

There is one thing which I never could understand... the Pleasures of Memory... perhaps I should call them "things" to be grammatical, but the word is hateful to me.

If it were possible to forget the Past, move out from the Present, and pitch one's tent in the Future, there would be more happiness in life than there is at present.

"Talk of the minstrel's lute,
The warrior's high endeavor,
When the honeyed lips are mute,
And the strong arm crushed forever;
Look back to the summer sun,
From the mists of dark December;
Then say to the broken hearted one,
"'Tis pleasant to remember.'"

No one who knows me will accuse me of being sentimental ...or spoony. I have often tried to be, but the effort was always a lamentable failure... in which both parties appeared to mutual disadvantage.

But very often those words of Praed's come ringing in my ears ..and find an echo deeper down in my soul than I would wish to acknowledge.

For all that, however, don't think I wish to play myself off on the country as a broken-hearted "cuss."

It is bad enough to be broken-winded.

It is three years ago..come the 25th of December... since I have had a Christmas. Some country boys pack up their washing and send it home every week. I never had occasion to do that, but I do assure you that, never these blessed days passed, that I did not pack up my soiled soul, and start for the country.

We may laugh about the "mother" element that enters into songs of late, but I thank God that it is there. And depend upon it that our soldiers never fought the less bravely for its introduction, nor endured the hardships of prison-pens with less fortitude for its remembrance.

Cause and effect are very closely linked together. "Mother" has been a prominent element of all the songs and war lyrics that have been written since this... one of the greatest wars that ever saturated God's footstool with blood... commenced. Has the national cause suffered in consequence? I trow me not.

"Home influences!" It is a trite phrase... it is rather the custom to jeer at the young man who is influenced by them. But I am not ashamed to avow that I am... and I am not afraid to avow that I despise the young or old man who is not.

The young man who can go out into the world with a sister's kiss warm upon his lips, and a mother's embrace still clinging around him... and not confess to their restraining influence... is very unlikely to ever become a full-grown man.

Touching God's right hand in the darkness, we may still hope to grope our way to His Throne. And if, in those holiest pulsations of the human heart, we do not recognize His clasp, what guide have we?

Bah! what right have we to look with retrospective or introspective eyes upon the Past?

Before us bubbles the ocean... thither our prows are pointed ... what need to look back upon the land?

By a chance conversation with a lady friend at breakfast this morning, I learned that her idea of Heaven was perfect repose.

What a pleasure it is to find one... even though it be one of the opposite sex... whose conception of anything in or beyond the world coincides with yours!

"Perfect Repose!" There you have perfect happiness in a nutshell.

The popular idea of angels is that they have wings. In all the plates that I am familiar with they are represented with wings... buzzing about like bumble bees.

Nonsense! The angel of my fancy, so far from having wings, has not even arms and legs.

He is round as a butter ball, and if you were to rig up a handle for him, and wind a string about his neck, you could spin him around on his peg of a spine like a humming-top.

Heaven, to my fancy, is a far remove from all printing offices. It is a place where one can go and "lie off." There is no demand upon him for "copy"... there are no criticisms upon what he writes... he is believed in and accepted, from the nearest relative down to the fourth and fifth cousin.

About the nearest approach to human felicity that I ever expect to experience, befell me at the Ocean Beach the other day.

There was no one out there whom I disliked...and by a remarkable dispensation of Providence there was no one out there who disliked me.

The horizon hob-a-nobbed with the shore in perfect amity, and the sea, with its "sapphire spangled marriage ring" wedded the land, in the very ripeness and fullness of love. The ocean-breeze sang epithalamiums, and there was neither jarring nor discord of spirit upon any side.

There was no one who expected to be talked to...there was no one who demanded to be listened to... and if there be any other cup of human happiness this side the mountains, fill it, brim it, and bring it to me straight!

Perhaps I should have said, s'il vous plait... for I was immensely amused by the play of the seals.

My laughter, sitting there in the cosy parlor, went up from the seal to the ceiling.

I would like to own those rocks with their occupants and have them as near to New York as they are to San Francisco ... and at the termination of as fine a drive. Their barkarole would draw better than any opera, and their owner could retire from business in a very short time.

One of the seals—a sinister jawed fellow—has been christened "Coryphæus" by a friend of mine. "Khor" would have been better, I suggested, for, like Leman, he plays in the Serf. But my friend said he had private reasons for calling him Coryphæus. He attempted to grapple what he was not competent to handle, I remarked. And he did not seem to realize that his fins, though well enough in their way, were scarcely adapted to do fine engraving or landscape-painting. He got along very well while floundering around on the rocks, but didn't make much headway when he tried to climb a tree.

The other night my first nap was broken by the sound of music under my window. But not for me were the strains intended... they were for Cole.

They were blowing on this Cole you see, preparatory to his kindling up in Congress.

But I do not see why I should be kept awake half the night through for the benefit of others. In my private opinion this nuisance of serenading has gone on about long enough—it is time the playing was played out.

When it is so easy not to blow tin horns under one's window, why do these musicians persist in doing it?

I intend to get even on the leader of that band and his company, if there be any virtue in Chinese gongs and Indian tom-toms. They will be serenaded to their hearts' content some week, and all the sleep they get they can put in their eyes... and then it won't rest them much.

Firing away at Cole for two mortal hours, standing in the street at that, with the thermometer as much below zero as it could get with proper respect to Mr. Bret's "climatic influences." They had much better, every mother's son of them, have been at home before a coal fire.

They might as well have been, for all they got to drink.

What I would like to know is this: is there no law against such disturbances of the public peace? While we arrest the belated vocalist for singing a farewell to his Mary Ann, or chanting his intention not to go home until morning, are we to allow a whole battalion of brass instruments to stand in the streets and blow the Star-Spangled Banner into fragments? ... blow Hail Columbia out of water?

It was Hail Coleumbia they played, I believe.

Had the man who jerked the gay and festive trombone that evening been a candle, he'd have blown himself out a dozen times over.

Positive Cole, comparative Kohler... mine was the superlative of misery. Let us put a stop to these things... not a full stop at once... but beginning with a Colon!

It is not to this particular serenade that I so much object ... it perhaps comes under the head of a "necessary evil," for Cole has been elected to the Senate and it is just as well to break him in to noise... he must get used to it. But I do object to the practice which is coming so universally into vogue. Smith, Jones, nor Robinson cannot contemplate a trip to San José now-a-days without the whole neighborhood being kept awake by the hurdy-gurdying and speechifying from the baleonies, to say nothing of the long report of the affair we are compelled to read in the next morning's paper.

I do not object to the report in the paper... I do not insist that Smith, Jones, and Robinson go off without a report... but I do wish they would go off without so much noise.

Wait till Gus Richardson's band comes down from Sacramento, and then see if those fellows that kept me awake all night don't get a turn.

Henceforth write me down as a man of mark.

I tried my hand at marking clothes the other day. My room-mate had marked all the good handkerchiefs and things he could find with his name, and this suggested the idea to me that it might be as well for me to do a little marking myself if I wished to save the balance.

I have "marked for the drinks" on several occasions, and it never occurred to me that there would be any trouble about marking clothes.

Accordingly I bought a bottle of what Mrs. Partington would probably call "invaluable ink."

I got it at Thayer's. He guaranteed that it would not wash out.

I marked a dozen new handkerchiefs; I marked my shirts, underclothing, stockings.

I marked everything... You would have thought that my nom de plume was Mark Twain.

The pen would catch in the fibres of the cambric, and splutter all around, distributing a small shower of commas and semi-colons where there was no need at all for punctuation; but I kept bravely on, and marked half the night through... finishing by upsetting the "invaluable ink" over my work.

Then it was necessary to hold everything I had marked before the fire to "fix" the ink... bring out its blackness. So I made a clothes-horse of myself the rest of the night... and the legs of the clothes-horse, getting a little too near the fire, got badly scorched before morning.

But I comforted myself by the reflection that I had been industrious. And I felt quite moral and good all the next day. I became interested in the matter of pew-rents, and thought that possibly, if I could find a stylish one that "sets up" like those little box-buggies we see occasionally... only room for the driver, and a peculiarly nifty look about them... I'd buy me one.

But mark the result. Does virtue always bring its own reward?

The washwoman, on bringing home my clothes next week, wondered "whatever" I had been doing to my clothes... they washed full of holes. It was so. Wherever that ink touched, it burned like Greek Fire. My handkerchiefs are ruined my stockings all have holes in them, and my shirts are slowly separating at the waist where I marked them.

Thayer was right. His invaluable ink will not wash out... and I advise everybody to buy of him.

It would be excellent for marking cattle... it would burn clear through their hides and down into the beef... branding it ready for market.

But when I sit up all night again, it will be "reading history"... not marking clothes.

There is to be a very pleasant party in Oakland on the 28th... the occasion being the annual assembly of the Oakland Club.

Gottschalk is not invited, but there will be music on the occasion.

If possible, I shall go over... but not in a wherry.

INIGO.

TO CHRISTINA.

A CONFESSION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SHADOW IN THE HOUSE."

CHRISTMAS EVE—Midnight.

ONE person alone, beside my mother, knows what I am now going to tell you. If I could speak to you on such a theme, I would not commit to paper the records of my shame. Burn these sheets when you have read them. I have been sufficiently punished; do not risk the danger of my future being again compromised by their existence.

Yesterday, the twenty-third day of December, I Paul Hayden, was sitting at my desk in the counting-house of Messrs. Klop, Son, and Klop, foreign merchants. There was a good deal to do during the evening, as we were accustomed on the day of Christmas Eve to break up early. Every footstep that crossed the counting-house or moved in the outer office seemed light and elastic, and had a kind of enjoyable frosty creak in its sound. There was a something in the pure air of the night, and in the anticipations of the coming festival, which completely changed the aspect of affairs in the ordinarily dull atmosphere of the counting-house, making grim old "senior" clerks light and frisky, and young "junior" clerks staid and pains-taking, as they saw that a little hard work now alone interposed between them and the coming revels.

As for me, I sat there with my pen in my hand, and the ledger open before me, bowed down by such a weight of shame and self-reproach as I had never dreamed of falling to my lot. There were my fellow-workmen moving about light-hearted and hopeful; there was I with ruin—almost certain ruin—staring me in the face. Once I felt as in a dream; but no: there lay the letter before me, and I took it up and read it once again:

"DEAR OLD FELLOW: Codd won't renew the bill on any terms. What's to be done? If something is not thought of, and quickly too, you'll see him at Klop's to-morrow morning, sure as fate. I'm deucedly sorry for you, but I can't help you: not the remotest chance of that. Turn it over in your mind. I'll be on the bridge as you go home.

"Yours ever, ARTHUR GLYNNE."

Turn it over! And what good would that do? How was a poor fellow like me to scrape together a hundred pounds? Yes, my dear friend, Arthur Glynne, who had so kindly introduced me to all the delights of London, initiated me in all its tempting mysteries, paid for me, quarrelled with me if I tried to withdraw from such a life of flowery degradation, this all-bountiful friend had suddenly come down upon me one month before with a request (that my obligations had made irresistible) that I would accept for him a bill of a hundred pounds, and leave him to provide for it when due. I am sure he had meant to fulfil his promise. But Fortune did not hold Arthur Glynne in such deep respect as to trouble herself in the least about giving him the means of fulfilling his obligation; and so I was left in the lurch.

What was I to do? The first sight of that bill would in Klop's eyes have been about the same thing as the last sight of me. And if I left him in disgrace there was an end to my mercantile career. Should I confide the whole to my mother—which meant, should I let her know what a recklessly profligate life I had been leading since our arrival in London, and my meeting with Glynne? Should I open to her the vista of my recent experience during the secret hours of night? Should I dash to the ground the hopes she was fondly nursing of my advancement?

Despairing of any solution, I determined to meet Glynne and tell him so.

I shut up the ledger, put it away in its place, and proceeded to exchange my office-coat for my walking one.

"Going, Mr. Hayden?" inquired our cashier, Mr. Sampson Boyce, who did not, I fancied, at all participate in the slight signs of satisfaction that Mr. Klop had occasionally exhibited towards me.

"Yes, sir: good night," I answered as I went out.

I hurried along the noisy streets, with their glaring Christmas-lighted shops, gliding like a spectre through the crowds, never slackening my pace till I reached the foot of the bridge, when a thought struck me, as with a blow of paralysis: I had left Glynne's letter in my office coat! With moist and trembling hands, which I vainly tried to keep steady, I searched my pockets over and over, then began to run back, but again stopped, incredulously, to make sure. It was too true; I had left it behind; might even have dropped it on the floor while changing coats. I hurried back to the office. The door to the counting-house was down a little court or archway. I tried it; it was locked. I went round to the dwelling-house, determined that nothing less than sheer impossibility should prevent my getting back my letter. I knew the way into the counting-house from Mr. Klop's house, and if I could only escape notice from the domestics first, and then from the cashier, and Denning, the watchman, there would be no one else likely to see me. At the worst, I could ask permission to go through to the office. I was fortunate—the street door was open. I slipped through the passage, and was safely in the business premises. Through the glass door of Denning's little room I saw Mr. Boyce reading a newspaper. So, then, he had done with the business of the office, and was probably just going. I heard Denning's footstep moving heavily to and fro in the storeroom above. I walked cautiously along the passage till I came to the counting-house. The door was open. I went in, glancing hurriedly about on the floor, but saw nothing of my letter. The first touch of the pockets of my office-coat told me it was not there. I turned the pockets inside out. No, there was no letter in them. Had Boyce found it accidentally, or Mr. Klop, or had some one suspected me, and searched my coat when I went away? The suspense was intolerable. Suddenly I remembered that on one occasion I had slipped the letter between the pages of the ledger when Mr. Boyce had appeared at the door; but I felt almost certain that I had not left it there. I took down the ledger, however, and with a bounding heart saw the missing sheet drop to the ground. For a moment I felt rather as though my troubles were gone, than that their mere exposure was delayed, as I tore up Gwynne's letter, and consumed the pieces by the single gas lamp that was left burning low till the watchman came for his last survey. As I turned to find my way back I heard Denning coming down stairs. "Well," I thought, "if he comes in, I will tell him I passed through the house, without meeting any one, to fetch something I had left behind; but if he passes on I will not unnecessarily make him aware of my presence." He did pass on, and presently I heard him descending the stairs to the underground store-room.

As I stood there listening, where I had then no right to be, no wonder I felt like a criminal, and that strange and unpleasant thoughts should begin to pass through my mind. Dark, vague suggestions, the true nature of which I shrank from grappling with, began to stir me; and I felt as if my hair were lifted with horror. I gazed cautiously round. I believe I had at that moment no defined idea beyond the simple one of seeking security from the apprehension that some one might have seen me enter and burn the letter—nay, might even now be watching me. Anxiously I gazed around. Behind, through the glass door of the counting-house, I could see all over and through the large office, with its shadowy-looking rows of desks and stools, made dimly visible by the low, smouldering kind of light. Before me was Mr. Klop's private room. Was he there? No, all was silent! But I must make sure. I pushed the door back, and was startled by the flood of moonlight in which I was suddenly plunged. I advanced, half-believing that I was simply fascinated by the splendid natural and artificial scene beyond, which was visible through the broad window. There was a piece of the great black city spread out, low and far, in the vivid frosty moonlight; the glittering river curving amid blackened buildings; the arches of the bridges almost changing from semicircles to circles by by the junction of bridge and reflection below; and a sky of glassy blue, thickly crowded with stars, each apparently emulous to outshine its neighbor in size and brilliancy, and draw to itself every wandering earthly eye. That end of the room was light enough to see to read. I could discern the spots of ink upon the floor. I could see the brasswork of the iron safe. I could see—what? Yes, I write to confess, not to evade, my guilt. I could see, Christina, a something that made my heart throb with violence, even while I knew well enough there had been in it a feeling of ronsed expectation, as though I had been led there by a friend or foe, for some purpose which I should not long mistake. My hand, as I looked, dropped on the neighboring desk for support to my frame. Yet I did not turn away, as I ought to have done, either in pure innocence of heart, or with a sense that I had in thought sinned for a moment, but had fled in horror from the temptation, to repent, and to be warned ever after of the danger of one moment of criminal weakness. No; I continued to gaze as in a kind of hideous fascination. It seemed to me not a simple key in that lock, but the curving finger of some demon that I was bound to obey. "Pay the price of your enjoyments now," I thought I heard it saying to me. "Fool! you cannot escape, or, if you can, this is the only way. Show some courage, some manliness—do boldly what must be done! If it will be any comfort to you, we'll say this shall be the only time. Ay, swear it if you like! Am I not here to register your oath? We understand. Only this once!"

Still I moved not—only helplessly gazed. My ears now became filled with other sounds and voices. I heard Mr. Klop dismissing me, amid the contemptuous and indignant murmurs of the clerks. I felt the touch of arrest on my shoulder, and the low murmur in the ear, implying that my very body was become the property of another. I heard the heart-broken cry of my mother as the double news of my imprisonment and dismissal reached her. And still the Demon beckoned me, as though these were all but tributary influences which he had evoked to show me how useless and unmanly was my hesitation. That curved shining finger (so strangely lifelike in its form under the moonlight's partial gleam) drew me towards it, and I heard its voice saying, "Come! It is the only way. Hasten! Save yourself!" "No! Fly! It is ruin!" cried another and opposing voice. And then it too murmured, like an echo, "Save yourself!"

But that last voice was so small, and so far off, and the previous one so loud and near, and then that beckoning finger was so easy to touch, and promised so much of instant advantage from its mystery that even as I gazed, incapable to determine what I would do, I had done all: committed myself to that from which life will never again allow me to be dissevered.

Spare me, Christina, for an instant. I will go on again calmly soon, if you can feel interest in me any longer.

Well, I resume: The cold steel, as I touched it, sent a shiver through my frame, but I turned the key with a desperate hand, opened the door, and looked in. I could just dimly see a drawer full of gold; my first touch was of a batch of filmy, rustling paper, all bank notes. I took out two, and held one of them up to the light of the moon. I could just make out the word "Hundred," and was about to put the others back and hurry away, when my Familiar whispered me, "Fool! you will never prosper in this mode of life if you begin so badly. What good will that do you? Where can you change it? Take gold!" Hastily I replaced the notes on the heap, and plunged my hand into the drawer where the gold was, trying to guess as well as I could how far such a handful would go towards a hundred sovereigns. And here let me laugh at a delicate piece of casuistry with which I amused myself. Even then I could not, I thought, take one sovereign more than my indispensable need required. O, not for the wealth of worlds! Pity my employer had not been by to recognize as it deserved such sublime self-abnegation! So I counted the gold tremulously, yet determinedly, to the end of the hundred, perfectly conscious that every second thus spent was enhancing my danger, but also conscious that I was laying up one bit of comfortable hypocricy for the future that might be found very necessary for my peace.

The gold was mine. My bill should be duly honored. "Honored!" O God, how my own word pierced me like an ill carried weapon! P'shaw! These were trifles now. I groped my way out of the room and along the passage; saw Boyce, still over his newspaper, in Denning's room; staggered out by the way I had entered; opened silently the street door, which had been closed since I had passed through; and then, unchallenged by a single voice, slunk away by dark courts and by-passages to keep my appointment.

I reached the bridge. I leant against the wall. I tried to realize a single moment of joy at my success—the success for which I had bid so high a price. "I am saved!" I cried inwardly; "saved!" Just then I heard a sound that shook my very soul. It was but a church clock across the river, striking; but to me it was like a voice crying through the midnight, "Lost!" And immediately one clock after another took up the sound, until it seemed to me that angel voices—some thrillingly sweet, some mournful and beseeching, some solemn and denouncing—were crying to me from all parts of the universe, "Lost! lost! lost!" The river, the black city, faded from my view beneath that glorious sky. I saw an old village, every spot of which was familiar to me. I seemed to stand no longer on that bridge, but was kneeling in a well-known room, with my face raised to that sky in prayer. I clasped my hands, my lips moved. I had a delicious feeling of rest. Once more I was a little child going to lie down in my bed without a care. I heard a footstep; gradually as it approached nearer it recalled me to myself—myself! Good God! was that poor, miserable, shrinking being Paul Hayden? That ——!

Spare me yet, Christina, one weakness. Do not ask me to brand myself once more with the word: it has burnt in too deeply, and needs rather anodynes and rest. Yes, spare me now and for ever the word. I know I cannot escape the thing.

What should I do? Again came that perilous question. How had I answered it before? The weight in my pockets, heavy enough to drag down a thousand souls, was my answer. I thought once I would leap into the river, and let that weight bear me down to a grave so deep that I might hope there to be insensible even to my shame. Then my clenched hands would rise convulsively and desperately in mortal agony against my breast, asking again, "What shall I do?"

Knowing not, seeing no path open to go back, yet shrinking more and more every moment from the thought of going forward, I suddenly—obeying some impulse I hardly understood, perhaps one of desire for physical relief—began to run. Presently I fancied I caught a glimpse of Glynne approaching to meet me. I turned and ran in an opposite direction to that of his coming footsteps; it seemed to me as though I were flying not so much from him as from myself—from the new and hideous form I had taken—knowing not yet which would prove to be the true Paul Hayden.

When I stopped running it was in the court outside the office. How I came there I know not, unless drawn by the same power that I have heard often moves murderers to haunt the spot where they shed the blood of their victim, and where they are at length to find the ministers of retribution.

"Is it too late?" I asked, under my breath, sinking down on some steps in a dark corner near the counting-house. "Is it too late even now to right myself? Yes, it is impossible—hopeless!" Thus I despairingly cried; but the hope grew and grew until it became a strong, yearning, passionate desire to try. If that gold were only back again, how light every other trouble would be—how quietly I could go home and sleep! I rose from the steps filled with a wild, feverish resolution. "I will do it, so God help me!" I cried, and went round to the front door. It was locked. O the misery of that moment! I wrung my hands in silent despair and went back to the court. I glanced eagerly at the three lower windows on that side. The one nearest the steps was open—wide open—left so, perhaps, for a few moments, by the watchman, in order to sweeten the offices after putting out the gas. But, if so, he was not far off. He would probably see me if I ventured. Well, I must risk that. By ascending the steps I fancied I could reach it. It was done, my arm stretched across, the window-sill grasped, and I had pulled myself up and dropped lightly inside. I looked through the counting-house door. As far as I could see, everything remained as when I had left it: no one was there. I went in, opened the safe, and with trembling hand put back the hated gold, trying to let it mingle with the rest without noise. O how anxiously I searched my pockets to be sure that not one solitary piece was left behind by accident! It gave me fresh alarm the mere thought. With a more grateful sound than before the key turned in the lock, and I groped my way from the room and gained the window without hearing the slightest noise to disturb me. Once out in the cold night again, my only feeling was to get away as fast as I could. Then came blessed relief—my heart was brimful of intense thankfulness.

As I was walking rapidly across the bridge, some one slapped me on the shoulder. I looked round, saw it was Glynne, and shrunk from him, perhaps rather roughly; if so, the roughness was not intentional.

"What's the matter now?" said he. "Why, Hayden, you've been drinking. It was a fool's trick to get yourself in this state just now. I suppose you had better go home, and I'll come and see you before breakfast. Only it's driving it desperately close."

"Look here, Glynne; answer me this. Have you any notion of what you have paid for me since I have been in London?"

"Pooh! you don't know what you're talking about."

"I beg your pardon, I do. Can you answer me?"

"Well, I should rather fancy not. How on earth should I know?"

"Would that bill be about it?"

"Humbug! What's the good of asking me? Yes, more."

"Very well, then. That I take into my own hands. From this day I owe you nothing. Good night!" I held out my hand. As he took it, I said:

"Don't let's meet again, Glynne, not at present; I don't care if we never do."

He drew himself up, stared at me, took his cigar from his lips, laughed a low forced laugh, turned lightly on his heel, and walked away.

I went home; sorry to have so parted, but glad of the parting itself, and too weak myself to dream of strengthening him.

I sat down by the fireside with the miserable task before me of telling my mother about the bill, but I felt it was the only thing to save her as well as myself from disgrace. She was more cheerful than I had seen her for some time, but her first words were most unwelcome to me in my present condition.

"Christina is in London, Paul. She will perhaps be here to-morrow."

This was an unpleasant surprise to me—she who had known me as I once was—she coming to witness my disgrace. That decided me. I must tell my mother all about it. In a few words I prepared for the worst, and then told her all—all, Christina.

When I had said what I had to say from beginning to end, my head dropped on her shoulder, and relief, indescribable relief, was mine. For some time we were both silent. At length she spoke:

"Paul, you know what my property is—five hundred pounds. I will pay your bill. But, O my boy, do not deceive me! Tell me the worst. Will Mr. Klop, indeed, find that hundred pounds there that you say—"

She did not need to finish the sentence. I understood her but too well. After the revelation I had made, she had no longer faith in me or in my word. My act was already pursuing me—here, where I thought myself most safe. I rudely pushed her away, and hurried to my bed, at once stung by her doubts and terrified by the new alarm she had conjured up. As I weighed it, an almost superstitious dread possessed me that her words betokened some further consequence yet undreamed of by me. "What if it should not be there!" I cried out in my anguish; "who would then believe me, if she does not?" I spent a terrible night. When I lay awake the darkness seemed full of beckoning, shining fingers, in the shape of keys; when I slept I dreamed I was dropping from some enormous height, or flying across some interminable bridge. In the pale, wintry dawn of morning I rose. I started to meet my own face in the glass. It spoke truly; I had grown years older during that night.

I would not trust myself to meet my mother at breakfast, and left the house without seeing her. By the time I had arrived at the office I felt unable to look any one in the face. As I turned my back to hang up my coat, I said, as usual, "Good morning, gentlemen."

I listened breathlessly. My hand paused with the uplifted coat. No, there was no answer; there was not a sound in the room but the scratching of pens. I looked round. This was folly. Every one was quietly engaged in work. My own voice must have died away before it left me. I had nothing but myself and my own fears to be afraid of.

I tried hard to work, but my ears involuntarily strove to catch every sound, every whisper. The sight of that safe, which I could see from where I sat, when the door was open, turned me sick. I could not help watching Boyce eagerly as he went to open it. What if I had displaced anything and he should notice it? He opened it. There was no immediate intimation, by his manner, that he saw anything wrong till he began counting, and then I fancied he must be puzzled, he was so long and silent. I wondered; yet what was it to me—what could it be—whether his accounts were right or wrong? There was clearly no trace of my visit left behind. Yet I could not rest. I started at the least sound, and when I saw Mr. Klop's shining bald head and silver hair approaching my heart jumped violently.

"Now, Mr. Boyce," he said, sitting down at the great fire, "I'll just run through the cash balance with you, if you're ready."

"Certainly, sir, certainly," said Mr. Boyce; "I have just a little matter to finish with first; then I'll come to you." So saying, he left the office.

Mr. Klop sat rubbing his hands at the fire waiting for him. Some minutes passed without his return. Mr. Klop looked impatiently once towards the door. Still he came not. At length Mr. Klop rose, went to the outer office, and called,

"Mr. Boyce!"

"He has gone out, sir," said one of the clerks.

"Gone out!" cried Mr. Klop, "Why, what can have induced him to go out just as I told him I wanted him?"

He went back impatiently into his room.

Every circumstance, however slight, now oppressed me. What did Boyce's absence mean? Had he gone to fetch a constable before even letting Mr. Klop know he had cause for suspicion?

No—no; there was a something in the cashier's manner that I could not read in that way. There seemed almost a kind of new and sympathetic tie between us, which made me shudder, in that aspect and manner of his.

And then, trying to relapse into the thoughts of my safety, and of Christina, and of my mother—and of that dinner I was to eat by Mr. Klop's hearth in the evening—I felt there hung over me yet a kind of imposture. I was not what I seemed, and might for that reason be again tempted by those secret influences that seem to lie in wait for such prey. I had been all the morning weighing over a certain idea, alarming to dwell on, requiring more courage to pursue than I dared dream of possessing, dismissed many times, yet always coming back—"Paul, Paul, do not eat that dinner; go not there while you remain thus. Take heart; you know what you ought to do. Go, while it is certain there is time."

My knees knocked together, my lips seemed glued, my fingers like those of a dead man, as I slipped from my stool, strode to the mantelpiece, and drank off a whole glass of water before going up to Mr. Klop's door. I tapped, and, without waiting for an answer, walked straight into his room. I suppose I tried to speak at first, and that he did not hear me, for he said impatiently—

"Speak louder, Paul. What is it?"

"I should like to speak to you, sir, in private."

"Eh! Oh, certainly." He got up, came past me, and closed the door; then reseated himself. I began to speak, desirous naturally to make the best of so bad a job, but the tones were unsteady, and I could only get out words enough to show the bare dry truth, without the slightest circumlocution or coloring.

"Sir, I had a letter last night telling me I should be arrested to-day for a debt of a hundred pounds. I left that letter here accidentally, and, fearing you or some one might find it, I returned. I saw your room open, your key in the safe; I robbed you of a hundred pounds."

I stopped, for my voice grew more and more hoarse and unsteady, and my heart was beating with frenzied violence.

"Well?" said Mr. Klop, eyeing me sternly.

"I could not keep it, sir. I climbed in at the lower passage-window opening into the court, and put it back. You will find it there. My life is a burden to me with this untold."

"Is this true, young man? And the whole truth?"

"All! on my soul, sir."

Mr. Klop rose, passed by me to the door, opened it, and called out, "Has Boyce returned?"

"Yes, sir," answered one of the clerks.

Boyce now presented himself, bathed in perspiration, and breathless, which he vainly strove to conceal under the guise of his ordinarily quiet, almost sullen, behavior.

"A customer, sir, drew me out while talking. And I forgot to say there is a gentleman outside asking to see you on particular and pressing business. He is watching for some one to pass. He said he must go if you did not see him instantly."

"Let him go then, and to the devil if he likes! Now, Mr. Boyce, just look to the cash, and see if it's all right. I left my key in the safe last night, and should like to be satisfied that nothing wrong has happened in consequence."

"Yes, sir,"—and Boyce looked strangely irresolute as he came in, glancing uneasily behind him, yet warned by Mr. Klop's searching eye, which was becoming decidedly unpleasant.

Boyce went to the safe, opened it, and drew the iron door towards him—perhaps accidentally—but it would have had the effect of concealing the upper part of his body from us where we stood, only that Mr. Klop moved a little—and that, too, might have been accidentally—and then the door was almost ostentatiously thrown back.

A pause of a minute or two now ensued. Presently Boyce said, with a quivering voice, quite unlike his usual harsh, unfeeling tone, "Why, why, sir! Mr. Klop, some one has been here! There is I believe—nay, I am sure—a hundred pounds missing! Stay; I will count again." And he did so, not turning for a moment to look on us.

Our eyes met—Mr. Klop's and mine. It was an awful meeting. He doubted me—that was the expression I saw there. I answered him with a quiet but steady look, earnestly yet mutely appealing. He understood, I thought, and waited.

As for me, however calmly I was able to bear myself, I saw there was a frightful gulf yawning beneath my feet.

Very rapidly I ran over all the possibilities of this new calamity—retraced every foot of ground, and every minute of time, belonging to the sickening experience of the past night. I saw but one solution—too fantastic to be credible, yet the only one my agitated mind could guess at and rest upon Was Boyce a rogue? Had he seen me either steal into Mr. Klop's room last night, or out of it when he was reading the paper in Denning's room? Had he secretly gone after me to the safe, discovered the theft, and, instead of denouncing it, determined to profit by it, sure that the thief would be made answerable for all, and disbelieved even if discovered, and if he should deny that he had taken more than the one hundred pounds? If so, one thing was clear—he would sacrifice me to clear himself.

"Yes, sir," he said, now turning round upon us a face whiter—so it seemed to me—than the whitest of sepulchral walls, "there is a hundred pounds missing."

"And can you, Boyce, guess how?"

"Well, sir, that is a serious question to answer. I fear I can. Last night, when every one was gone, I thought I saw a shadow pass the little window of Denning's place. It was gone before I could get out. I looked into your room here, but saw nothing in particular to alarm me."

"Not the key in the safe?"

"No, sir, I did not notice it."

"Indeed!" said the merchant, "and did you notice anything?"

"I did, sir. I picked up this on the floor."

He produced a crumpled playbill. As he opened it, I saw in large letters "Don Giovanni." I knew it. It indicated the latest of the many visits Glynne and I had made together to the Opera.

"Do you know who could have dropped it?"

"I will answer that question, sir," said I. "I have no doubt I did, if it was really found there."

"If it was? Would you dare, sir, to suspect Mr. Sampson Boyce, the cashier of Klop, Son and Klop, of an untruth? uttered, too, for the ruin of another? Young man, beware! This is no play," said Klop, with a strange gleam in his eye.

I trembled, yet looked up with a certain confidence. God help me, I felt almost innocent just then. Mr. Klop's eye passed from Boyce to me, from me to Boyce, before he again spoke.

"Well, Mr. Boyce, I and Paul have already had some talk: he knows he is under suspicion. By-the-by, who was the customer, Mr. Boyce, that took you into the street a little while ago—kept you so long, and sent you back in such hot haste?"

There was the slightest possible pause.

"I really don't know his name, sir. I have seen him in the warehouse over and over again, but cannot remember to have ever heard it."

"And when you came back, who was the gentleman who wanted me so pressingly to come out?" said Mr. Klop, with that inexplicable gleam once more in his quiet, dangerous-looking eye.

Boyce attempted a smile: a very ghastly one it was.

"He neither gave me his name or card, sir."

"And he said nothing particular to you, except that he wanted me out there?"

"Nothing, sir"

"Not even that you must get me out of this room at any cost, or you would never be able to replace that hundred pounds out of your pocket, and which you had been home to fetch? Eh?"

Dead silence. I seemed (but it might be fancy) to hear the shaking of the clothes on that collapsing frame.

"Come, Mr. Boyce, enough of this! If I wrong you I will beg your pardon, as a gentleman should, and show you why I came to this abrupt conclusion. Now, sir, have you not that money in your pocket?"

What a position was mine! To stand there and see this man's guilt strangely and wonderfully brought to light through my guilt, and to know he was every instant getting more hopelessly entangled, and I feeling more and more free, in spite of my inward prayer to God to prepare me for the worst.

Suddenly he threw himself on his knees before Mr. Klop, and murmured, just above his breath, "Forgive me! It is true. I was tempted. I saw the key in your safe—discovered, as I thought, you had been robbed. I am sure, sir, there was a hundred pounds taken away."

"I could have told you that."

"Indeed, sir! It was you, then? I am rightly punished! I thought you had been robbed—saw in the playbill a trace of the criminal—and felt assured that if I increased the amount no suspicion would ever attach to me. Mercy!"

"It would be wasted. I can understand a moment of weakness leading to crime in a young, tempted, and inexperienced man; and that the act itself may bring its own warning and cure. But you, sir, must be corrupt at heart—must have through life fenced yourself round with lies, and have been only unexpectedly surprised into a true self-revelation. Go! I have no more to say."

A few minutes more and I saw two constables enter, and the gold taken from Boyce's pockets, which he had evidently determined to restore the moment he had, or fancied that he had, discovered no theft had been committed, but had been denied all opportunity. Without a word more he left the room in the custody of the men.

I sank down in a chair, heedless of Mr. Klop's presence, my very soul faint.

"Young man," he said to me soon, and in a voice so strangely sweet that the tears bounded forth to greet it, "you have sinned, repented, and made prompt restitution. You can do no more now. I wish it had been otherwise. But I forgive you. In time I may be able to trust you if you deserve it."

He would not turn me off then. O God! that I might have shown him what I felt! But I restrained myself, and I have no doubt he liked me the better for so doing.

"Paul, no one knows but myself. No one shall know."

I could only look and bow, in silent gratitude.

"You will dine with me, as you had intended?"

"No, no, sir."

"Why? It will divert suspicion."

"Oh, sir, my heart is too full. God forgive me; it would seem a kind of triumph."

"You are right. Go at once. I will look to the affair of the bill, and see how to help you, without altogether sheltering you from your just responsibilities. Good-by; give me your hand; pleasant Christmas to you!"

Christina, I have told all to my mother. I cannot eat to-morrow's dinner till I have also told you. Now, if you wish it, I release you from your engagement. PAUL.

Let the last of these pages bear witness that I will never comply with the request made in them; never will I burn them, never will I part with them, never shall eye see them while we two live. When we are dead, the revelation under other names will not matter to us, and may help those who are in danger. CHRISTINA.

[The Illustrated London News.

NO USE FOR TROUSERS.—On the morning of the meteoric shower, in 1832, old Peyton Roberts, who intended making an early start to his work, got up in the midst of the display. On going to his door, he saw with amazement, the sky lit up with falling meteors, and he concluded at once the world was on fire, and that the day of judgment had come. He stood for a moment gazing in speechless terror at the scene, and then with a yell of horror sprang out of the door right into the midst of the falling stars, and there in his effort to dodge them, he commenced a series of ground tumbling that would have done honor to a rope dancer. His wife, being awakened in the meantime, seeing Peyton jumping and skipping about the yard, hawled out to him to know "What in the name of common sense he was doin' out thar dancin' round without his clothes on." But Peyton heard not. The judgment, and long back accounts he would have to settle, made him heedless of all terrestrial things, and his wife, by this time, becoming alarmed at his behavior, sprang out of bed, and, running to the door, shrieked out at the top of her lungs:

"Peyton, I say Peyton, what do you mean jumpin' about thar? Come and put your trousers on."

"Trousers! what the devil's the use of trousers when the world's on fire?"

[For the Californian.]

THE CHRISTMAS FIRESIDE.

FOR GOOD LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS.

BY GRANDFATHER TWAIN.

THE STORY OF THE BAD LITTLE BOY THAT BORE A CHARMED LIFE.

ONCE there was a bad little boy, whose name was Jim—though, if you will notice, you will find that bad little boys are nearly always called James in your Sunday-school books. It was very strange, but still it was true, that this one was called Jim.

He didn't have any sick mother, either—a sick mother who was pious and had the consumption, and would be glad to lie down in the grave and be at rest, but for the strong love she bore her boy, and the anxiety she felt that the world would be harsh and cold toward him when she was gone. Most bad boys in the Sunday books are named James, and have sick mothers who teach them to say, "Now, I lay me down," etc., and sing them to sleep with sweet plaintive voices, and then kiss them good-night, and kneel down by the bedside and weep. But it was different with this fellow. He was named Jim, and there wasn't anything the matter with his mother—no consumption, or anything of that kind. She was rather stout than otherwise, and she was not pious; moreover, she was not anxious on Jim's account; she said if he were to break his neck, it wouldn't be much loss; she always spanked Jim to sleep, and she never kissed him good-night; on the contrary, she boxed his ears when she was ready to leave him.

Once, this little bad boy stole the key of the pantry and slipped in there and helped himself to some jam, and filled up the vessel with tar, so that his mother would never know the difference; but all at once a terrible feeling didn't come over him, and something didn't seem to whisper to him, "Is it right to disobey my mother? Isn't it sinful to do this? Where do bad little boys go who gobble up their good kind mother's jam?" and then he didn't kneel down all alone and promise never to be wicked any more, and rise up with a light, happy heart, and go and tell his mother all about it and beg her forgiveness, and be blessed by her with tears of pride and thankfulness in her eyes. No; that is the way with all other bad boys in the books, but it happened otherwise with this Jim, strangely enough. He ate that jam, and said it was hully, in his sinful, vulgar way; and he put in the tar, and said that was hully also, and laughed, and observed that "the old woman would get up and snort" when she found it out; and when she did find it out he denied knowing anything about it, and she whipped him severely, and he did the crying himself. Everything about this boy was curious—everything turned out differently with him from the way it does to the bad Jameses in the books.

Once he climbed up in Farmer Acorn's apple tree to steal apples, and the limb didn't break and he didn't fall and break his arm, and get torn by the farmer's great dog, and then languish on a sick bed for weeks and repent and become good. Oh, no—he stole as many apples as he wanted, and came down all right, and he was all ready for the dog, too, and knocked him endways with a rock when he came to tear him. It was very strange—nothing like it ever happened in those mild little books with marbled backs, and with pictures in them of men with swallow-tailed coats and hell-crowned hats and pantaloons that are short in the legs, and women with the waists of their dresses under their arms and no hoops on. Nothing like it in any of the Sunday-school books.

Once he stole the teacher's penknife, and when he was afraid it would be found out and he would get whipped, he slipped it into George Wilson's cap—poor Widow Wilson's son, the moral boy, the good little boy of the village, who always obeyed his mother, and never told an untruth, and was fond of his lessons and infatuated with Sunday-school. And when the knife dropped from the cap and poor George hung his head and blushed, as if in conscious guilt, and the grieved teacher charged the theft upon him, and was just in the very act of bringing the switch down upon his trembling shoulders, a white-haired improbable justice of the peace did not suddenly appear in their midst and strike an attitude and say, "Spare this noble boy—there stands the cowering culprit! I was passing the school door at recess, and, unseen myself, I saw the theft committed!" And then Jim didn't get whaled, and the venerable justice didn't read the tearful school a homily, and take George by the hand and say such a boy deserved to be exalted, and then tell him to come and make his home with him, and sweep out the office, and make fires, and run errands, and chop wood, and study law, and help his wife to do household labors, and have all the balance of the time to play, and get forty cents a month, and be happy. No, it would have happened that way in the books, but it didn't happen that way to Jim. No meddling old clam of a justice dropped in to make trouble, and so the model boy George got threshed, and Jim was glad of it. Because, you know, Jim hated moral boys. Jim said he was "down on them milksops." Such was the coarse language of this bad, neglected boy.

But the strangest things that ever happened to Jim was the time he went boating on Sunday and didn't get drowned, and that other time that he got caught out in the storm when he was fishing on Sunday, and didn't get struck by lightning. Why, you might look, and look, and look through the Sunday-school books, from now till next Christmas, and you would never come across anything like this. Oh, no—you would find that all the bad boys who go boating on Sunday invariably get drowned, and all the bad boys who get caught out in storms, when they are fishing on Sunday, infallibly get struck by lightning. Boats with bad boys in them always upset on Sunday, and it always storms when bad boys go fishing on the Sabbath. How this Jim ever escaped is a mystery to me.

This Jim bore a charmed life—that must have been the way of it. Nothing could hurt him. He even gave the elephant in the menagerie a plug of tobacco, and the elephant didn't knock the top of his head off with his trunk. He browsed around the cupboard after essence of peppermint, and didn't make a mistake and drink aqua fortis. He stole his father's gun and went hunting on the Sabbath, and didn't shoot three or four of his fingers off. He struck his little sister on the temple with his fist when he was angry, and she didn't linger in pain through long summer days and die with sweet words of forgiveness upon her lips that redoubled the anguish of his breaking heart. No—she got over it. He ran off and went to sea at last, and didn't come back and find himself sad and alone in the world, his loved ones sleeping in the quiet churchyard, and the vine-embowered home of his boyhood tumbled down and gone to decay. Ah, no—he came home drunk as a piper, and got into the station house the first thing.

And he grew up, and married, and raised a large family, and brained them all with an axe one night, and got wealthy by all manner of cheating and rascality, and now he is the infernalist wickedest scoundrel in his native village, and is universally respected, and belongs to the Legislature.

So you see there never was a bad James in the Sunday-school books that had such a streak of luck as this sinful Jim with the charmed life. MARK TWAIN.

ENIGMA.

I AM composed of sixteen or seventeen letters.

My 16, 14, 3, 4, 6, 9, 15, is something or other, in a general way.

My 2, 11, 7, 14, is something else.

My 9, 6, 4, 10, 15, 11, is the other thing.

My 6, 16, 8, 14, 9, 3, 2, 1, 11, is most anything.

My 5, 3, 9, 14, 7, 3, 1, 11, 5, 6, 16, 2, 13, is most anything else.

My 4, 2, 16, 9, is a good deal like some of the things referred to above, though in what respect it has baffled even me to determine.

My 9, 3, 8, 12, is—is—well, I suppose it is, although I cannot see why.

Now, if anybody can cipher out that enigma, he is an abler man than I am, notwithstanding I got it up myself. It would be a real favor if some one would try, however. I have figured at it, and worked at it, and sweated over it, until I am disgusted, and I can make neither head nor tail of it. I thought it was rather neat at first, but I do not like it so well, now that I can't find out the answer to it. It looks rather easy at a first glance, but you will notice that the further you get into it the more it widens out.

This is my first effort in the enigma line, and, to speak the plain truth, I am considerably stunned at my own success. I do not seem to have just got the hang of this sort of thing, somehow. But I offer the entertaining little trifle to your readers for what it is worth—it may serve to amuse an idle year—and it cannot do much harm—it cannot more than drive a man mad, and make him massacre his relations.

MARK TWAIN.

THE King of Wurtemberg has issued an order scolding his officers for want of respect. He says they do not salute him with proper concert of movement in the theatre. They should all rise together when he enters. He complains, too, that the guard does not "turn out" for him with necessary rapidity, and in order that all sentinels may know him when they see him, every guard-house is to be provided with an "exact photograph of him at the expense of the regiment." To prevent mistakes, also, every sentinel is to salute every court carriage, but to be careful not to give a royal salute to any but princes in "the direct line," unless accompanied by princesses in the direct line. When he was a student at the university, attending the lectures of Ranke, the historian, he had a private box constructed for himself and his aide-de-camp, so that he might not be contaminated by contact with the common herd on the benches. But the students, to their honor, would not stand it, and refused to allow the lecturer to be heard till the aristocratic abomination was removed, as it was. Middle-aged Germans are more patient.

[For the Californian.]

ALLAQUIZ.

A CHRISTMAS INCIDENT IN GERMANY.

WE have no snow in California to press our joys, at this season, into the small space of the inner room, by the genial fire-side. Dust is no proper substitute: and Christmas. without the proverbial habiliment of its hoary saint, is a thing abnormal. Those of us, therefore, who cherish the old-time observances of this festival are obliged to look inward, and make Christmas with our own memories, and hold wassail and drinkhail with our own hearts. How we have spent past Christmases, and how others, dear to us, will spend the present one, in their distant homes, is the thought uppermost in the minds of many who miss the mad frolics of skating and sleigh-rides, with their gay concomitants of red cheeks and merry laughter.

It may be sentimental, or something worse, but I, for one, confess that I like such musings. Memory has a way of painting frescoes with the clouds of distant skies, that are even prettier than the lay-figures and life forms which served for the real models. It was, for instance, a quiet little scene of domestic joy, that Christmas of my student-life in Germany; yet, somehow, it has grouped itself in my remembrance, like the master-piece of Cornelius, the largest fresco of them all.

So much has been written about the Holidays in Germany, that I cannot be expected to say anything new on the subject. It may, however, be necessary to premise that the Weinachten of the Fatherland commence on what we call "Christmas Eve." This is the great night for children. It is their feast. It is the time they have been looking forward to with such wild, glad, gorgeous anticipation. It is the night of the Christmas tree, and in all Germany there is no child so poor as not to get something from its green boughs. Besides this night, Christmas lasts two whole days, to which, respectively, there seems to be a logical apportionment of two very important kinds of enjoyment. The first day is assigned to boundless eating, and the second to getting drunk; and it is due to the zeal of the Germans to say that they observe this order of ceremonies with scrupulous exactness.

Frau Hirtel was a domestic little body, who maintained herself in the narrow crooked thoroughfare of the Ingrimstrasse of Heidelberg, by letting out her rooms to students. My apartment was not princely, but comfortable and lofty. It was, in fact, on the next story to the clouds, and seemed to have been cut into the high gable of the dingy old German house by some freak or afterthought of the architect. Directly opposite, on the other side of the narrow street, but far, far below, was the shop of a sausage-maker. If I had been an enthusiast in mechanics, I should have found much consolation in this fact, as well as a great deal "to lead hope on:" because a sausage-maker's apprentice is really, if not perpetual motion itself, a strong inductive argument in favor of its future discovery. The one to whom I have alluded kept up a continual hacking. day and night, week-day and Sunday. The sound of his meat axe met my ears the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night. It was, in fact, my Matin and my Angelus bell. But, by a principle of compensation, which is one of the kindliest things in nature, this little nook had advantages of which prouder apartments could not boast. I never had, before or since, a room in which I could apply myself to study so assiduously or with so great a zest. It seemed to be haunted with the great spirits of those who have trimmed their lamps in garrets and left the world better for their toils. This might have been a boyish hallucination; but I shall always believe that the most glorious view of the famous Heidelberg Castle, the Molkenkur, and the lofty peak of the Kaiserstuhl, is to be obtained from the one narrow window of my aerial niche in the dark German gable. The old castle frowned down upon me, from the brow of the mountain just above my head; and often, of an evening, have I leaned upon my little window-sill, and gazed up at its ruined battlements and ivy-mantled towers. As they grew dimmer and grayer in the waning light, the rents and seams of centuries have disappeared, and the palace of the old Electors has stood before me in all its ancient pride.

If I could sometimes have wished for a more liberal allowance of sugar in the coffee with which the Frau Hirtel used to serve me, I never could complain of a lack of sweetness in the morning gossip of her red-cheeked daughter, the Fraulein Anna. This little sunbeam in the house was the only member of the family beside the Frau Hirtel herself, that I had ever seen; though many and many a time the name of Karl, the only son and brother. was upon their lips. Karl was a Handwerksbursche, and on Christmas was expected home from his long. long wanderings.

But I must tell you what these Handwerkburschen are; for they are unknown to nations under free constitutional governments—a sort of fossil remains of feudalism. They are young fellows, half journeymen, half apprentices, who are obliged to wander for two or three years from city to city, working at their trades. They finally return to their homes weary and poor—having learned nothing but the rough side of the world—to make what is called their "master-piece." If this pass muster, it entitles them to style themselves masters of their trades. They grow out of that old illiberal principle which compels the son to follow in the footsteps of his father and grandfather. Yet for all the narrow-minded enactments and regulations to crush their spirit and make them miserable, they always walk on the sunny side of nature. They are a jolly, jovial sort of vagabonds, who have not the chance to be dishonest if they had the inclination. In my student foot-tours, I have spent many a happy hour toiling along the same road with them, listening to their stories and merry songs. If I met one of them on the highway, he stopped, offered me his hand, and exchanged a kindly word. He never lodges in a city unless he has work there. The village inn is his castle; here he obtains his bed at night and his breakfast in the morning for seven kreuzers—not quite five cents—and trudges on, smoking and singing through all Europe. This is the Handwerkbursche, poor but merry; the knight-errant of the bundle and staff; the troubadour and minnsinger of the nineteenth century.

The Christmas tree, on the night before, had been laden with many a gift of affectionate remembrance for the absent Karl. As we sat down to the Christmas dinner. there was a vacant place at the table, and in the hearts of the disappointed mother and sister. Suddenly the shop-bell rang as the door swung open and shut, and in the next instant Karl was in the middle of the room. His pack and staff fell at his feet, and Frau Hirtel and the Fraulein Anna sprung into his arms. It is not the merry dinner that succeeded, or the gluehwein that made the evening glad, but this one picture that dwells most in my memory. The joy that shone on the dust-stained and care-worn face of the returned wanderer, reflected in those of his mother and sister, as they stood in that long embrace, has no parallel in the history of the return of exiled kings.

It was for the portrayal of nothing sensational that this paper was commenced; and here it ends. I believe that the contemplation of such scenes as the one I have so poorly hinted at has a tendency to make us better. For my part, I cannot think of the little picture of domestic joy in the house of that German widow, without longing the more eagerly for a clasp of some of the hands that will be warmed this year by distant Christmas fires, and for a nearer place in the hearts that will be warmed, at the same time, by the better fires of kindly feeling.

ALLAQUIZ.

DRAMATIC.

WE have had rather a meagre week of it so far as the drama is concerned. With the exception of Monday evening, when it was opened to a not remarkably brilliant French company, the Metropolitan has stood with closed doors. There are various rumors afloat relative to Mr. Wheatleigh's plans. It is said on one side that he is going up the country with "Arrah-na-Pogue," while another report has it that he contemplates the purchase of a chateau on the Hudson with the present profits.

"The Serf" was produced at the Opera House on Tuesday evening. It was really difficult to believe that this was in reality one of Tom Taylor's dramas. We were half inclined to think that that brilliant dramatist had lent his name to the production, without giving it the benefit of his genius. It has some strong situations, but more weak features. Nor was it put upon the stage in the manner which was promised. The scenery gave no token of that careful preparation we were led to expect, having rather the air of being hurried into and out of the painter's hands. Mr. Boniface, as Ivan, was not good. Light comedy is his forte—the moment he steps into melodrama or tragedy a tension commences which is painful Mrs. Edwin invested the character of the Countess with that womanliness and earnestness which has made her the favorite she is. Aldrich did the Count Fedor fairly, but it is a role peculiarly in Mr. Thorne's line. Mr. Thorne's presence would have helped the piece materially. Last evening was announced for the benefit of Mr. Boniface—he playing Macbeth. We hope he had a good house. This afternoon, "The Serf" will be given; in the evening, "Rip Van Winkle." On Monday evening, Miss Charlotte Crampton, an actress new to the California stage, makes her appearance in "Lucrezia Borgia." "A new and original drama," called "A Dream of Destiny," is announced as in active preparation.

The Thorne-Setchell Troupe have done some good business in Sacramento, but the cold weather of late has worked against them, it being impossible to warm the theatre. Harry Jackson went up as a reinforcement on Wednesday. Setchell was announced for a benefit last evening, playing in "Dombey and Son" and "Stage-Struck," introducing in the latter piece "The Wearing of the Green," sung by Miss Thorne, and "The Eatin' of the Greens," from Mr. Webb's burlesque of Arrah-na-Poke. The songs brought down the house on other evenings. Mr. Setchell will play a farewell engagement here, before leaving for Australia.

LANGLEY'S CITY DIRECTORY.—We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of "The San Francisco Directory, for the year commencing December, 1865, embracing a general directory of residents, and business directory; also a directory of streets, public offices, etc.; a map of the city, together with the Consolidation Act and its Amendments; the Municipal Government; Societies and Organizations, and a great variety of useful and statistical information, exhibiting at a glance the progress and present condition of the city." We scarcely need call the attention of business men to the usefulness of such a work, but will remark that in all its details the present volume seems more complete than any of its predecessors. In no other city of the Union is so full an annual record prepared—more names, in proportion to the whole number of inhabitants, being given than in any other similar publication.

CHRISTMAS TIDE.—Christmas literature being pretty fairly represented in THE CALIFORNIAN this week, the exclusion of the conventional editorial on the season will not be noticed. A Holiday Story by the "Condensed Novelist," being too late for this issue, will appear next week.

PONTIFICAL HIGH MASS.—Mozart's Mass, number twelve, will be sung in St. Mary's Cathedral at midnight Christmas Eve, and will be repeated on Christmas morning at eleven o'clock.

DEDICATION.—The new St. Joseph's church, Tenth street, will be dedicated to-morrow by Most Reverend Archbishop Allemany.

OBIT.—Hon. M. Hall McAllister, formerly Judge of the U. S. Circuit Court, District of California, on the 18th inst., and Hon P. W. Shepheard, Police Judge of San Francisco.

BLAISDELL'S Panorama of Ireland, of which report speaks very highly, will be exhibited at the Academy of Music after the 1st of January.

IF your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

THERE is much that is enviable, but still nothing to excite wonder, in the immense business that Meagher, Tuaffe & Co. are doing. They import direct, and save all the intermediate profits occuring in sales of goods from importer to jobber and from jobber to retailer, and give the benefit of this saving to the purchasers at their counter. By liberal advertising and low prices they have become known as the Stewarts of the Pacific coast.

A CONSTANT FRIEND.—No mother would permit her child to suffer when she had it in her power to relieve it; why then allow your little darlings to suffer the agony of Whooping Cough, when relief can be speedily had by the use of Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

A GRAND Masquerade Ball under the patronage of the Alemannia, will be given at Maguire's Academy of Music on the evening of January 13th. The parquette will be floored over on a level with the stage, and the whole capacity of the house and stage will be converted into a ball-room for this occasion. The names of the gentlemen having the immediate management in hand, are announced in our advertising columns.

REMEMBER the Christmas Festival of the Trinity Sunday School takes place to-night at Platt's Hall. The children of the Protestant Orphan Asylum will also be there with their Christmas Tree, by the kind invitation of Superintendent Badger, and contributions for it will be received at the hall all day to-day. Send in something for the orphans; if it be but a trifle, it will still serve to brighten their dreary pathway.

PERSONAL.—Mr. C. H. Brickwedel, a restaurant proprietor, noted for his good cheer and good fare, has purchased the restaurant establishment on Clay street, one door below Montgomery, and will open the same on Wednesday next. "Charley" knows how to keep a restaurant, and we guarantee that he will win his share of public patronage.

NEW OCEAN STEAMSHIP LINE.—The California Steam Navigation Company will despatch the new steamship Ajax (2000 tons burden) for Honolulu on the 6th January proximo. We trust the company will receive sufficient support to justify the permanent continuance of this enterprise.

THE San Francisco Fire Department's second Annual Ball will come off on Thursday evening next at Union Hall. Every precaution has been taken to make this festival a complete success, and one of credit as well as profit to the Department. Procure your tickets.

WHAT MATCHLESS BEAUTY lingers on every face, adorned with that sweet inimitable toilet-dressing, for the complexion and skin, Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

THE next Opposition Steamer, the America, will leave for New York via Nicaragua, on the 15th of January next.

LAMOTT, the fashionable hatter, has opened a new store filled with the latest styles of hats under the Russ House.

A GERMAN GHOST STORY.

BY ROBERT DALE OWEN.

THERE is not, perhaps, a country more rife in legends of haunted houses than Germany. No province but has its store of them. Many, drawn by tradition from the obscurity of the past, have lost, if they ever possessed, any claim to be regarded except as apocryphal. But others, of a recent date and better attested, cannot be disposed of in so summary a manner.

In furnishing a specimen of this latter class, I depart from a rule which I think it well to observe in regard to original narratives of character so marvellous: to record such, namely, only when they can be procured direct from the lips of the witnesses themselves. This comes to me at second hand. I had no opportunity of cross questioning the actors in the scenes narrated. Yet I had the story from a gentleman of high respectability: the principal Secretary of the —— Legation at Naples: and his sources of information were direct and authentic.

In the southeastern portion of Pomerania, at no great distance from the frontier of the province of West Prussia, and in the vicinity of the small town of Buttow, there stood, not many years since, an ancient chateau. It was the ancestral residence of an old Pomeranian family of baronial rank; and the narrative of its destruction, with the causes which led thereto, is curious and remarkable.

Its former owner, the Baron von Putkammer, after leading a wild and dissolute life, had expired within its walls. For years previously, many a mysterious story, fraught with dark hints of seduction and infanticide, had been whispered over the surrounding country: and when at last death arrested the Baron's profligate career, some reported that he had been strangled in requital of outrage committed—others, that the devil had taken home his own, as they had long expected.

His estate went to a relative of the same name, who granted the enjoyment of it to his eldest son, heir to the title. This young man, after a time, arrived to take possession. He found in the chateau the administrator of the deceased Baron's estate.

It was late, the first night, before he went to bed. Yet he was scarcely undressed, when he heard, through the stillness of the night, the approach of a carriage, at first rolling over the sharp gravel of the avenue, then entering the paved court-yard. This was succeeded by the noise of the front door opening, and the distinct sound of steps on the principal staircase.

Young Putkammer, surprised at this unseasonable visit, yet supposing it some friend who had been benighted, hastily donned his dressing-gown, and with light in hand stepped to the landing. Nothing to be seen there! But he heard behind him the opening of a door leading into the principal gallery of the chateau—a long hall which for some time had been out of use. It had been employed by the former owner of the castle as a banqueting-room, was hung with old family portraits, and, as the young man had noticed during the day, was so completely encumbered with furniture, which had been temporarily stored there, that no one could pass through it.

He returned in great surprise, which was much increased when he found the door of the gallery in question closed and locked. He listened, and heard quite distinctly, within the room, the noise of plates and dishes and the clatter of knives and forks. To this, after a time, succeeded the sound of shuffling cards and the rattle of money, as if thrown on the table in the course of the game.

More and more astonished, he awoke his servant, and bade him listen at the door and tell him what he heard. The terrified valet reported the same sounds that had reached his master's ears. Thereupon the latter told him to arouse the administrator and request his presence.

When this gentleman appeared, the young nobleman eagerly asked if he could furnish any explanation of this strange disturbance.

"I was unwilling," said he, in reply, "to anticipate what you now witness, lest you might imagine I had some interested motive to prevent your coming hither. We are all familiar with these sounds. They occur every night at about the same hour. And we have sought in vain any natural explanation of their constant recurrence."

"Have you the key of the gallery?"

"Here it is."

The door was unlocked and thrown open. Silence and darkness! And when the lights were introduced, not an object was to be seen through the gloom, but the old furniture confusedly piled up over the floor.

They closed and locked the door. Again the same sounds commenced: the clatter of dishes, the noise of revelling, the clink of the gamblers' gold. A second time they opened the door, this time quickly and suddenly; and a second time the sounds instantly ceased, and the hall, untenanted except by the silent portraits on its walls, appeared before them, the same still and gloomy lumber room as before.

Baffled for the time, young Putkammer dismissed his attendants and retired to his chamber. Ere long he heard the door of the gallery open, the heavy footsteps sound on the stairway, the front door creak on its hinges—and then the roll of the carriage, first over the stone pavement, then along the gravelled avenue, till the sounds gradually died away in the distance.

The next night he was ready dressed and prepared with lights. When, about the same hour, the noise of the approaching carriage was heard he had the lights immediately carried to the top of the stairway, and he himself half descended the stairs. Up the stairs and past his very side came the footsteps; but neither living being nor spectral form could his eyes perceive.

The same noises in the old banqueting-hall. The same fruitless attempts to witness the revel, or to get at the secret, if any, of the imposition.

The young man was brave and devoid of superstition. Yet, in spite of himself, these mysterious sounds, renewed night after night, irritated his nerves, and preyed upon his quiet. He thought to break through the spell by inviting a party of living guests. They came, to the number of thirty or forty; but not for their presence did the invisible revellers intermit their nocturnal visit. All heard the approach of the carriage, the steps ascending the staircase, the sounds of revelry in the hall. And all, when the opened door disclosed, as wont but darkness and silence, turned away with a shudder—and to the subsequent invitation of their host to favor him again with their company replied by some shallow apology, which he perfectly understood.

Thus deserted by his friends, and subjected, night after night, to the same ghastly annoyance, the young man found his health beginning to suffer, and decided to endure it no longer.

Returning to his father, he informed him that he would receive with gratitude the rents of the property, but only on condition that he was not required to reside in its haunted chateau.

The father, ridiculing what he termed his son's superstitious weakness, declared that he would himself take up his residence there for a time, assured that he could not fail to discover the true cause of the sounds that had driven off its former occupants.

But the result belied his expectations. Like his son, he never could see anything. But the selfsame sounds nightly assailed his ears. He caused the hall to be cleared out and occupied daily. So long as it was lighted, and there was any one within it, no sounds were heard; and by thus occupying it all night, the disturbance could be averted. But as often as it was closed or left in darkness, the invisible revel recommenced at the wonted hour, preceded by the same preliminaries, terminating in the same manner.

Nothing was left untried to penetrate the mystery, and to detect the trick, if to trickery the disturbances were due. But every effort to obtain an explanation of the phenomena utterly failed. And the father, like the son, after a few weeks' struggle against the nightly annoyance, found his nervous system unable to cope with this constant strain upon it, and left the chateau, determined never again to enter its walls.

The next expedient was to rent it to those whom the fame of its ghostly reputation had not reached. But this was unavailing, except for a brief season. No tenant would remain beyond a week or ten days. This plan, therefore, was abandoned in despair; the principal rooms were closed; and the building remained for years untenanted, except by one or two unwilling dependents.

Finally the proprietor, deeming all change hopeless, and finding that the keeping up of the chateau was a mere useless expense, resolved to destroy it. The dead had fairly driven out the living. He had it pulled down; and a few low, ruined walls alone remained to mark the place where it stood.

Still, even within these deserted ruins, the same sounds of nightly revelry were declared to have been heard by those who were bold enough to approach them at the midnight hour. When this was reported to the proprietor, he determined, if possible, to out-root this last remnant of disturbance. Accordingly, he caused to be erected, out of the remaining materials of the chateau and on the spot where it had stood, a small chapel, now to be found there, a mute witness of the story I have here told.

The chapel was completed and consecrated in the year 1844. Even while the rites attending its consecration, were in progress, strange and unwonted noises disturbed the congregation; but from that time on they ceased; and the chapel has since been entirely free from any such.

A relative of the proprietor, a young officer in the Prussian army, was present at the consecration, himself witnessed the noises in question, and had previously heard, from the parties themselves, all the former occurrences. He it was who related the circumstances to my informant, the Baron von P——, a gentleman of a grave and earnest character, whose manner, in repeating them to me, evinced sincerity and conviction. But it is not merely upon his authority that the details of the narrative rest. They are, it would seem, of public notoriety in Pomerania; and hundreds of persons in the neighborhood, as my informant declared, can yet be found to testify, from personal observation, to the general accuracy of the above narrative.*

The most salient point in this story is the practical and business part of it—the actual pulling down of the chateau, as a last resort, to get rid of the disturbance. Mere fancy is not wont to lead to such a result as that. The owner of a piece of valuable property is not likely to destroy it for imaginary causes. Interest is a marvellous quickener of the wits, and may be supposed to have left no stone unturned, before assenting to such a sacrifice.

I inquired of the gentleman to whom I am indebted for the above narrative if there were no skeptical surmises in regard to the origin of the disturbance. He replied, that he had heard but one—namely, that the administrator of the deceasd Baron's estate, from motives of interest and to have the field to himself, have resorted to a trick to scare the owners from the premises.

It is beyond doubt that such devices have been successfully employed ere now for similar purposes. An example may be found in the story of the monks of St. Bruno, and the shrewd device they employed to obtain from King Louis the Saint the grant of one of his ancestral palaces. It was in this wise.

Having heard his confessor speak in high terms of the goodness and learning of the monks of St. Bruno, the King expressed a desire to found a community of them near Paris. Bernard de la Tour, the superior, sent six of the brethren; and Louis assigned to them, as a residence, a handsome dwelling in the village of Chantilly. It so happened, that from their windows they had a fine view of the old palace of Vauvert, originally erected for a royal residence by King Robert, but which had been deserted for years. The worthy monks, oblivious of the Tenth Commandment, may have thought the place would suit them; but ashamed, probably, to make a formal demand of it from the King, they seem to have set their wits to work to procure it by stratagem.

At all events, the palace of Vauvert, which had never labored under any imputation against its character until they became its neighbors, began almost immediately afterwards to acquire a bad name. Frightful shrieks were heard to proceed hence at night. Blue, red and green lights were seen to glimmer from its casements, and then suddenly disappear. The clanking of chains succeeded, together with the howlings of persons as in great pain. Then a ghastly spectre, in pea-green, with long, white beard and serpent's tail, appeared at the principal windows, shaking his fist at passers-by. This went on for months.

The King, to whom all these wonders were duly reported, deplored the scandal, and sent commissioners to look into the affair. To these the six monks of Chantilly, indignant that the Devil should play such pranks before their very faces, suggested that, if they could but have the palace as a residence, they would undertake speedily to cure it of all ghostly intrusion. A deed, with the royal sign-manual, conveyed Vauvert to the monks of St. Bruno. It bears the date of 1259. From that time all disturbance ceased—the green ghost, according to the creed of the pious, being laid to rest forever under the waters of the Red Sea.†

Some will surmise that the story of the castle of Putkammer is but a modified version of that of the palace of Vauvert. It may be so. One who was not on the spot, to witness the phenomenon and personally to verify all the details, cannot rationally deny the possibility of such an hypothesis. Yet I find little parallel between the cases, and difficulties, apparently insuperable, in the way of accepting such a solution of the mystery.

The French palace was deserted, and nothing was easier than to play off there, unchallenged, such tricks, as the showing of colored lights, the clanking of chains, shrieks, groans, and a howling spectre with beard and tail—all in accordance with the prejudices of that age; nor do we read that any one was bold enough to penetrate, during the night, into the scene of the disturbance; nor had the King's commissioners any personal motive to urge a thorough research; nor had a pious sovereign, the owner of a dozen palaces, any strong inducement to refuse the cession of one of these, already untenanted and useless, to certain holy men, the objects of his veneration.

Very different, in every respect, is the affair of the Pomeranian castle. It is a narrative of the skeptical nineteenth century, that sets down all ghost stories as nursery tales. The owner and his son, the future possessor, each at separate times and for weeks, reside in the castle, and occupy themselves in repeated attempts to discover whether they have been imposed on. The self-same trick, if trick it was, is repeated night after night, without variation. The roll of the approaching carriage wheels, first along the gravelled avenue, then over the paved court-yard, while no carriage was visible—how were such sounds to be imitated? The fall of footsteps unaccompanied by aught in bodily form, up the lighted stairway, and past the very side of the bold youth who stepped down to meet them—what human device could successfully simulate these? The sound of the opening gallery-door and the noises of the midnight-orgies, with full opportunity to examine ever nook and corner of the scene whence, to every ear, the same identical indications came—how, in producing and reproducing these, could trickery, time after time, escape detection? Both father and son, it is evident, had their suspicions aroused; and both, as evidently, were men of courage, not to be blinded by superstitious panic. Is it a probable thing that they would destroy an old and valued family mansion, without having exhausted every conceivable expedient to detect imposture?

Nor was this imposture, if as such we are to regard it, conducted in an approved form, after the orthodox fashion. It assumed a shape contrary to all usually received ideas. No spectre clanking its chains; no lights burning blue; no groans of the tormented; no ordinary getting-up of a ghostly disturbance. But a mere succession of sounds, indicating, if we are to receive and interpret them literally, the periodical return from the world of spirits of some of its tenants, restless and unblest. Was this the machinery a mystifier was likely to select?

Such are the difficulties which attend the hypothesis of a concerted plan of deception. They will be overlooked by those who have made up their minds that communication between this world and the next is impossible, and who will content themselves with pronouncing, that though they cannot detect the mode of impostnre, yet imposture of some kind or other it plainly must have been.

And such skeptics will very probably remind us of other difficulties in the way of accepting as a reality the alleged phenomena. What have the spirits of the departed to do with conveyances resembling those of earthly structure? Are there incorporeal carriages and horses? Can grave men admit such fancies as these?‡ Or is all this, even if genuine, only symbolical—sounds wittout objective counterpart? Then what becomes of the positive character of this narrative, as a lesson, as a warning to us? The whole degenerates into an acted parable. It fades into the idle pageantry of a dream. Thus we lose ourselves in shadowy conjecture.

But, none the less, the facts, if facts they be, remain to be dealt with. And if at last we concede the ultramundane origin of these manifestatio s, whether as objective reality or only as truth teaching allegory, what a field is opened to our speculation regarding the realms of spirit and the possible punishments there in store for those who, by degrading their natures in this world, may have rendered themselves unfit for happiness in the next—and who, perhaps, still attracted to earth by the debasing excesses they once mistook for pleasure may be doomed, in the phantom repetition of their sins, to detect their naked reality, to have stamped on their consciousness the vileness of these without the brutal grutifications that veiled it, the essence of vice shorn of its sensual halo, the grossness without the glitter: if so, a terrible expiation!

I beg it may not be imagined, that, because I see grave difficulties in the way of regarding this case as one of imposture, I therefore set it up as proof of a novel theory regarding future punishments. A structure so great cannot be erected on a foundation so slender. I but furnish it as a chance contribution towards the probabilities of ultramundane intercourse—as material for thought—as one of those hints which future facts may render valueless, but which, on the other hand, other observed phenomena may possibly serve to work out and corroborate and explain.

*I find in my journal the following: "August 17. 1857. Read over to the Baron von P—— the Putkammer narrative; and he assented to its accuracy in every particular."

† This story is given in Garinet's Histoire de la Magie en France, page 75.

‡ Yet in a recent case, occurring in England, and authenticated in the strongest manner, the "sound of carriages driving in the park when none were there" is one of the incidents given on the authority of a lady who had witnessed the disturbances, and who furnishes a detailed account of them. See Facts and Fantasies, a sequel to Lights and Sounds, the Mystery of the Day, by Henry Spencer, London, 1853, pages 76–101.

A New Runaway.—A curious incident occurred, recently, at Kane Station, on the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad, as related in the Williamsport Bulletin: "A locomotive was standing on the track while the engineer was at breakfast. An Irishman, to gratify curiosity, stepped on and opened the valve, letting on a full head of steam. For a moment the rush of steam drove the wheels around so rapidly that the engine stood still, and the Irishman jumped off. Then, with a bound, away it went down the road at the rate of seventy or eighty miles an hour, for about three miles, when it ran into two cars loaded with lumber, scattering them like chaff, at the same time smashing itself into a useless heap. No one was killed, but it was our opinion tnat the Irishman ought to have taken the ride and the chances of the engine, smash and all." This accident cost the company thousands of dollars. If a passenger train had been in the line, instead of two empty cars, no amount of money could have paid for the loss of life. "An ounce of preventive is better than a pound of cure;" the throttle-valve should be locked up by some simple device, so that the engineer could put the key in his pocket. The arrangement should be secure, and such that the lever could not be budged unless released. This lock would be an insurance against mischief by accident or design, and be adopted by railroads generally.

SONGS OF THE SEASON.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

I HEAR along our street
Pass the minstrel throngs;
Hark! they play so sweet,
On their hautboys, Christmas songs!
Let us by the fire
Ever higher
Sing them till the night expire!

In December ring
Every day the chimes;
Lord the gleemen sing
In the streets their merry rhymes.
Let us by the fire, etc.

Shepherds at the grange,
Where the Babe was born,
Sang, with many a change,
Christmas carols until morn.
Let us by the fire, etc.

These good people sang
Songs devout and sweet;
While the rafters rang,
There they stood with freezing feet.
Let us by the fire, etc.

Nuns in frigid cells
At this holy tide,
For want of something else,
Christmas songs at times have tried.
Let us by the fire, etc.

Washerwomen old
To the sound they beat,
Sing by rivers cold,
With uncovered heads and feet.
Let us by the fire, etc.

Who by the fireside stands
Stamps his feet and sings;
But he who blows his hands
Not so gay a carol brings.
Let us by the fire, etc.

THE MAHOGANY TREE.

[BY W. M. THACKERAY.]

CHRISTMAS is here;
Winds whistle shrill,
Icy and chill:
Little care we.
Little we fear
Weather without,
Sheltered about
The Mahogany Tree.

Commoner greens,
Ivy and oaks,
Poets, in jokes,
Sing, do you see;
Good fellows' shins
Here boys, are found,
Twisting around
The Mahogany Tree.

Once on the boughs
Birds of rare plume
Sang, in its bloom:
Night birds are we:
Here we carouse,
Singing, like them,
Perched round the stem
Of the jolly old tree.

Drain we the cup.
Friend, art afraid?
Spirits are laid
In the Red Sea.
Mantle it up;
Empty it yet;
Let us forget,
Round the old tree.

Here let us sport,
Boys, as we sit;
Laughter and wit
Flashing so free.
Life is but short—
When we are gone,
Let them sing on,
Round the old tree.

Evenings we knew,
Happy as this;
Faces we miss,
Pleasant to see.
Kind hearts and true,
Gentle and just,
Peace to your dust!
We sing round the tree.

Care, like a dun,
Lurks at the gate:
Let the dog wait;
Happy we'll be!
Drink every one;
Pile up the coals,
Fill the red bowls,
Round the old tree!

Sorrows, begone!
Life and its ills,
Duns and their bills,
Bid we to flee.
Come with the dawn
Blue devil sprite,
Leave us to-night,
Round the old tree.

[FROM TENNYSON'S "IN MEMORIAM."]

THE time draws near the birth of Christ:
The moon is hid; the night is still;
The Christmas bells from hill to hill
Answer each other in the mist.

Four voices of four hamlets round,
From far and near, on mead and moor,
Swell out and fail, as if a door
Were shut between me and the sound:

Each voice four changes on the wind,
That now dilate, and now decrease,
Peace and good will, good will and peace,
Peace and good will to all mankind.

This year I slept and woke with pain,
I almost wished no more to wake,
And that my hold on life would break
Before I heard those bells again:

But they my troubled spirit rule,
For they controlled me when a boy;
They bring me sorrow touched with joy,
The merry, merry bells of Yule.

WHY WOMEN "DRESS."

THE true explanation of the prevailing extravagance in costume is that women dress for one another. In other words they dress for eyes which can appreciate the material and estimate the cost of every separate article they have on. It is quite true that many men care as much for, and are as competent to give an opinion on the appearance of their wives, sisters, or friends, as any number of female acquaintances; but the grounds upon which the two classes of critics will base their several judgments will always be distinct, and the conclusions themselves not unfrequently quite opposite.

Ask a man and a woman to tell you who is the best dressed girl at a ball, and you will hardly ever find them agreeing in their answer. Go a step further, and compare the costumes which have been selected, and you will discover almost to a certainty that the woman has singled out the most expensive dress in the room, whereas the man has asked himself which is the most becoming. The one has suffered herself to be so impressed by the richness of the material, the elaborateness of the embroidery, the costliness of the trimmings, that in the end she found it simply impossible to leave these things out of the calculation. The other, happy in his ignorance, has looked only at the general effect, and has probably given the preference to a young lady whose gown has no other merits than those of being scrupulously neat, becomingly cut, and perfectly well made.

We submit, therefore, that if that deference to masculine taste which is so frequently professed really existed in any appreciable measure, it would supply an antidote to many of the grievances under which society now labors. My daughters' gowns must sweep the pavement as they walk, cries one broken-hearted mother: or if they do so far consult their pockets as to loop them up, their underskirts must be flounced and embroidered until they become as costly as the gown. There is no necessity in the case, interposes a sterner moralist. Young women should have no desire to dress beyond their means merely for the sake of rivalling their richer friends. It is here that our theory comes in and harmonizes these opposing views. No man ever felt anything but irritation at seeing a woman's gown doing the business of the crossing sweeper, or attached any value to the amount of open work displayed beneath a looped-up skirt.

If young ladies would but believe it—or rather if they did but attach any importance to it when they do believe it—a man will be perfectly satisfied with their appearance, so far as these considerations are concerned, if their petticoats are spotlessly clean and their stockings guiltless of a wrinkle. We do not say that even these characteristics, when added to the well-fitting gowns for which we have already stipulated, are to be attained without some expenditure of money; for cleanliness is not a cheap virtue, and it is not every dressmaker who knows how to make a dress. But, at any rate, the proposed standard is a good deal easier of attainment than the spurious fine-ladyism, after which so many women toil in vain; and we cannot but believe that, if girls did but think more of pleasing the other sex and less of vieing with their own, their parents would see reason to bless the change the next time they came to look over their milliner's bills.

Wit.—The more philosophical our habits of observation, the more carefully and constantly we note important resemblances, the less shall we mark or treasure the trivial connections of wit. The movement of mind from which wit springs is opposed both to thorough and serious reflection, and ought not, therefore, to become habitual. Nor is wit desirable as a constant accompaniment of composition or of conversation. The train of thought is too much diverted and interrupted by it. Take, for instance, the habit of punning. The pun demandsa separate consideration of mere verbal relations. The thread of discourse is for the instant broken, and the mind requires time to rally and re-unite it. Let diversion of this sort recur several times, and the interest and attention due to the cardinal point are lost, and the main topic is abandoned amid the percussion of small wit. Undoubtedly, even the most serious discourse can, in the hands of a master, suffer occasional humor without detriment; but more frequently laughter is secured at the cost of conviction. Another undesirable result of wit, when constantly employed, is the insatiable demand to which it gives rise. Men love to laugh better than to think; and the moment they find one who can indulge them in this respect, they require a constant exhibition of his power, and transform him, as far as possible, into a public buffoon. Great earnestness and strength of purpose are required to resist this tendency. The power is rare and exceedingly attractive, and flattering in the immediate popularity it confers One who possesses it is strongly tempted on all occasions to indulge it, more and more to rely upon it, and thus ultimately becomes a cracker of jokes.—Philosophy of Rhetoric.

Obituary Female Fact.—It is remarked (says a London reporter) by the police of the waterside, as a characteristic circumstance, that nearly every female who throws herself into the water is careful to divest herself of her bonnet and shawl, which are placed on the ground in such a manner as not to be in the least damaged.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS, } Publishers.
WM. J. BINGHAM.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

FRANCIS BRET HARTE, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1865.

A SHEAF OF CRITICISM.

IN a recent review of Outcroppings, THE CALIFORNIAN intimated that the volume would probably provoke some criticism, which would definitely settle a standard by which the efforts of California poets should be judged. That intimation has proven but partially correct; a few criticisms have been made, but they do not materially affect this question. It is nothing that we hear of representative poems and representative poets—every clique, every village, has its one predestined genius—if we are offered as yet no valid reason for according them a position.

Yet we confess to be somewhat concerned at the alarming shape some of these criticisms have taken. We cannot help feeling as though we were in some way concerned in precipitating them upon the head of the infelix compiler. We observe that the detached names of poets are thrown at him a good deal in the manner of epithets, and that he is pelted with fragments of verses, as though they were decayed cabbages—a resemblance not entirely inconsistent with their material. It would seem that "the air was full of poets"—that the gods overflow the California Pantheon, and that, owing to the crowded condition of the Washoe Valhalla, her immortals have been obliged to fulminate from lager beer cellars.

The nearest approximation to proper criticism has appeared in the California Leader over the signature of "Mufti." As it is partly addressed to THE CALIFORNIAN, and as it is written in the urban rather than the provincial style, we cheerfully give it precedence in this review. But the article is unfinished; the remainder is promised this week, and we are unable to judge how far its present incompleteness is the result of accident. The writer tells us frankly that his criticism is partly in answer to a friend who, in conversation, rashly ascribed superior critical qualities to THE CALIFORNIAN. As this is the clearest statement in the entire article, we cannot help congratulating this friend, although we suspect him to be a masculine Mrs. Harris, and a near relation of one Bliebenicht, with whom "Mufti" is in the habit of holding imaginary conversations, on his escape from the indefinite length of that critical dissertation, which Mufti seems to have commenced as to a friend, but to have continued as to an enemy.

We were prepared for a review in the Territorial Enterprise, for the Gold Hill News, after playfully alluding to the obnoxious volume as "purp-stuff," intimated that the editor of the Enterprise had written superior poems. But we were not prepared for four columns and a-half of a review to prove what was apparent in his first paragraph, that he was one of the neglected poets. There is no doubt that the circumstance was aggravating, and that the editor exhibits a certain fire and agility in his review. But it is the Fire of St. Anthony—it is the Dance of St. Vitus. The poetic and the scrofulous temperaments are analagous—high spirits and brilliancy are too often simply the exaltation of fever. The editor loses his temper, and calls the compiler bad names. He intimates that he is a coward and a hypocrite—but that he is not a coward because he is a hypocrite—and ergo that he is not a hypocrite, because he is a coward. He permits himself to indulge in a most extraordinary illustration, which we cannot, in decency, repeat in these columns. And yet, after a simile, which is a curious commingling of the language of obstetrics and the National Police Gazette, he speaks of a certain poet as having an unclean imagination. We do not know what is the popular form of imagery in Virginia City, or what is considered clean, but, if the editor of the Enterprise writes for an audience beyond those classic precincts, we beg him, in spite of the advice of the compiler, not "to look in his own heart" for his "imagery," or "in the fortunes of his fellow men." He gives us a vision of "blue fire and lurid flames," but, as the confession of such experiences is usually confined to tracts on intemperance, we think it a little out of place in a book review. But we have an idea that he is already as ashamed of his passion as he is of his logic, which assumes for its premises what he believes other people think, or his critical acumen, which applies the epithet "rollicking" to the Keats-like verse of Stoddard, and we trust that he will hereafter remember that the functions of a critic and the qualities of a gentleman are not inconsistent.

We are charmed at the ingenuity with which the Sacramento Union makes the review of this book an opportunity to raise the familiar song of self-laudation and California egoism which has brought our newspaper literature to ridicule in Eastern circles. If the finely turned rhetoric of its opening paragraph be offered as a specimen of California descriptive poetry, we think that the compiler of Outcroppings has made a mistake in his covert sneer at the California pastorals. But as the Union recapitulates the many poetical provocations of the California existence, which must read like the counts of a ferocious indictment to the wretched writer of that preface, some of its details are vague. It instances, as one of the compelling causes to poetry, "inland domesticity, ignorant of the cosmopolitan sea." In our editorial capacity we have read a good many poems, evidently the product of "inland domesticity," but whether or not accompanied by obliviousness "to the cosmopolitan sea," we are at a loss to determine. If this be a polite periphrasis for those who have "come across the plains," we think the Union is correct. Phœnix's "He was Accidentally Shot," and Mark Twain's "He Done his Level Best," are fair instances of the poetical tendencies of "inland domesticity ignorant of the cosmopolitan sea," and certainly have been wrongfully overlooked in the volume. The Union believes that the "grand gold hunting crusade" would make a fine theme for epic. We are inclined to think it would. Something in the style of the episode of the Argonautæ, with Sam Brannan for "Jason," Michael Reese for "Theseus," and the editor of the Union as the "Orpheus" who sings the romantic chronicle. And it may be that here we shall find what is considered the true California standard of poetical taste—that which is most Californian.

NEW BOOKS.

HOLIDAY GIFTS.

IN THE CALIFORNIAN of last week, we called attention in general terms to the holiday display of A. Roman & Co. We continue our notice this week, more particularly referring to some of the volumes then mentioned, which we have since received from the publishers.

Songs of Seven. By Jean Ingelow. Boston: Roberts & Brothers.

Miss Jean Ingelow's idyllic series of "life poems" entitled the Songs of Seven, are beautifully illustrated in the present work. It contains nine figure pieces, six vignettes, and seven full-page drawings of landscapes—the latter of rare merit. In regard to the poems, it is not necessary to recall here the welcome which attended the advent of this sweet singer into the world of letters by way of endorsing the taste which has thus embalmed some of her most musical verses. We all remember the generous letters of congratulation which that young English country poetess received from our American bards. The steel portrait of Miss Ingelow which prefaces the volume, shows a sensible, kindly English face—not perhaps the ideal of a poetess—but one which will strike pleasantly every American reader. The book is handsomely printed each page of the text enclosed in brilliant red lines, and bound in good taste. It would make a most appropriate household gift.

Idyls of the King. With illustrations. By Alfred Tennyson. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

The "Idyls" are illustrated as a companion volume to the Gems from Tennyson, which we noticed last week. The illustrations are by Eytinge and Colman solely, and are in many respects superior to those of the latter work. Eytinge's conception of "Elaine" and "Guinevere" are particularly good, and the parting of King Arthur from the Abbess, after taking his farewell of his guilty wife is as near a reflection of the text as the pencil of the artist could portray.

> "And lo, he sat on horseback at the door!
> And near him the sad nuns with each a light
> Stood, and he gave them charge about the Queen,
> To guard and foster her forevermore.
> And while he spake to these his helm was lower'd,
> To which for crest the golden dragon clung
> Of Britain; so she did not see the face,
> Which then was as an angel's, but she saw,
> Wet with the mists and smitten by the lights,
> The Dragon of the great Pendragonship
> Blaze, making all the night a steam of fire.
> And even then he turn'd; and more and more
> The moony vapor rolling round the King,
> Who seem'd the phantom of a Giant in it,
> Enwound him fold by fold, and made him gray
> And grayer, till himself became as mist
> Before her, moving ghostlike to his doom."

It is a pleasing indication of the growing refinement of taste when these tales, breathing of knightly honor, self-sacrifice, and lofty aspiration—albeit they are couched in verse and language not always popular with the masses—displace the diluted sentiment of the annuals and holiday keepsakes of the past.

The Tenth and Twelfth Books of the Institutions of Quintilian. With explanatory notes. By Henry S. Frieze. Professor of Latin in the State University of Michigan. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

Professor Frieze in his edition of the tenth and twelfth books of The Institutio Oratoria, has followed the custom of the German schools, and made it a text-book for the Junior class. He believes that Quintilian, as a specimen of the intermediate or transition style, offers an excellent connecting link between the "golden" and "silver ages"—between the Latin of Livy and Tacitus, and that familiarity with this text-book is the best introduction to the latter author. Whether this plan may be practicable or not in our schools, the works of the essayist who reformed the Latin style after it had been debauched by Seneca's extravagance and stilted rhetoric, when the language of the literary youth had become a mere repetition of high flown quotation and a procession of inverted commas, cannot be too early familiarized to the student. Part of the tenth book, De copia verborum, is particularly instructive, in the present age of fine writing, of what forms the basis of a pure style.

Atlantic Tales. A collection of stories from the Atlantic Monthly. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Fourteen stories from the Atlantic Monthly, very tastefully and neatly bound in one volume. The selection has been made from several volumes of the magazine, and embrace stories from some well-known American writers. Fitz James O'Brien's fanciful story of "The Diamond Lens," Bayard Taylor's quaint Quaker story, "Friend Eli's Daughter," and Gail Hamilton's original sketch, "The Pursuit of Knowledge Under Difficulties," are included in the collection. Robert Lowell is represented by "A Raft that No Man Made;" George Arnold tells "Why Thomas Was Discharged;" Miss Harding portrays "Life in the Iron Mills;" and Edward Everett Hale furnishes his patriotic portrait of Philip Nolan, "The Man Without a Country," a fiction founded on fact. Although the selection is careful and critical, the "Tales" have a decided Atlantic flavor and might, with one or two exceptions, seem the product of one mind.

Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects. A Series of Popular Lectures. By J. G. Holland. New York: Charles Scribner.

Nine of Dr. Holland's lectures, namely: Self-Help; Fashion; Work and Play; Working and Shirking; High Life and Low Life; The National Heart; Cost and Compensation; Art and Life; The Popular Lecture; now first collected in book form. Although there is probably not one of these subjects that has not been more ably handled by cotemporary essayists and lecturers, Dr. Holland has acquired some popularity as a domestic philosopher and a household essayist, and most folk are inclined to pardon the author of Bitter Sweet any amount of prosy sermonizing.

Handbook of the Steam Engine. Containing all the rules required for the right construction and management of engines of every class, with the easy arithmetical solution of those rules. Illustrated by sixty-seven wood-cuts and numerous tables and examples. By John Bourne, C. E. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

This "catechism" is in reality the power of the steam reduced to arithmetical computation and figures. It is necessarily a work of great practical utility, yet it contains a comprehensive theory of this branch of Mechanics. It is profusely illustrated with diagrams.

Precious Thoughts: Moral and Religious. Gathered from the works of John Ruskin, A. M. By Mrs. L. C. Tuthill. New York: John Wiley & Son.

Mrs. Tuthill has made a very beautiful collection of those episodical truths on Morality and Religion which are scattered through the volumes of John Ruskin. It is a companion work to her "selections" published some years since which were mainly devoted to Nature and Art. A fine volume of excerpts from one of the most distinguished English writers.

The Ballad Book. A selection of the choicest British Ballads. Edited by William Allingham. Cambridge: Sever and Francis.

A choice collection of old English and Scotch ballads for the careful compilation of which the name of William Allingham is a sufficient guarentee. Very prettily bound—tinted paper.

What Came Afterwards. By T. S. Arthur. New York: Carleton.

One of a series of new works by Mr. Arthur, published by Carleton. It is a sequel to "Nothing but Money," and is in the author's characteristic style of domestic romance.

The Poems of Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Boston: Ticknor and Fields.

Aldrich's Poems, in that blue and gold livery which has become the garment of immortality.

FROM H. H. BANCROFT & Co. we have received the following books, mentioned, among others from that firm, last week:

Sir Jasper's Tenant. By Mary E. Braddon. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald.

Miss Braddon's latest publication is decidedly prosy, discursive, and parenthetical, and not at all up to her usual thrilling and audacious manner. When dealing with startling incideuts, or following the windings of an involved plot, the reader is not apt to note the carelessness of her literary style, but in her present episodical and prosaic narrative, her failing in this respect becomes unpleasantly apparent. Sir Jasper's Tenant is not equal to The Lady's Mile, now being published serially.

The Bushranger. A Yankee's Adventures during his Second Visit to Australia. By William H. Thomes, "a returned Australian." Author of The Gold Hunter's Adventures; or, Life in Australia. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

If half a dozen frightful adventures, perilous escapes from alligators, criminals, drowning, and hanging, with murders, abductions ad infinitum, are calculated to make a book interesting this should be intcusely so. If the perusal of such incidents be particularly edifying to the young, this would make a nice boys' book, for whom, jndging from its general appearance, it seems to be Intended. The hero is a Yankee who goes to Australia, where he appears to develop a "noble rage" for capturing outlaws and malefactors. There he rescues the daughter of an English nobleman who had been spirited away in her youth, and finally marries her, having previously—a good deal in the style of the stage Yankee—asserted his superiority over her father, who is an arrogant and of course bloated aristocrat. The book is composed of highly objectionable material treated in a highly moral manner.

Only A Clod. By Mary E. Braddon. New York: Dick & Fitzgerald.

This novel was published in the last volume of THE CALIFORNIAN.

A NEW CALIFORNIA BOOK.

[REVIEWED BY THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELIST.]

Tailings; being rejections of California Verse. Seventeen vols., 8mo. Gold Hill: Daily News Publishing Company. Virginia City: Daily Enterprise. Whiskey Creek: Sentinel.

This exquisite work, published simultaneously by the Daily Enterprise, the Gold Hill Daily News and the Whiskey Creek Sentinel, makes not only a valuable but a considerable addition to any library. It is an offset to the manifest unfairness of a volume lately issued by Roman & Co., entitled Outcroppings, and contains all the productions rejected from that volume, through the ignorance, presumption and prejudice of the compiler. In contradistinction to Outcroppings, not only the editorship but the contents of this volume are personal; and, far from omitting their own productions, through hypocritical modesty, the contributions of the editor alone occupy twelve of the seventeen volumes.

Those who are familiar with the peculiar imagery which distinguishes the editorials of the Virginia Enterprise will recoguize the following gem:

SUNRISE ON MOUNT DAVIDSON.

[BY THE EDITOR OF THE ENTERPRISE.]

Lo! where the orient hills are tipped with snow,
The pregnant morn slow waddles o'er the plain,
Big with the coming day; the shameless child
Of Erebus and Nox, wrought in the slow
And sure gestation of the rolling hours.
How great is the fecundity of Time!
Methinks I see the swaddling clothes of mist
Roll down the bosky glens, and standing here
Note-book in hand, I really seem to be Accoucher of the Universe.

Oh, go
And bag your heads, ye shameless bards, whose weak
Conceptions are abortions! Let me hie
Where the soft strains of hurdy-gurdies call
And fair Teutonic maidens do invite
To shades of yonder cellar; there to con
From Holleck, Dunglison, and Matsell's sheet,
Chaste figures for my fancy, ere perchance
The printer call for copy.

Two or three poems by the lamented Jayhawk—whose grand description of the Sierras are superior even to the grandeur of the mountains themselves—find a place in this volume. The "Lines to Hank Monk" are exquisitely beautiful, and the sonnets to the "Summit House" and "Strawberry." equal, if not surpass, Coleridge's "Hymn in the Vale of Chamouni." It is to be regretted that an unpleasant altercation respecting the proprietorship of a watch and some money, which occurred on a dark night during the temporary stoppage of the Overland Stage, should have resulted in this promising young man's untimely decease.

A few fine maledictory stanzas addressed to the compiler of Outcroppings, a beautiful idyl entitled "Go and Bag Your Head," and an elegiac poem on the editor of the Enterprise, are among the gems contributed by the Gold Hill News. We are tempted to give a single stanza of the latter:

"Bold chieftain with the vitreous eye,
Old stallion of the land of Storey!
Shall dastard Flop-tods make thee fly,
Or purp-stuff dim thine ancient glory;
No—leave the hurdy-gurdy halls—
The maidens fair that would scuyngle,
Ha! Ha! the foe before thee falls,
Smashed by a paster on the bugle!"

A Friend of the Rejected contributes a fine poem, addressed to the editor of Outcroppings, appareutly modelled after, but far superior to Mr. Emerson's "Brahma," commencing: "If the compiler thinks he's safe." Every one will admire the Doric simplity of the following verse:

"They reckon ill who leave me out,
When me they fly—I clip their wings,
I am that self-same Richard Doubt,
Of whom the Nursery maiden sings."

Equally beautiful is the poem by the editor of the Grass Valley National, entitled "The Pi-Ute." We make room for a few stanzas. The double rhyme in the first verse has an effect of startling beauty:

"Gleaming with silver and alkali,
The barren plains of Nevada lie.
Over them glides with stealthy foot
The crouching form of the bold Pi-Ute.
Three-toed Jim, and one-eyed Nick,
Dusty Jake, and Slippery Dick,
Wah-no-tee, and O-kee chee,
Muck-a-Muck and Su-mar-kee."

Then follows a graphic description of the gathering of the tribes and a beautiful portrayal of morning in the miner's camp:

"And through the valleys rose between
The pleasant hiss of the esculent bean,
And the jay-bird's thrilling song was stopped,
When the luscious flap-jack softly flopped."

But our confined space forbids further extracts. We expect to enrich our columns from time to time with excerpts from this charming work. We may briefly notice two fine poems of the Sacramento Union, entitled "Iuland Domesticity Ignorant of the Cosmopolitan Sea," after A. Pike, and and epic of the "Gold-Hunting Crusade," beginuing with the escapade of the Stevenson Regiment from the sheriff of New York, and ending with the first Vigilance Committee. A local item from the Alta California is admitted by the compiler on the ground that it was not prose. We understand that 1,280 copies are already spoken for—by a singular coincidence, being the exact number of rejected poets. The work is handsomely bound and printed on tinted litmus paper.

[For the Californian.]

CHRISTMAS EVERGREENS.

"When rosemary and bays, the poet's crown,
Are bawl'd in frequent cries throughout the town,
Then judge the festival of Christmas near,
Christmas, the joyous period of the year;
Now with bright holly all the temples strew,
With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe."

THE fast fading away of many ancient and pleasant usages, such as ushering in May Day and Christmas, each with its appropriate garland, together with many other unequivocal proofs, remind us that we live in an unimaginative age, an age in which the progress of science, the ingenuity of inventiou, and the extension and acquirements of commerce are everywhere conspicuous; these, in the very nature of things, must soon totally extinguish not only those few remains of what may be termed practical poetry, that are as yet spared to us, but even the spirit of poetry itself.

Christmas, it is true, is still greeted with verdant trophies, and in many places both houses and churches are decked with holly, box, etc. This custom is said to be of questionable origin, and is thus accounted for: When idolatry prevailed in Great Britain, the great annual feast of Saturn was held in December under an oak, at which ceremony the priests required the worshippers to bring various evergreens to decorate the naked branches of their sylvan temple, and, as the first Christian churches were constructed of boughs, the converts, borrowing the idea from their heathen neighbors, adorned their rude and leafless edifices at Christmas in like manner. But the custom itself is harmless, whatever the origin may be; and persons who have any regard for the manner and observances of other days will view with regret one usage after another swept away, as if one more link were broken in the chain which connects them with the past and all its interesting associations.

"From the first introduction of Christianity," says the Book of Christmas, "the period of the Nativity seems to have been kept as a season of festival, and its observance recognized as a matter of state. The Witenagemots of our Saxon ancestors were held under the solemn sanction and beneficent influence of the time, and the series of high festivities established by the Anglo-Saxon kings appear to have been continued with yearly increasing splendor and multiplied ceremonies under the monarchs of the Norman race. From the Court, the spirit of revelry descended by all its thousands of arteries throughout the universal frame of society, visiting its furthest extremities and most obscure recesses, and everywhere exhibiting its action as by so many pulses upon the traditions, and superstitious, and customs, which were common to all or peculiar to each. The pomp and ceremonial of the royal observance were initiated in the splendid establishments of the more wealthy nobles, and far more faintly reflected from the diminished state of the petty baron. The revelries of the baronial castle found echoes in the hall of the old manorhouse, and these were even again repeated in the tapestried chamber of the county magistrate, or from the sanded parlor of the village inn; merriment was everywhere a matter of public concernment, and the spirit which assembles men in families now, congregated them by districts then." Such, indeed, was the merry Christmas of the olden time. The whole wide country was then filled with rejoicing; in the bannered hall the long tables were spread; on the ancient armor and the antlers of the wild deer, holly, and ivy, and mistletoe were placed; the huge Yule log went roaring up the wide old-fashioned chimneys; and, cold although it might be without, all was warm and comfortable within.

The large wassail-bowl—a load of itself when full—was passed round, and each one, before he drank, stirred up the rich spices with a sprig of rosemary.

"Now stir the fire, and let its glow
Shame the inhospitable snow;
With all that nature yet can show
From winter's wreck,
Laurel, and box, and holly bough,
The casement deck."

Irving feelingly and beautifully describes the Christmas of by-gone times. He says: "Christmas seemed to throw open every door and unlock every heart. It brought the peasant and the peer together, and blended all ranks in one warm generous flow of joy and kindness. The old halls of the castles and manorhouses resounded with the harp and the Christmas carol, and their ample boards groaned with the weight of hospitality. Even the poorest cottage welcomed the festive season with green decorations of bay and holly, the cheerful fire glanced its rays through the lattice, inviting the passenger to raise the latch and join the gossip knot huddled round the hearth, beguiling the long evening with legendary jokes and oft-told tales."

Scott has graphically described these ancient festivities:

"The fire, with well-dried logs supplied,
Went roaring up the chimney wide;
The huge hall-table's oaken face,
Scrubb'd till it shone, the time to grace,
Rose then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lusty brawn
By old blue-coated serving man;
Then the grim boar's-head frown'd on high,
Crested with bays and rosemary.

England was merry England when Old Christmas brought his sports again:
'Twas Christmas broach'd the mightiest ale,
'Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;
A Christmas gambol oft would cheer
The poor woman's heart through half the year."

IRIS.

OPERA MATTERS.—Madame Anna Bishop's new opera season commenced on Saturday evening last with "Norma," at the Academy of Music. Although Madame Bishop's voice is still remarkably powerful, when we consider how long she has been before the public as its favorite, we cannot help thinking that "Norma" was rather trying for the opening night. Of course, it was sung artistically, as is everything sung by this pure cantatrice, but some alterations had to be made in the score to suit her voice. Madame Bishop's upper notes are wonderfully pure and clear; in the middle register of her voice only do we see the effect of age: she was obliged to transpose certain passages in consequence. The opera was pretty fairly rendered by the other characters. Morley has done better justice to himself in other roles than Polhoue, which is not usually a favorite with tenors. Except an occasional disposition to make slight excursions away from the original key, and to return somewhat refreshed by their wanderings, the opera was generally well sung by the company. "Lucrezia Borgia" and "L'Elisir d'Amore," were decided improvements. We are glad that the English version of La Somnambula was given on Friday night; the time at which we go to press renders a notice of the performance impossible, but we believe that the English opera, with its dialogue, taking the place of recitation, will give Madam Bishop some relief to the continual strain upon her voice. She is an admirable actress, and we trust that she will be induced to give other English operas. The audiences have been very good during the season. This afternoon, "L'Elisir d'Amore" as a matinee.

AN EXCELLENT GUIDE BOOK.—Under the title of "State, Territorial, and Ocean Guide Book of the Pacific," Mr. Holdredge furnishes the public with a careful and well-digested collection of tables, statistics, routes, maps, and general information and details regarding the topography, geography, and material resources of the Pacific. The work is very neatly compiled, appears to be perfectly reliable, and makes an invaluable vade mecum. The publisher and compiler deserves credit for his labor.

A LAND slide occurred on Drum street, between Washington and Jackson, where the street had been recent filled in, on Thursday night.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Boston correspondent of the Sacramento Union, under date of November 20th, says: Boston publishers were never more active than at present. Hardly a day passes that doesn't witness the publication of a new book by some of our many book houses. The trade is very lively—even livelier than is usual in the months just preceding the holidays. There are so many books published and in press that deserve a notice that I shall not undertake to speak particularly of any of them. Before I forget it, let me mention that one of your California publications (Outcroppings,) from the press of A. Roman & Co., has a very favorable reception here. The book, I see, was printed in New York, but its contents, among which are several poems of high merit, belong exclusively, I believe, to your State. The tendency to luxuriousness of book-making—to fine paper, beautiful type, rich bindings, and above all to illustrations, is growing every year; and the energies of artists, engravers, and printers, are tasked to the utmost to answer the popular demand. Two or three fine books have been published here this autumn that would do credit to the great English houses. Tennyson seems to be the favorite subject for decoration and illustration, and within a month we have had no less than three—soon to be followed by a fourth—different volumes containing a part or the whole of the Laureate's poems, gotten up in the handsomest and most expensive style. There is an old quarrel about Tennyson's books between two of our publishing houses, which has received a new burning brand this season. Ticknor & Fields have an arrangement with Tennyson, by which they publish all his poems and allow him —what in the absence of an international copright, they are in no wise bound to do, a liberal percentage of their profit from their sale of his books. This arrangement was respected by other publishers until last year, when Tilton & Co., of this city, brought out an edition of Enoch Arden to compete with Ticknor & Fields' edition. The quarrel has smouldered till this fall, when Tilton & Co. announced a complete edition of Tennyson, illustrated, and on Saturday published it. Ticknor & Fields, who have already within the last month published two illustrated volumes of Tennyson's "Gems" and "Idyls of the King," have now in preparation a new volume, which will contain all of Tennyson's poems, and nearly one hundred illustrations. The public have no special interest in this quarrel, of course, except that it affords them five editions of Tennyson at low prices; but the sentiment of the community seems to go against Tilton & Co., and respect the arrangement between Tennyson and Ticknor & Fields.

Now that even the aristocracy of literature admit that the name of Tom Hood "is destined to be a household word with all who speak the English language," we may number the great humorist of his day among the English classics, and receive his "Comic Annual" as a comic Perennial." It is the Quarterly Review which utters the words we have quoted—unornamental words—words that would have brought comfort ineffable to the author's hearthstone, but words withheld till the seal of Death was set upon his fame. Hood's popularity increases with the distance that separates us from the circle in which he flourished. More of his volumes are now sold in a single year, we imagine, than were sold during his whole lifetime. Moxon, of London, has recently published an edition in seven volumes, but without the cuts. The most complete edition, therefore, is that of Putnam, which contains several hundred wood engravings, from the author's designs, and a dozen steel engravings, several of them from the very clever designs of Hoppin. Putnam has also issued "Up the Rhine" (the best thing, in its way, since "Humphrey Clinker") and "Whims and Oddities," in separate volumes, and has in press, for immediate publication, the "Tales, Romances, and Extravaganzas" of the same author, including, among other things, "Mrs. Peck's Pudding," and the marvellously droll "Mrs. Gardiner. A Horticulture Romance." Hood's fame has been much indebted to the pious care of his American editor, and the volumes, newly issued, in beautiful style, from the Riverside Press, will furnish rich stores of fireside amusement for our coming winter nights.

We give the following from the N. Y. Citizen as a specimen of irrepressible and irreverent gossip. It is somewhat singular that the rest of the press are reticent on the subject of the private readings: "Alfred Tennyson has given two private readings, at a guinea a ticket, full dress, and only the invited 'elect' admitted. The experience of Dickens and Thackeray seduced him into speculation. His two entertainments netted him three hundred and eighty odd pounds sterling—about seventeen hundred dollars. He once wrote a poem for George Smith, of the Cornhill Magazine, at a guinea a word. He also indicted an American, who, in reverence for the poet, climbed into Tennyson's garden and broke a twig for a keepsake. The bump of self-esteem with Tennyson makes a separate head under the camera, and his conceit is strong enough to throw a distinct shadow."

The "ultimatum" which the London Times announced as having been sent to France by Mr. Seward, dwindles down in the columns of that same journal to a friendly remonstrance against the despatch of troops to Mexico.

A discovery, most valuable to literature, has been made by a German writer, who has found in the family archives at Baireuth twenty-five authentic letters of Voltaire, addressed to Margravine of Baireuth. The letters are presently to be published (with a commentary, of course) in Prussia and France. In the latter country the great literary expectation was the new volume of poems by Victor Hugo, to have been published the 23d of October. It is called The Songs of the Streets and Woods, and is a book, says some prophetic gossipper, of lively and familiar odes, such as streets and woods might sing, and pitched, not to the grave and lofty note of Juvenal or Dante, but rather to that of Horace and Anacreon.

One of the editors of the Constitutionnel has bought the little place called Mont-Louis, to which Rosseau retired after his quarrel with Madame Lépenay. He wrote "Emile" in this house, and his cabinet and table are still preserved here.

Dr. Livingstone had reached Bombay, intending to make preparations there for his new expedition into Africa, in which he will explore the water-courses of the continent northward from the Zambesi. He expected to set out at the close of last month.

MUSICAL ITEMS.

The Paris correspondent of The Nation says: "The most popular singer in the public places of Paris is a certain Thérese, whose fame has perhaps not yet reached your ears, but with whom it is time you should become acquainted, as she is a "representative woman." In the summer she sings in one of the café concerts of the Champs Elysees in the open air, under the old and dusty elm trees; in winter, in a hall called Cafe de l'Alcazar. Having heard so much of her, I had a few days ago the curiosity to go to the latter place. With great difficulty I pushed my way through a motley crowd, composed of workmen and workwomen, of clerks, of young and elegant gandins (dandies,) and of lorettes; silk gowns were to be seen near blouses; the newest and lightest bonnets near old-fashioned muslin caps; the fragrance of the best Brévas was mixed with the smoke of the clay pipes. A thousand men and women were pressed round small marble tables covered with glasses, and the noise hardly allowed the unfortunate singers, who presented themselves on a small stage at the end of the room, to be heard. Who cared about the fat barytone who sang in a lugubrious tone some air of Donizetti? Who cared even about the comique, whose grimaces had something sad and melancholy, as had his worn-out black coat and his shirt-collars of dubious white? Thérese! Thérese! Now she appears at last, the queen of the Alcazar. After deafening applause comes a great silence, and she begins. She is dressed in the handsomest silk that Lyons can weave, but its very beauty makes her appear uglier; for she is ugly—there is not a good feature in her face, and her anatomy is singularly deficient. She begins: her sharp and thrilling voice fills the great hall; her pronunciation is the most perfect I ever heard—not a word, not a syllable is lost; but, alas! what words and what syllables! Her specialty is to sing indecent songs, and her talent consists in underlining, if I may use the expression, every indecent verse or word; her voice, at times very pure, assumes at others an indescribable coarseness; her gestures, her movements, and her pantomime would make, as the French proverb says, "a dragoon blush." But there are few dragoons in the audience; every allusion, every equivocal thought, is received with tremendous cheers. To me the audience was the real spectacle, and a sad and humiliating one. In old times I had witnessed the same sort of enthusiasm in the same places, but then it always followed a patriotic song. Thérese has taken the place of Beranger. From her songs the patriotic verses have carefully been excluded by the police; for every one of them is examined by the Censure before it can be sung in public The admiration for Therese is not confined to the lower classes. Last winter the queen of the Alcazar was also the queen of the salons. A good and pious duchess, whom I will not name because she regrets what she has done, was the first to invite Thérese to her house, and she received an ovation there at the hands of all that is most noble and refined in Paris. At the house of Madame K——, the wife of one of our richest manufacturers, Therese sang in the presence of M. Brittelle, the préfet de police. After one of her pieces, a gentleman said to her: "You don't sing this at the Alcazar." "No," said she, "the préfet de police would not allow it." At another house, at Madame S——'s after Thérese had gone through her now celebrated répertoire, a charming young woman, who looks like one of Raphael's virgins, conversed with her, and finally said, "Mademoiselle, could you not sing another piece, something—what shall I say?—de plus fort?" "No, madame," was the answer, "I don't know anything de plus fort." Not a bad answer for a Thérese.

Mrs. Jenny Kempton, the contralto, has sailed for Europe, to pursue her musical studies in Paris, Florence, and the other capitals where facilities are afforded for instruction, experience, and practice. The Home Journal says: "Mrs. Kempton has taken a wise step; she is already gifted with a good voice: when her organ has received further cultivation, she may return and claim the admiration of her country people. We wish her a hearty success in her undertaking."

The End of a Gambler.—Among the innumerable anecdotes related of the ruin of persons at play, there is one worth relating, which refers to a Mr. Porter, a gentleman who, in the reign of Queen Anne, possessed one of the best estates in Northumberland, the whole of which he lost at hazard in twelve months. According to the story told of this madman—for we can call him nothing else—when he had just completed the loss of his last acre, at a gambling-house in London, and was proceeding down stairs to throw himself into his carriage to convey him home to his house in town, he resolved upon having one more throw to try to retrieve his losses, and immediately returned to the room where the play was going on. Nerved for the worst that might happen, he insisted that the person he had been playing with should give him one chance of recovery or fight with him. His proposition was this: That his carriage and horses, the trinkets and loose money in his pockets, his town house, plate and furniture—in short, all he had left in the world—should be valued in a lump at a certain sum, and be thrown at a single cast. No persuasion should prevail on him to depart from his purpose. He threw, and lost; then, conducting the winner to the door, he told the coachman there was his master, and marched forth into the dark and dismal streets, without house or home, or any means of support. Thus beggared, he retired to an obscure lodging in a cheap part of the town, subsisting partly on charity, sometimes acting as the marker at a billiard table, and occasionally as a helper in a livery stable. In this miserable condition, with nakedness and famine staring him in the face, exposed to the taunts and insults of those whom he had once supported, he was recognized by an old friend, who gave him ten guineas to purchase necessaries. He expended five in procuring decent apparel; with the remaining five he repaired to a common gaming house, and increased them to fifty; he then adjourned to one of the higher order of houses, sat down with former associates, and won £20,000. Returning the next night, he lost it all, was once more penniless, and after subsisting many years in abject penury, died a beggar in St. Giles.

The most Picturesque Hotel in Switzerland.—A correspondent of the London Times has got into comfortable quarters, if one may judge from the enthusiastic style in which his last letter is written. "The Hotel de la Giessbach (he says) is one of the most picturesque in Switzerland; it is one of those well-conducted establishments which, in some manner, reconcile the ill-used traveller to absence from home. The landlord greets you at the door as you come in; he hovers about you like a guardian angel, invisible yet omnipresent, during all your stay; anticipates all your wants; forestalls all your wishes; and only leaves you to the tender cares of his bevy of daughters—he has, I am told, seven of them—and of other maids, all tidy and blooming and pretty waitresses at board no less than in chamber, mine host himself being the only individual of the male sex in attendance whose foot is allowed to tread the floors within his hospitable threshold. It is as refreshing as Mahomed's paradise. There is not another hotel I know of in all Switzerland in which the heavy tramp; the creaking shoes; the hot breath; the fuss and clumsiness of waiters, are superseded by the ministrations of those cheering parlor-maids. Fresh and lovely they look in their Bernese costume, the most coquettish of all female attire; their black velvet corsets; their fustian jupons; their dangling silver chains; their ribbons and lace streamers; the long golden trinkets at their ears. It is the most modest; the most becoming; the most bewitching costume; and those brilliant dames, at the Paris balls, who think nothing so fascinating as a dress slipping down, far down, below the shoulders, and dragging far behind their heels on the floor, must know little of men or their tastes, or they would sooner take their models from these untutored mountain lasses than follow the law of fashion as set by empresses and mantua-makers."

Brigham Young's organ, the Salt Lake Telegraph, takes a happy view of the moral "situation" of the Saints: "We have occasionally alluded to the fact that crime, corruption, and, in several respects, degeneracy, have been prevailing of late throughout the Union, outside of Utah, of course, for although crime and many species of corruption strenuously endeavor to show themselves in this Territory, yet such is the native virtue of the people, and the strength of public sentiment, that criminal perpetrations are kept pretty well under, rendering Utah a delightful oasis of morality in the midst of the very decided and very general demoralization of the times."

Difference in Funeral Taste.—The French efface as we re-write. "Emile de Girardin and his wife are going to reside for a long time in Italy. Everything is to be sold off which could recall to mind the memory of their lost darling—the hotel, furniture, pictures, horses, carriages, etc. When the Duchess d'Albe died, the Empress had the mansion in the Champs Elysées pulled down. It is a singular French custom. We, on the other hand, think rather of preserving that which could recall the dear memory—not that ours dared be called the more sincere grief."

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO

No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.

In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.)

First and Highest Premium

TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.

In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilxcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.

First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,

AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,

11 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

---

25 PER CENT. SAVED

IS 50 PER CENT. MADE!

PURCHASERS OF

Toys and Fancy Goods, can savn 25 per cent. by buying of

Feldbush & Co.,

307 CALIFORNIA STREET.

THEY ARE NOW RECEIVING their importatinns o

FALL GOODS,

per steamer nnd sailing vessels from all parts of the world.

For sain by the case or dozen. Also 100 cases of assorted Toys. FIELDUSH & CO., 307 California street

RETAIL STORE, 207 Montgomery street, (Russ House Block) oc28-8m

---

TRIAL IS THE BEST AND Surest Test of Merit!

OVER TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND

(200,000)

HAVE BEEN SOLD

Since they were Introduced to Public Notice,

F. L. TILESTON, Agent,

Corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets,

se30 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

R. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

SACRAMENTO AND SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental AND Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco, and Sacramento City.

nc28

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

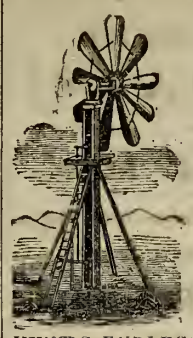
SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11-3m

---

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.



THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

For further Particulars see small circulars.

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,

jy29-3m San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,

Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,

jy29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3,500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - - -	6,500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,

No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.

SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14-3m

OVERSTOCKED! AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steam ships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES.

se23 3m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

se30 3m San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage,
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

J. PEIRCE,

415, 417, and 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the
FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM
FOR
Furniture,
AND THE
FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM
FOR THE
BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
dc16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, je10-§ Corner of Pine and Sansome street.

DRY GOODS!

NEW GOODS FOR THE

HOLIDAYS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

Have received by late Steamer from Europe,

AN IMMENSE STOCK OF

ELEGANT DRESS GOODS

SUITABLE FOR

Holiday Presents!

All of which they will exhibit

AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,

And will offer them all

AT PRICES THAT WILL

DEFY COMPETITION!!

DRESS GOODS.

SILKS, in rich Moire Antique, Brocade, Plaid, Plain and Chine, in all the most Fashionable colors, Black Silk of manufacture of "Bonnet," "Biscuff and Tonson," from $1 00 to $8 00 per yard.

PIM'S super. Irish Poplins and Tnbinets in all colors.

MERINOS, in all the most beautiful colors, at 75c, $1 00, $1 25, $1 50, $1 75 per yard.

EMPRESS CLOTHS and OTTOMAN CLOTHS, in Plain, Striped and Chine, manufactured expressly to order.

MOURNING GOODS.

In Bombazines, Cashmeres, Merinos, Tamise, Poplins, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Silks, Alpacas, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

SHAWLS.

Super. Broche Long and Square Shawls, from $10 to $150, in all colors and new designs.

FINE FRENCH CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS, in Long and Square, from $50 to $400, all in new and elegant designs. Plaid Wool do., in long and square.

CLOAKS.

500 Beautiful stylish Garments direct from Paris, comprising the richest ever brought to this city.

HOSIERY.

For Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, of every description.

LACES AND EMBROIDERIES.

CHANTILLY VEILS, all prices and new designs.

CAMBRAY VEILS, from $2 50 to $5 00.

CHANTILLY LACES, all widths.

ELEGANT CHANTILLY FLOUNCES.

DENTELES de Valencienne et Applique.

APPLIQUE and Point de Venise Collars at $2 00, $2 50, $3 00, $5 00, &c., &c.

POINT D'ALENCON and Point Duchesse Sleeves and Collars.

DENTELLES de Guipre, all widths and patterns.

A Beautiful Assortment of Linen Sets,

PLAIN AND EMBROIDERED.

Embroidery Bands, Edgings, Insertions, Jaconet, and Dimity Bands.

KID GLOVES.

2000 doz. Alexander's best, at $1 25 per pair.

ALSO,

AT REDUCED PRICES,

COTTON SHEETING and SHIRTING, of all the best brands.

4,000 DRESSES De LAINE, best quality, at $3 00 per dress.

10,000 EMPRESS CLOTH DRESSES, from $3 00 to $10 00 per dress.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
de 1m NO. 9. LICK HOUSE.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived of thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION

CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

WE ARE NOT GIVING AWAY!

AT 506 MARKET STREET,

Extending Through to No. 7 Sutter street.

HOGS' SPARE RIBS, 5 cents per pound;
Hogs' Kidneys, 6 cents per pound;
Pigs' Feet, 5 cents per pound;
Lean Meat for Sausages, 7 cents per pound;
Rib Roast, 12½ cents per pound;
Pork Chops, 15 cents per pound;
Pigs' Tenderloins, 15 cents per pound.

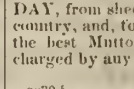
The above are cut from fat grain-fed hogs, killed at our pork-house every day, and are better and cheaper than at any other place in this city.

Mutton! Mutton! Mutton!

From 4 to 7 cents per pound—KILLED EVERY DAY, from sheep fed on our own ranches in the country, and, for that reason, we are enabled to sell the best Mutton for about HALF THE PRICE charged by any other butchers in San Francisco.

WILSON & STEVENS,
se30-§ No. 506 Market St., and No. 7 Sutter St.

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, Etc.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arraugements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
NEW YORK.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE
GREAT REDUCTION
IN
THE PRICE OF COTTON
AT THE EAST,

Kerby, Byrne & Co.,

ARE NOW OFFERING:
5,000 yards 4-4 Preston Muslin, at 32½c.;
5,000 yards 4-3 Blackstone, at 35c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 Lonsdale, at 35c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 White Rock, at 37½c.;
5,000 yards 4-4 Wamsutta, at 40c.

AND
50,000 DOLLARS WORTH
OF
ALL OTHER KINDS OF DOMESTICS,
And Housekeeping Goods in Proportion.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
de9. NO. 7 MONTGOMERY STREET.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

A Timely Warning to the Sick.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusel oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to
jy1 REV. P. I GREY, President

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco.

Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality.

They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland.

Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

TO POOR WRITERS.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Bahbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent pensman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use.

J. C. PELTON,
Superintendent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Bahbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.

JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their ocultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

THE LATEST NEWS!—Haskell & Co. are selling cheaper than the cheapest; 6 pounds Crushed Sugar for $1; 9 pounds Brown Sugar for $1; 3½ pounds Green Coffee, $1; 5 pounds Currants, $1; 4 pounds New Raisins, $1; New Citron, 40 cents per pound; 8 pounds Canary seed for $1; 10 pounds Soda Crackers, $1; 8 pounds Santa Clara Butter Crackers, $1; good Oolong Tea, 75 cents; Japan Teas, 75 to 90 cents, our Mandarin Oolong of the new crop, $1; the best Comet Tea, $1 10, or $1 per pound by the box; Mandarin Mixture (green and black,) 1; at the Mammoth Tea Store, fronting on Market and Sutter streets, below the Market. ☞ Goods delivered promptly. Open Evenings until after the Holidays.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for best the card pictures, and large photographs.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.

August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits.

JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldbush & Co., 307 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

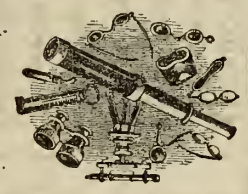
TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and militar at the shortest notice: also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

ELEGANT HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

USEFUL, ORNAMENTAL, AND INSTRUCTIVE.



FINE GOLD SPECTACLES and EYE GLASSES,

SETS OF IVORY

TABLE CUTLERY,

Stereoscopic Views of California;

(OVER ONE THOUSAND NEW VIEWS.)

Richly Mounted Opera Glasses

For sale by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

317 and 319 Montgomery street.

CATALOGUES with Price List, FREE. de9 1m

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. dc3-3m

---

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY. J. P. BOGARDUS. WM. J. BINGHAM.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN,

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON SATURDAY, - - - - JANUARY 6, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and to the others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

se23cdc16 tf J. WHITNEY, JR., President.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days.....2
Twelve Days.....3
Twenty Days.....1
Thirty Days.....5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16-3m San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

DEC. 30, - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

MONDAY, JANUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON MONDAY, - - - - JANUARY 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published (oc28) by M. GRAY, 417 Clay street.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mh25-3m

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26-1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 1m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

GRAND BALL.

THE SECOND ANNUAL

Ball of the Fire Department,

Will be given at

UNION HALL,

ON THURSDAY EVENING, DEC. 28.

No care or expense will be spared to make it the grandest and most fashionable Ball of the season.

MANAGERS.

Governor F F Low,	Hon Ogden Hoffman,
Maj-Gen H. W. Halleck,	" Milton S Latham,
" I McDowell,	" S H Dwinelle,
" J F Miller,	" Thos B Shannon,
Col R C Drum,	" Frank Soule,
Com Selim Woodworth,	" R F Perkins,
Maj-Gen L H Allen,	" Wm J Shaw
Chas de Cazotte,	R H Sinton,
Louis McLane,	Wm. Alvord,
J Whitney, Jr,	J H Baird,
I W Raymond,	Wm F Babcock,
Chas B Polhemus,	Henry Bigelow,
Eugene L Sullivan,	A Austin,
J Mora Moss,	S C Hastings,
R B Swain,	Camilo Martin,
E W Burr,	Maj A D Grimwood,
S P Dewey,	Abel Guy,
James Lick,	Wm B Johnston,
Nicholas Larco,	Geo W Gibbs,
Leland Stanford,	Hall McAllister,
Joseph P Hodge,	Henry B Platt,
B F Lowe,	M Livingston,
James Bowman,	Samuel M Wilson,
D O Mills,	Francisco Sanjurjo,
Lafayette Maynard,	Lewis Leland,
F L A Pioche,	Louis Sceller,
Jos G Eastland,	Alphens Bull,
Ira P Rankin,	John S Henning,
Henry Carlton, Jr,	A Seligman,
John B Felton,	Michael Skelly,
Samuel Brannan,	A Coleman,
R H Magill,	Wm H Tillingbast,
Geo C Boardman,	Joseph Austin,
David Scannell,	John H Gardiner,
R B Woodward,	Wm P Taaffe,
O Livermore,	W H L Barnes,
A L Tubbs,	Henry Voorman,
Marcus D Boruck,	Dr A J Bowie,
W Lane Booker,	Edward S Spear,
Eugene Casserly,	Wm. McKibben,
Oliver Eldridge,	Michael Castle,
H M Newhall,	John Parrott,
Joseph A Donohoe,	Wm C Talbot,
Wm C Ralston,	Erwin Davis,
Wm M Lent,	Fred'k MacCrellish,
James Otis,	H H Haight,
R. J. Vanderwater,	Maj John Stratman,
Caleb T Fay,	James H Cutter,
Martin R Roberts,	Henry Barriolhet,
James R Bolton,	John A. McGlynn,
W E Barron,	W W Haney,
S R Harris,	John J Kelly,
Morris Speyer,	Chas. R Peters,
Alfred Barstow,	Claus Spreckles,
R C Ferguson,	David Stern,
Geo H Howard,	G J Byrne,
Elie Lazard,	F W Macondray,
Edward J. Pringle,	John O Earl,
John H Saunders,	Emanuel Berri,
Jos W Winans,	Fred'k Billings,
James Bell,	E T Pease,
E W Leonard,	Louis Cohn,
S. J. Hensley,	Thos Tobin,
Geo B Gammans,	H Heynemun,
S H Parker,	Horace W. Carpenter,
Col Wm Harney,	M M Henston,
A H Titcomb,	Wm G Badger,
M C Hillyer,	Louis Schloss,
Frank McCoppin,	Henry G Langley,
John Hewston, Jr,	A J Houghtaling,
J C L. Wadsworth,	W W Stow,
Joseph Pierce,	W B Farwell,
C F Mebius,	John T Doyle,
Chas Walcott Brooks,	Warren R Payne,
Albert Miller,	Dr Joseph Haine,
J G Kittie,	Robert Cushing,
Jonathan Hunt,	Peter Donahue,
John Middleton,	James L Fink,
C Adolphe Low,	T McCarthy.

☞ The number of Tickets to be sold is limited; they are not transferable, and none will be sold at the door. Ladies' invitations can be procured, free of charge, on application.

TICKETS (including Supper) TEN DOLLARS.

LADIES, ATTENTION!

MRS. READ'S
NEW IMPROVED
Skirt Supporters and Chest
EXPANDERS,

Also, GENTLEMEN'S BRACES, with Suspenders attached; ABDOMINAL SUPPORTERS, BANDAGES, BUSTS, etc

NO. 109 MONTGOMERY STREET,
UP STAIRS, ROOMS 3 AND 4.

Physicians are respectfully invited to call and examine her articles.
All orders promptly attended to. my27-1f

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca
jc30-3m

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER.

Go and see the Natural Gifted Astrologer, Prof. Cohen, 530 California street. He only can give you true information as to the Past, Present and Future; on Business Affairs, Law Suits, Matrimony, Love, Absent Friends, Sickness, etc. He tells the events of your whole life, and how to avoid trouble.

A large number of people have been benefited by his knowledge. As an evidence of his reputation, he has received upwards of 18,000 consultations here since his residence of five years in San Francisco.

N B.—When consultation is had it will not be necessary to give the age. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart.

☞ Sickness will be discovered and cured through his science, only known by himself. se16-3m.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - $10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - - 11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - - 2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, - $75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

FIRE, MARINE, LIFE, AND ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE.

We would respectfully call the attention of property owners to the increased facilities for Insurance which we are now prepared to offer, surpassing any agency in the world.

MARINE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Capital, - - - $7,000,000

Home Insurance Co., of N. Y., assets	-	-	$4,000,000
Security do	do do	- -	2,000,000
Phenix do	do do	- -	1,000,000

War Risks and partial loss covered on the most favorable terms. Liberal rebates paid parties bringing business to this office. All losses paid in gold coin without any deduction.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Aggregate Assets, - - - $10,000,000

Home Insurance Co., N. Y.	Washington Ins. Co., N. Y.
Phenix do	do	Security do	do
Arctic do	do	Hartford Fire do	do

LIFE INSURANCE.

Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. of Hartford :
Assets nearly - - - - - - - $8,000,000
Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States : Assets - - - - - - - $1,000,000

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

New York Accident Insurance Company :
Capital - - - - - - $250,000

In the Fire Department we issue participation policies on all hazardous and not hazardous property, entitling the assured to 60 per cent. in the profits of the company, thereby lessening their premiums at least 30 per cent.

In the Life Department, the companies we represent are the best and cheapest in the world. Manuals descriptive of the various plans issued gratis to the public. No charge for physicians' examinations.

Agents in all the principal towns on this coast.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
au29 GENERAL AGENTS.

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14 3m

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir : I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - . - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16 3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co., PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT AMERICAN PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800

PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $100 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14.400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11 3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says : "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

PISCO !

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC ;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac ;
STEAMBOAT GIN ;
OLD TOM GIN ;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
a28 44 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and For the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting :

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting : Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled.

H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.

no11 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant : You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County ; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days ; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11 3m

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS : That I, BRIDGET STANNAH, wife of WILLIAM STANNAH, intend to make application to the Twelfth District Court of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on the 23d day of December, A. D. 1865, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, at the court room of said Court, in said city and county, for an order of said Court permitting her to carry on business in her own name and on her own account—the nature of the business to be carried on by virtue of such order being that of keeping a boarding and lodging house, and purchasing lots and houses to be used and occupied in that business, and erecting houses therefor. That for this purpose I am desirous of availing myself of the benefit of An Act to authorize married women to transact business in their own name as sole traders, approved April 12th, 1852, and of the acts amendatory thereof.

BRIDGET STANNAH.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for petitioner—Office, 636 Clay street. nov25-5t

---

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,

For Wholesale and Retail Trade,

ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,

AT QUINCY HALL,

NOS. 545, 547, 549,

Washington Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

se30-3m

HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Building Fund.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOAD OF TRUSTEES of the Mercantile Library Association, held October 10th, 1865, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the Trustees form themselves into a Committee of the Whole, to obtain Life Memberships and Donations, with a view of purchasing a lot and erecting a building thereon for the use of the Association.

The payment of one hundred dollars in gold coin secures a Life Membership, and it is hoped that the sum of twenty thousand dollars may be subscribed in this way alone. No subscriptions are binding unless the above sum shall be raised by Life Memberships and Donations before February 1, 1866. Subscription books may be found at the Library, or with any of the following members of the

BOARD OF TRUSTEES :

G. W. Belt.....President
*C. Wolcott Brooks.....Vice President
H. S Homans.....Corresponding Secretary
David Wilder.....Recording Secretary
John G. Clark.....Treasurer

J. H Wildes,	A. M. Ebbetts,
J. W. Cox,	F. D. Kellogg,
A. T. Green,	Chas. R. Bond,
Geo. Hewston, M. D.,	*Daniel Rogers,
F. L. Castle.

*On leave of absence. oc21-tf

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11 6m San Francisco.

ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
no18-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & C
my28 624 Clay stree San

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,

SATURDAY, DEC. 23d,

FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,

AT HALF PRICES,

Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

THE SERF;

OR, LOVE LEVELS ALL!

Now being performed at Wallack's Theatre, New York; with entirely New Scenery, Costumes and Properties, and Original Music.

This Evening, December 23d,

G. C. BONIFACE, HARRY JACKSON,
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,
And Every Member of the Popular Company,

Will appear in the Drama entitled

RIP VAN WINKLE!

The Manager has effected an engagement with the celebrated Tragic Actress,

Miss Charlotte Crampton,

Who will make her first appearance on

MONDAY NIGHT, DEC. 25TH,

IN

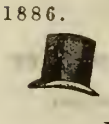
LUCRETIA BORGIA!

☞ WANTED IMMEDIATELY: 50 Respectable Young Ladies. Apply at the Theatre between 2 and 4 P. M.

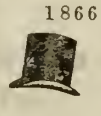
Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10

Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock

1866. 1866. 1866.



AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.



LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTABLISHMENT at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

TOYS, REGARDLESS OF COST!

KOHLER SELLING OFF!

THE ENDLESS VARIETY OF

Toys and Fancy Articles,

IN KOHLER'S

Washington Street Store,

(NO. 620,)

MUST BE SOLD AT ANY PRICE,

BETWEEN THIS AND CHRISTMAS, AND

THE BUSINESS CLOSED UP!

TO RENT—The Store now occupied by

A. KOHLER.

de2 4t

CHILION BEACH

INVITES ATTENTION TO HIS LARGE AND CHOICE ASSORTMENT OF

BOOKS AND STATIONERY,

Suitable for

HOLIDAY PRESENTS!

BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS, JUVENILES,
ILLUSTRATED AND GIFT BOOKS,

In great variety.

BEACH'S BOOK-STORE,
No. 34 Montgomery street,
Opposite the Lick House.

de16-2t

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

Plac street, near Montgomery.

Grand Masquerade Ball!

BY THE

ALEMANNIA,

AT MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

SATURDAY EVENING, JAN. 13, 1866.

On which occesion the parquette will be floored over level with the stage, and the whole covered with canvas. Prizes will be given to the best Lady and Gentlemen Masks, to be awarded by a committee selected from the audience.

A splendid band of music has been engaged, and no expense will be spared to make this the most brilliant affair of the season. Tickets to be had of the committee:

L. Hecht, Jr., 417 Sacramento street.
L. Schwarzschild, 320 Battery street.
A. Wangenheim, S. E. cor. California and Sansome.
C. Colman, S. W. corner Washington & Montgomery. S. H. Stern. de23-4t

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES

OF

Standard Books,

ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on

Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of

ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!

CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE

Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

JUST RECEIVED,

Per last Steamer, a magnificent collection of

Fancy Glove and Odor Boxes,
Fine Fans, Opera Glasses,
Novelties in Back Combs,
Ornamental Cigar Stands,
Writing Desks, Albums,

DRESSING CASES, PARIS JEWELRY,

REAL LACE COLLARS, SLEEVES AND HANDKERCHIEFS,

REAL CHANTILLY AND POINT BARBES, VEILS, VALENCIENNE COLLARS, HANDKERCHIEFS, Etc.

Fashionable Cloaks and Shawls

Received by every Steamer from New York. Also,

CLOAKS AND LADIES' UNDERGARMENTS

MADE TO ORDER,

AT S. ROSENBLATT'S

PALACE OF FASHION,

123 AND 125 MONTGOMERY STREET,

de2 Opposite Occidental Hotel.

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have purchased the Eating House known as "Richards'" Restaurant, situate on Clay street, one door below Montgomery. The restaurant will be repaired and refitted throughout, and will be opened to the public on Wednesday morning, Dec. 27th.

C. H. BRICKWEDEL,
de23 H. F. HEGELER.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9 3m 305 Montgomery street.

A MAGNIFICENT CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

THE SUPERB NATIONAL PICTURE, by Darley, of WASHINGTON IRVING AND HIS FRIENDS. Prices: Print, $15; Proof, $30; Artist's Proof, $50; or framed complete—Print, $20; Proof, $40; Artist's Proof, $100. This is NOT the cheap Lithograph called "Great Authors."

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

JUVENILE BOOKS, Picture Books, Primers, Sunday School Books, Books for Prizes, Cloth Picture Books, Games and Blocks for Children, Puzzles, Card Pictures, Fairy Albums, Books for Girls, Books for Amusements, Books for Boys.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

CHRISTMAS STATIONERY.

DESKS, PORTFOLIOS, Chess, Backgammon, Dominoes, Color Boxes, Cabinets, Scrap Books, Diaries 1866, Inkstands, Pocket Knives, Pencil Cases, Pocket Books, Papier Mache Goods.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS.

FIVE HUNDRED STYLES at the lowest prices.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

GIFT BOOKS.

AN ENDLESS VARIETY, at very low prices.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

FINE BOOKS FROM LONDON.

POETRY, SCIENCE and GENERAL LITERATURE, in elegant bindings, with Photographic Illustrations, and plain and colored steel engravings.

H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

BLOOD PURIFIER.

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

The best Blood Purifier yet known. It expels all Mercurial and Constitutional Diseases, and gives Health and Strength.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
no19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

GRAND CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL OF THE Trinity Mission Sunday School

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL.

THE TRINITY MISSION SUNDAY SCHOOL will hold their

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL,

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL, SATURDAY EVENING, December 23d.

The Children of the

PROTESTANT ORPHAN ASYLUM

Have accepted an invitation, and will unite with us on that occasion.

A Christmas Tree

Will be prepared expressly for them. Friends wishing to contribute to the ORPHANS' TREE, can do so by sending to the Hall on the day of the Festival, or at any time previous to the Superintendent of the Trinity Mission School.

The Exercises of the evening will consist of

SPEAKING AND SINGING,

AND

A VISIT FROM SANTA CLAUS!

The Hall will be splendidly decorated for this occasion by Thomas Blair, Esq.

A FULL BAND OF MUSIC

Will be in attendance. The Hall will be thrown open at four o'clock P. M., at which time the Band will be present. Exercises of the evening will commence at

EIGHT O'CLOCK PRECISELY.

SINGLE TICKETS, - - ONE DOLLAR.

To be had at the Hall during the day and evening of the Festival, and at all the principal Bookstores of the city.

de16 2t WM. G. BADGER, Superintendent.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband · Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Aunie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Aunie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. By JAMES E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. Int. rev. stamp. } By Jas. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS,
de23 3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

HOLIDAY GOODS, AND WHERE TO BUY THEM.

BOOKS.

H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

CLOTHING.

H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
Oak Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.

FURNITURE.

Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIQUORS.

V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

SEWING MACHINES.

The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 5. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 30, 1865. TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, December 30th, 1865.

POOR, tottering old December... limping to your grave in a dilapidated sort of a way and with never a crutch to help you along... how I do pity you!

I'd pity you still more if you'd wear a white cap and blow the snuff from off your chin, for all that you've got rheum in your eyes and rheumatism in your back, and are generally dirty and disagreeable.

At present, however, your rheum is better than your company... and either is bad enough. You are not even a respectable looking grandmother. Get you gone, for guests are coming, and we must tidy up for them a bit.

To-morrow is the threshold of the year, and January stands scraping his feet on the other side. No need for him to meet your wrinkled old face at the door.

But still December lingers. Her footsteps fall no faster on the floor for my abuse, nor does January hurry his coming for all my throwing wide the door to save him a pull at the bell.

O Time, Time! If there indeed were such a thing as taking you by the forelock, you'd travel mighty fast at times and stand stock still at others, if I had hold of you... or the scalp would come off.

By this time all know what they had in their stockings.

If I said I had holes in mine, perhaps you would infer that I hadn't a darned thing.

There you'd be wrong... as persons are very apt to be when they draw hasty inferences and count every word said or written in jest as meant in earnest.

The truth is I got much more than I expected. The truth would scarcely be complete if I did not add... "much more than I deserved."

Are we to set it down as one of the natural laws that the less we give the more we get? I am afraid in view of facts we cannot do otherwise. Last Christmas I was lavish... that is to say, for one of limited income and unlimited aspirations, I was extravagant. I gave much and got nothing.

This year I was actually so busy, that I would scarcely have had time to run out and buy presents... even had I anything to buy them with. And so many things have come to my door that I am rather afraid that Santa Claus has made a misdeal... that I have got some one else's hand, if the expression may be allowed me.

It is really very curious how things go in this world of ours. We reap where we do not sow, and very seldom reap where we do. One does not like to confess to such a creed, but I think the general experience will bear me out when I say that an ungrateful return may be counted on in almost all instances where we step outside the beaten path of our lives for the purpose of doing others good.

The reason of this is plain, if we look human nature squarely in the face, and set aside all the sentimentalities which deluge the world and mistily envelop it like a veil.

Very few minds are generous enough to confess to an obligation... or rather very few minds are generous enough to confess to an obligation without feeling themselves lowered in their own estimation by the confession.

At the very moment that you are giving a beggar a quarter, the chances are that he is nervously clutching his crutch and would like to rap you over the head with it... simply because he thinks it becomes necessary to thank you.

He is cursing in his own heart because you are not standing there on the corner with a crutch under your elbow while he is dropping two bits into your hat.

It is all very well to say that this is a misanthropic view of human nature, but I tell you it is a true one. I have proved it by actual experiment. Here, in this city, I can point out to you persons whom I have fed... yes, fed, and who developed themselves into bitter enemies the moment an occasion occurred.

If you incline to doubt that proof... do as I have done. Take the first beggar you meet... when he asks you for a bit for God's sake, drop a dollar into his hat or his hand... whichever is the cleanest... for Philosophy's.

(You see I do not want the experiment to be a very expensive one.)

And then spring the question on him, "That is more than you expected, is it not?"

"Ah yes, God bless ye."

"If I stood on the corner in your place you would feel quite as much satisfaction in giving me a dollar as I do in giving you one, would you not?"

"Sure, God bless ye."

"And you sometimes think you would like to change places, do you not—eh?"

(For he hesitates.)

"S-sometimes, God bless ye."

"Now tell me the truth, and perhaps you'll get another dollar. Do you not sometimes feel that a bit is nothing for a well-dressed person to give you, and that he might just as well give you more? And that while he is dressing well and spending his money on every side you have to stand here like a dog, begging for crumbs? And that you would like to give one of these well-dressed fellows a lesson in the pleasantness of your position?

(Your voice has become sympathetic, and he thinks you are his advocate and ally.)

"Ah, yes, your honor, God bless ye."

"Then you dirty, lazy dog, why the devil didn't you go to work and earn money when you were able to; and why don't you now keep yourself clean and decent when water doesn't cost anything, and soap and sand can be had for the asking?"

(Turning on your heel and leaving him.)

A faint prayer comes borne upon the breeze... but it is not for your salvation. And... pardon me... if familiar enough with the Oriental languages to know that in some of them prayers as well as everything else are to be read backwards, you would have known all along that every one of that beggar's G-d b—s yous (as well use blanks in one case as in the other) should have been construed into an out-and-out G-d d—n you.

Now-a-days, when I break over my rule and do man or woman a kindness, I beg of them not to construe it into a favor... not to consider that they owe me anything in return... but simply to avoid injuring me if it come in their power to do so, just as they might if they did not know me, and had no reason for bearing ill-will towards me.

I always take particular care to explain: "This is done for my pleasure... not for yours. You are not a party in the transaction at all. It someway happens that my pleasure in this one instance lies in pleasing you... and there let it end. I am selfish... wholly and utterly selfish... in this matter. I deserve no thanks... ask no thanks... and will be abundantly content if you never do me an injury."

And you would all be surprised if you knew how much happier I am under these circumstances, and how much better I get along.

In the first place, on finding myself in a position where I had to know and meet every one, I adopted the universal pleasing policy... afterwards I adopted an exclusive one. Neither answered. Now, in my mature days... the veal of my moral and material nature having slowly reddened, and fibred, and hardened into beef... I invariably start in to please myself. And the result is it works to a charm... and I have that happiness and pleasure of mind which passeth all understanding.

If it did not pass the understanding of most people, it wouldn't be worth much.

Perhaps I drop in at the back of the dress circle of a theatre. Some unmannerly, outlandish-looking cub, whom I know only by sight, begins to criticise my manner of speech, my manner of dress, or my manner of punctuation... ending up by calling me by my surname, while he asks me for the loan of my opera glass... alluding to the glass as "them."

The chances are even, whether he gets "them" in his hand or over his head. He runs those chances, and, as I slowly deliberate in my mind which way to deliver "them glasses," he remains in blissful ignorance of what is going on.

Receiving "them" either way he couldn't complain much.

But, to cut a long digression short, I am very much provoked with Dickens for introducing his "Simon Wegg" into Our Mutual Friend. For it is a character I have long known and studied, and of which I intended one day to avail myself.

My chief comfort in the volume lies in "Miss Jennie Wren," who so often throws herself back in her chair with: "I know your tricks, and I know your manners."

Right here an explanation... it has been asked, or you would not have it.

I was asked the other day, why I wrote so much about myself... and what the secret was that every one seemed interested in it.

I do not write about myself. On the contrary, I always create a young man with whom I endeavor to identify myself. Taking all of my acquaintance, I throw them into one common mortar... I pulverize them together, and from the compound attempt to mould a lay figure that can be thrust forward upon the world as a "young man."

So far my successes have been greater than my failures. The lay figure has been accepted eight times in ten, and young men have come to me and said that they recognized themselves... and me... in it.

I never recognize myself in what I write, and hence I never feel self-convicted of egotism, or whatever you choose to call it. I simply see myself standing on one side, holding up a glass to my fellows... and it amuses me much to see the strange duck and dive occasionally, as one, looking to see my reflection in the glass, starts at recognizing his own.

When we are all a little older... when I have solved all the questions that perplex and trouble me... look to see a book that shall make a stir in both hemispheres... one which shall lay the human heart bare... in which a young man does not dodge an experience because it may have been his own, nor throw a veil over it because it has been that of his best friend or worst enemy.

Isn't it queer how Christmas gifts are distributed? We generally get either something we do not want or more of something of which we already have too much.

Christmas is very apt to bring the poor man's wife a baby and the rich one's a fur cape. The rich man's wife needs nothing to keep her warm, but would give all the furs that ever were tippeted to feel the warm clasp of tiny arms around her neck. The poor man's wife stumbles over a cradle in every corner, and would willingly trade off a small portion of the stock for a warm cloak or shawl.

Some Christmas day I expect to find a tan-yard or a church in my stocking.. .or an elephant at my door.

Giving is by no means guided, in the majority of cases, by taste. To my fancy the gilt should be valuable for its rarity, the beauty of the workmanship, or for anything else rather than the material of which it is composed. Ponderous gold chains and bracelets and such things are not graceful gifts, for one might as well offer so many broad twenties to a friend ... .and such an offer would of course be extremely painful to a sensitive heart.

I do not think I could survive the infliction.

A book, a bit of ribbon, or, "perchance, a simple flower" can interpret the language of affection better than diamonds and great red rubies and white staring jewels.

At least this was what I remarked on Christmas morning when I presented Sweetbrier with one of those fresh bunches of violets, which may be procured in the market three for two bits. And I was pained to see, by the rather vacant and wandering expression of her eye, that she didn't see it.

But, while I think of it... and oddly enough the thought is suggested at just this moment... I wish to thank my "sincere friend" Anonyma, for what she sent me. Bless her heart, kind words and wishes are sometimes better even than violets. But the legend inscribed in one corner of the scroll puzzled me. Before next Christmas comes round, Anonyma will perhaps explain.

What would "C——" like for New Years?

For New Year's is pounding away at the door, and I've half a mind to get up and let him in. But, to tell the truth, I'm getting tired of holidays. Stores are shut up, and every one feels under such a necessity of being comfortable and jolly, that they appear awkward and constrained. And I hate the prospect of calls. If born with a call, I scarce think it could have been a New Year's call; and, on the whole, I think I'll go over the Bay, and try and put in a good day's duck shooting on the coming holiday, wind and weather permitting.

INIGO.

JOHN TWISTER'S CALIFORNIA NUGGET.

I GENERALLY take up my hunting quarters at the White Hart at Bastock. Do not be alarmed; I am not going to bore you with a story of a run, or the praise of my horses (good as they are,) for I know what it is to listen to men who fancy their favorite sport is the only one that is worth following.

The White Hart stands at the lower end of Bastock, at the foot of a gentle rise, leading to the turnpike. In the front of the inn is a row of low posts and chains, upon which I usually sit when the weather is fine, and smoke my matutinal cigar. The main street forms itself into a letter Y, one branch leading to the quiet old church, and the other to the busy market-place.

I was at my accustomed place one glorious April morning, and, although mentally abusing the blessed sun for destroying all chance of a good scenting-day, I could not be insensible to the tranquillizing influence of the balmy air and cheerful light as it played about the roofs and projecting gables of the quiet homes of Bastock. So peaceful was the time that it was difficult to imagine that human passions ever disturbed the indwellers of the place, or that other than Peace and Goodwill were the inmates. I had not then heard the story of Peter Lackpenny, a miserly old hunks, upon whom I had wasted a large amount of sympathy as I had seen him shuffling about Bastock in a gown of gray duffel, patched and dirty enough for a scarecrow. Peter had passed his days in Bastock, and had fomented all the quarrels in that otherwise peaceful place—at least so it was said at the White Hart. He belonged to one of the professions—I will not say which, because it may be supposed I give way to popular prejudice; but it was neither physic nor divinity; and, though he professed to have made nothing by his amiable pursuit, it turned out he had saved nearly £5000, which, by great retributive justice, was ultimately the death of him. Many years ago Peter had a sister who had married unfortunately, so far as worldly prosperity was concerned; but her troubles were soon over, as she died three years after her marriage, leaving a boy and a tender-hearted husband behind her, the latter of whom, it was said, so pined after his wife that he died too, and the care of the child, Johnny Twister, devolved upon his maternal uncle, Peter Lackpenny; and precious care he took of his nephew! He sent him to school, it is true, because some learning was necessary to enable the boy to get his own living. He clothed him, but his costume was very much after that of the ancient Britons, exhibiting rather more flesh than broadcloth, and he fed him, it was supposed, because Johnny continued to exist.

True, there were many soft-hearted people who fancied that they saw hunger always written in the boy's face, and kindly gave him stray lumps of pudding and odd slices of bread and butter; and no one recollects the lad refusing either. The only thing of an educational character of which Peter seems to have been prodigal was that preparation from the tree of knowledge called the rod, and of that little Johnny was known to have considerably more than was thought to be good for him. Morning, noon, and night was he undergoing "discipline," as Peter called it; and yet, strange to say, Johnny Twister grew up the greatest liar and ne'er do-weel in Bastock. Peter had whipped all the original Adam out of him, and driven in an evil spirit, for not a week passed as the lad grew up but some small roguery or dishonorable action was proved against him. At last matters became so bad that Peter turned his nephew out of door, declaring that he was a disgrace to his family, and the sooner he starved or drowned himself the better for Johnny and the county. There were some people weak enough to think that Peter was wrong—that, as he had sown the harvest, he ought to reap it, although it were only a crop of thistles. Peter was not ass enough for that, however; but, foreseeing that Johnny only promised labor in vain, left him to the winds of heaven. Johnny hung about Bastock for some time during the summer, lolling against sunny walls, or sleeping under the shady sides of them all day, and disappearing no one knew where at nightfall. How he lived was partly a mystery, but he really seemed to be getting flesh, when it came to be whispered about that numerous pieces of cold bacon and other viands were disappearing nightly in a very supernatural manner from the larders of Bastock. By one consent the finger of suspicion was pointed at Johnny Twister; and an inhuman old grocer, who had lost half a sucking-pig, had the cruelty to tell him so. Poor Johnny took this information so much to heart that he left his native village the same night, and I believe it was generally understood at the time that nobody was anxious for his return. But he did return; and I saw him on the evening of the very April morning to which I have referred.

I was at my accustomed seat, when a low, rakish-looking fellow, mounted on an unmistakable screw, rode up to the White Hart. It was not the first hostel he had visited in his ride—that was evident as his bleared eye and disordered dress gave indications of potations pottle deep. If his appearance had not betrayed his condition, the tipsy voice with which he summoned my respected host, Markwell, would have sufficiently attested it.

"Hollo, Markwell, old fell-ow!" he bawled out, so that all Bastock might have heard him had they been so minded. "Markwell, old fell-ow, where are you?"

The summons was obeyed, and I saw instantly that mine host recognized his visitor with surprise and displeasure.

"What, don't you know me, old cock?" said the new-comer. "Ring the ostler's bell, and we'll have a glass of brandy-and-water, and I'll let you know who I am." He prepared to dismount.

"You had better keep where you are," said Markwell, to my utter astonishment, "for I know you well enough. You had better ride on, for you get nothing in my house, Mr. Tw'ster, or anywhere else in Bastock, if I'm not much mistaken."

The tipsy man's face became almost black with passion, and the oaths he uttered were of such tremendous import that I tr mbled to hear them, and I have heard some swearing in my time. It was clear that Markwell was not to be frightened, and Mr. Twister, having exhausted himself, drove his spurs into the poor brute which carried him, and rode off shouting and gesticulating like a demon.

"You have lost a pleasant customer," said I. "Who is he?"

"His name is John Twister, sir," replied Markwell, "the nephew of the old man whose mean appearance attracted your attention the last season you were here. The old man died a year ago last January.

Mine host told me as much of Peter Lackpenny's history as I have narrated to you, and then went on with the subsequent adventures of Mr. John Twister.

Some three or four years after the sudden disappearance from Bastock of that worthy young gentleman, the gold discoveries in California were made known to Europe, and the effect upon the enterprising population of England is remembered by every one. Old Lackpenny heard of this new Eldorado, and the conviction that age had deprived him of the power of profiting by those discoveries nearly drove him out of his wits. He would talk of nothing but nuggets, placers, and gold-dust, until he fairly cried at the golden visions which he was too old to realize. It seemed, however, that Fortune had resolved that he should share in her golden favors, and by means the least anticipated by any one in Bastock. One morning old Lackpenny was surprised at receiving a letter bearing the London postmark, and in the handwriting of his disreputable nephew, John Twister. Never was missive more ungraciously received. It was tossed contemptuously upon the table unopened, and was railed at as containing another beggar's petition to be read and thrown into the fire, and narrowly escaped that late without the preliminary perusal. A storm, however, kept Lackpenny within doors, and more from listlessness than curiosity he broke the envelope. The letter, which at first he scarcely read with attention, suddenly appeared to interest him greatly. His face became flushed, and his keen, gray eyes were extended and fixed intently upon the paper in his hand. And no wonder, for the statement contained was of gold; gold in such abundance that even Peter's covetousness had hardly extended beyond it. He could scarcely believe his eyes, but there was the fact vouched for by an extract from a California newspaper. And John Twister, his scapegrace, abandoned nephew, had become a rich man; and not only had forgiven Peter all the past, but invited him to London to share some way—John did not say how—in the good fortune which had befallen him. The letter said, and the cutting from the newspaper confirmed it, that four adventurers at Angels' diggings had discovered a monster nugget of gold, valued at five thousand pounds. The lucky finders had proceeded to England with their treasure, and John Twister's letter told to his delighted uncle of their safe arrival, and that he (Johnny) was one. He requested his uncle to hasten on the receipt of the letter to London, vaguely hinting that there was business to be done by which the old man might be advantaged. In a minute Peter was decided; he saw not the rain streaming down the window-panes, neither heard he the wind roaring in his smokeless chimney, but, taking from a secret drawer in an old bureau a large, rusty, leather pocketbook, and without which he never went far from home, he wrapped himself in a faded blue camlet cloak, which had seen many years' service, and made the best of his way to the railroad. The old cloak let in the rain through its timeworn seams, and Peter took his place in a third-class carriage, shivering with cold, but rendered quite insensible to it by the mental exercise of building a golden castle, the foundation of which was Johnny Twister's letter. Arrived in London, he found his now excellent nephew waiting to receive him; but, had that worthy young man not acknowledged the uncle, Peter would scarcely have recognized Johnny. The diggings, perhaps, had done their work, and left traces on the nephew's face quite as marked as a long course of dissipation would have done. Peter generously saw in them the records only of hard fare, patient toil, and anxious watchings; and for the first time for five-and-twenty years he folded his sister's son to his bosom. Our space will not allow us to linger over this touching reconcilation, but we will at once introduce Peter to the other fortunate adventurers of California. They were men of the same stamp as John Twister, but were dressed in the red shirts and long water-boots which they had worn at the diggings. Peter received a hearty welcome, enhanced by a plain but plentiful repast which was awaiting his arrival. Some capital whiskey punch having been brewed by Johnny, the conversation became free and friendly, and it required but little circumlocution on Johnny's part to obtain the consent of his partners to show their treasure to the uncle, of whom they had heard him speak so frequently when the world lay, as it were, between them. One of the men locked the door, and, taking a chair, placed his back against the keyhole. The others, with some difficulty, dragged from beneath the bed a battered portmanteau, which, being unlocked and unstrapped, was opened, and displayed to the gaze of the gold-adoring Peter the monster nugget in all its auriferous beauty. Peter clasped his hands in wonder, and then gently stroked the insensate metal as though it were sensible of his caress. He tried to lift it, but his strength was not equal to the task; and he had never believed, until that moment, that there was any quantity of gold he could not have carried.

And then he listened, with mouth agape, to the wondrous story of the finding of the monster nugget. How the four diggers had worked and worked, until they almost despaired, when Johnny hit upon this "reef of gold;" how they released it from its native soil, and wrapped it in an old sugar-bag, and placed it in a secret part of the hole; how they feared that their mighty treasure might tempt some of the unscrupulous diggers to murder them for their wealth; and how they had hidden it in a wheelbarrow, under empty tubs and straw litter, and then buried it beneath the rude table in their tent until the time came to convey their precious charge to San Francisco; how they kept watch over it, day and night, for four days and four nights, until, arrived at San Francisco, they could speak without reserve of their unparalleled success to the wonder of all. They showed him where they had filed away a portion of the lump to assay the value of the gold, and gave him to keep—yes, to keep without charge—the melted produce.

The nugget being carefully replaced and the punch finished, Peter's companions retired to their separate rooms, the honor of guarding the nugget being confided to Johnny, as the original finder. When uncle and nephew were alone, Johnny locked the door, as his companion had done previously, and, to make themselves secure from observation, stuffed the keyhole with paper. Peter was somewhat puzzled by these proceedings until he reflected upon the value of the charge confided to his nephew's safe keeping; that worthy young man had, however, his own reasons for the precautions he had taken. Carefully collecting the cinders and waste coal from the fender, he built up the decaying fire, and seemed as careful of the fuel as his miserly relation could have been. After a pause he said:

"Uncle, since I last saw you I have thought much upon my past and future life, and I have come to the conclusion that you have been always right and I always wrong."

"Glad to hear it, my dear child; very glad," said Peter.

"Yes; and so am I to say it. I have arrived at the conclusion that, preach as they will, the only real happy man is a rich one, and I am resolved to be rich," said Johnny, emphatically slapping his knee.

"Well, you are rich, though not very rich," observed Peter.

"But I will be, uncle; I will be ten times as rich before another year is over my head."

"Dear me! How? how? asked Peter. "I shouldn't mind a partnership if you could make it clear."

"That's it, that's why I sent for you in London," said Johnny, in a suppressed tone. "You saw that," pointing to the portmanteau under the bed. Peter nodded his head rapidly. "It is worth six thousand pounds, and I found it; had I been alone it would have been mine, all mine, uncle Peter!"

"What a pity you had them with you! what a pity we hadn't been together!" sighed Peter, casting up his eyes to the ceiling.

"That's past wishing for now," said Johnny, in the same subdued voice as before; "but, if we can't secure all the prize, we may have the lion's share yet."

"How? how?" eagerly asked Peter, drawing his chair closer to his nephew.

"When the nugget was examined in San Francisco," whispered Johnny, "it was thought to contain a third at least of quartz, which made it worth about three thousand pounds. We, however, caused its value to be stated at what you saw in the piece of California newspaper I sent you. Since we have been home I was intrusted to get it assayed, and I am assured, from calculations made by the gold-dealer, that if the nugget were melted it would prove to be nearly all gold, and worth between five and six thousand pounds. Now, uncle Peter, though I found the gold, I need not find the value for the benefit of others, the more especially as my partners are rogues enough to deceive any one they can for their advantage; so much so that, believing the San Francisco value to be the true one, they would consent that you should believe it to be worth the greater sum."

"Me! Why me?" exclaimed Peter.

"Hush!" said the nephew, "speak low. Because they believe, from what I have said at odd times, that you might become the purchaser."

"Me! What do you mean? I've no money. Can scarce keep body and soul together."

"Uncle," said Johnny, rather sternly, "let the time be past for humbug between us. Let us speak as men who, having a common interest, have at least common confidence in each other. I know you have money at your command, and I have the means [Joheny pointed to the old portmanteau] to double the sum you may venture. That gold yonder is worth six thousand pounds: by purchasing it for £3,500 my greedy partners will believe they have done you, when, in reality, we shall be the gainers of two thousand ponnds at least."

Peter was startled at the boldness of this proposition, and for some time could not bring his mind to contemplate such an ebormous iuvestment. The worthy pair sat late into the night, however, and before they sought to sleep they had arranged a plan to accomplish their projected villainy.

We have no desire to record the lies and shifts employed to effect the bargain, but sure enough Peter Lackpenuy and the monster nuggct arrived together at Bastock on the morning of New Year's Eve, 185–. The treasure was concealed in a large packing-case, marked "Ironmongery," and the railway officials marvelled at the recklessness of Peter in travelling with such an additional weight of luggage. Nor were the good people of Bastock less surprised when they saw John Twister and his uncle walking down the street apparently the best friends in the world. Nor was their wonder lessened when, late in the evening, a bright light was seen shining through the window of Peter Lackpenny, and a cheerful volume of smoke wreathing from his chimney. There was a chorus of voices—strange voices, too—chanting the burden of some wild drinking-song, followed by roars of boisterous laughter that shook the old walls of Peter's dwelling, and mingled strangely with the church bells ringing in the advent of New Year's Day. Just before midnight a four-wheeled chaise was brought to the door, and Peter and his noisy visitors came out into the street. Their parting was as boisterous as their carouse, and ended at last in their forcing old Peter into the chaise to pay the toll of the turnpike-gate which stood at the end of the village.

In vain did Peter Lackpenny protest, and as vainly did he invoke the intercession of his nephew, who only laughed at him, and said the ride would do him good.

John Twister was the last to leave the house and mount the carriage.

Their shouts and laughter were still audible in the distance when a lurid light streamed from the half-closed door of Peter's house, followed by clouds of dense smoke that climbed up the wall and hung about the roof as though loth to depart. A crackling of wood, and more light and smoke, and the truth became evident. Peter's house was on fire. The old man returning from his compulsory ride was almost the first to discover his misfortune, and the few neighbors who had assembled to render assistance were terrified by his shricks and frantic appearance. His first impulse was to rush into the burning house, but the smoke and flame drove him back, and then kindly hands restrained him. After awhile he became calmer, and a ghastly smile stole into his face as he clapped his hands and cried, "Ah, that cannot burn! that cannot burn!" The neighbors thought him mad, and the more so when he strove to prevent their attempts to extinguish the fire.

"None enter here!" he cried. "Let it burn to the ground! I am master here, and will have my way. Let it burn!—let it burn!"

There was something terrible in the sight of the spare form of the old man attired in his long duffel gown, his arms cast into the air and his long white locks tinted by the lurid glare of the flames. The roof had fallen in some time; but from the centre of the dwelling there rose up at intervals long tongues of fire and columns of dark smoke that puzzled the bystanders.

It was daylight before the fire had exhausted itself, and Peter's home lay before him a mass of smoking rubbish. Yet the old man kept up his unceasing march backwards and forwards, and so continued throughout New Year's Day, rejecting the food his neighbors offered him, and only quenching his thirst with deep draughts of water. Every now and then, as the night advanced, he tried the heat of the embers, and at length, when the moon had risen, and all had left him to keep his strange watch as he pleased, he took a mattock from a shed which had escaped the fire, and began to rake aside the ashes which covered the spot whence the tongues of flame and the black smoke had issued so continuously. He continued this labor long after the villagers were asleep; and then many were awakened by shrieks and moans, made terrible by the stillness of the night. Some rose from their beds, and looked forth to learn the meaning of those cries; whilst others, more courageous or more compassionate, suspecting the truth, went forth and sought the wreck of Peter's home. There they found the wretched creature on his knees—now beating the ashes with his hands, now clutching his scanty locks, and shrieking or moaning by turns. On the spot he had cleared some molten metal glittered in the moonlight. It was not the gold Peter had purchased with the scrapings and plunderings of his life, but lead—worthless lead, which his treacherous nephew and his confederates had moulded and plated to resemble the precious lump found at Angels. The biter had been bitten. The wicked sower had gathered his harvest of hemlock, and the poison would destroy him. Yes; a year—only a year—he mourned his departed gold, and then he died.

No wonder mine host of the White Hart declined the custom of Johnny Twister.

TURKISH WOMEN.

THE Turkish women have now willingly adopted European amusements and fashions. Operas and balls please them far better than the solitary life to which they were formerly condemned. In Europe, however, there are also serious employments for the female sex, which render the wife the husband's assistant. The Oriental will not listen to anything of this sort, and believes she has fulfilled her duty when she annually presents society with a child, which she does not suckle herself. If a yonng Greek, Armenian or Levantine girl is educated in a convent, she learns to read and write a little; if she remains at home, she learns to speak French from her European governess. She gets on fastest in those things in which she receives no instruction, and will look out of the window for half the day, or practice positions before the mirror. The mother dreams away three-fourths of her time on the sofa, and leaves her children, who are always numerous, to the care of the servants. The lesson she incessantly repeats to her daughter is to look out for a husband. As there are far more girls than young men, the latter are treated by the ladies with that attention which, in Europe, falls to the share of the fairer sex. The richest toilette, the most provocative desire to please are employed, and even scandal is not shunned, if it compromise a man; the end justifies the means. Love-letters, rendezvous, secret betrothals, in case of need even an elopement, followed by the paternal blessing—all is permitted, but no mesalliance. In this land, where there is no nobility—no aristocracy of the mind or of wealth—a Castilian arrogance prevails. Everybody is vain of his personal appearance, so that a cloth-dealer would never give his daughter to a tailor, or a carpenter marry a shoemaker's daughter.

When the daughter has visited the theatres long enough, and shown herself sufficiently at the promenades, followed, at some distance, by her mother, and her object of marrying has been gained, she asks for a rich equipment, not in clothes and linen, but in silk dresses, jewelry, and above all, diamonds. No maid-servant will marry a shoeblack unless he lays, at least, a diamond breastpin on the altar of love. The most necessary things are neglected, but there is a lavish display of superfluities. When married, the young lady rises at a late hour, spends a good part of the day on the sofa, drinks many cups of tea, receives visits from time to time, forgets the little she has learned, does not write, read or work, and leaves all the household duties to her numerous servants, all monetary cares to her husband. The latter goes at daybreak to Galata, spends his day in the office, at Kaviar Khan, or on Change, and goes home at night. In winter, the couple, whether rich or not, visit the theatre, where they have a box, or at least a fourth of a box. On Sunday morning, church and a walk offer an excuse for displaying the richest toilette. The embassy balls, which unite all the fractions of society, are naturally attended. So soon as the first beams of May sun burst forth, everybody flies and settles down either on the quay of Therapia or at Blyuk-de-reh, and Yeni-Keni, on the shores of the Bosphorus, on the Gulf of Kani-Ki, or under the shady groves of the islands of Kalki and Prinkipo. The town house is entrusted to a poor family, who, in this way, get free lodgings, and a wooden house is hired for six months, generally at a very high price, in which the lady shuts herself up for the whole day. She dreams till evening on her eternal sofa, and then goes out in a dazzling toilette, to refresh herself in a coffee-house on the beach. As regards the husband, he goes every morning, in all weathers, in a kaik or steamer, to Galata. The trip takes two hours, and is either dangerous or uncomfortable. In a kaik you are exposed to the danger of being upset by every puff of wind! on the steamer, three to four hundred persons are packed together in the cabins, on deck, and on the paddle-boxes. At night, the husband returns home tired and hungry. Thus people live in summer on the Bosphorus, expensively and uncomfortably. Where the money comes from is an insoluble enigma with many families.

ARK-ÆOLOGICAL REMARKS.—While Noah was in the ark for forty days and nights it was quite dark, and Mrs. Noah and the rest of them not being able to comb their hair, presented an unusual object in the head-gear line, and she and the rest of the women were continually run by the rest of the crew. Mrs. Noah's unfailing reply was, "Wait till the water falls," and as such the style was known. When the ark struck ground she put her head out of the door (and such a head!) and exclaimed at the top of her voice: "Is this Are-a-rat?" And the impression was, and is to this day, that it was very much like it.

FACES ON A BATTLE-FIELD.

THE celebrated report of Dr. Chena on the mortality caused by war, contains some interesting information concerning the appearances presented by some who die a violent death on the field of battle. One surgeon says that, wandering over the battle-field of the Alma, on the third day after the fight, he observed with astonishment a number of Russian corpses whose attitude and expression of countenance were precisely those of life. Some did certainly present an aspect which showed that they had suffered severely just previous to dissolution, but these were few in number compared with those who wore a calm and resigned expression, as though they had passed away in the act of prayer. Others had a smile on their faces, and looked as if they were in the act of speaking; one in particular attracted his special attention: he was lying partly on his side, his knees were bent under him, his hands were clasped together and pointing upward, his head was thrown back, and he was apparently still praying—evidently he was in the act of doing so at the moment when death laid his hand upon him. Another medical man relates that after the battle of Inkermann, the faces of many of the dead still wore a smile; while others had a threatening expression. Some lay stretched on their backs as if friendly hands had prepared them for burial. Some were still resting on one knee, their hands grasping their muskets. In some instances, the cartridge remained between the teeth, or the musket was held in one hand, and the other was uplifted as though to ward off a blow, or appealing to Heaven. The faces of all were pale, as though cut in marble. As the wind swept across the battle-field it waved the hair, and gave the bodies such an appearance of life, that a spectator could hardly help thinking they were about to rise to continue the fight.

Another surgeon, describing the appearance of the corpses on the field of Magenta, says that they furnish indubitable proof that man may cease to exist without suffering the least pain. Those struck on the head generally lay with their faces on the ground, their limbs retaining the position they were in at the instant they were struck, and most of these still held their rifles; showing that when a ball entered the brain it causes such a contraction of the muscles that there is not time for the hand to loose its hold of the weapon before death. Another peculiarity observed in the case of those who were wounded in the brain, was, the suddenness with which they died even when suspected to be out of danger. During the battle of Solferino, a rifleman was wounded in the head by a ball which passed through the skull and buried itself in the brain. His wound was dressed, and he was stretched on straw, with his head resting on his knapsack, like his wounded comrades. He retained the full use of his faculties, and chatted about his wound, almost with indifference, as he filled his pipe and lay smoking it. Nevertheless, before he had finished it, death came upon him, and he was found in the same attitude, with his pipe still between his lips. He had never uttered a cry, or given any sign that he was suffering pain.

In cases where the ball had entered the heart, nearly the same appearances were presented as in the cases of those who had been struck in the brain; death was what we term instantaneous, but it was not quite so swift as in the former case; there was generally time for a movement in the act of dying. There was a Zouave who had been struck full in the breast; he was lying on his rifle, the bayonet was fixed, and pointing in such a way as showed that he was in the act of charging when struck. His head was uplifted, and his countenance still bore a threatening appearance, as if he had merely stumbled and fallen, and were in the act of rising again. Close by him lay an Austrian foot soldier, with clasped hands and upturned eyes, who had died in the act of praying. Another foot soldier had fallen dead as he was in the act of fighting; his fists were closed, one arm was in the act of warding off a blow, and the other was drawn back in the act of striking.

On another battle field several French soldiers lay in a line, with their bayonets pointing in the direction of the foe they were advancing against, when a storm of grape mowed them down. On the left bank of the river Tessin, several Austrian officers lay dead. Some of them were remarkable for the noble expression of their faces, the extreme neatness of their dress, and the cleanliness of their persons. Most of them had fair hair, and their countenances bore the stamp of calm resignation. The best opportunity of seeing the aspect of the masses who died on the field, was when they lay stretched beside the trenches which were destined to be their final resting-place. So far were their faces from presenting the livid appearance and the expression of despair which painters are in the habit of producing in pictures of battle-fields, that a spectator could hardly help calling to the burying parties to wait a little before covering them up; they were so like life.

THE editor of the Paris Figaro has lately met on the field of honor a Spanish gentleman, to whom the journalist's pleasantries about the Queen of Spain had proven offensive. This is a terrible state of things, when subjects have to take up their sovereign's newspaper quarrels, and the poor journalists have to give point to their jokes with the rapier.

THE MYSTERIOUS FACE.

I AM an old-fashioned old-boy, and when I was a child, I was an old-fashioned young boy; so of what fashion I really am, it is hard to conjectnre. I have tried to read Mr. Thackeray's works, but I do not think I quite understand them, not being literary, and feeling puzzled by satirical remarks, especially when I know beforehand that the author is a wit, and that I ought, therefore, to find a hidden meaning in every line; yet from what I have been able to make ont, I should say that I was a fogy. I do not belong to any club, though my means are comfortable; I live in London, and have often been asked whether I should like to join the Polynices or Artaxerxes. Well, I should like; and yet, you see, I could never exactly make up my mind, because I never have belonged to a club. No; there is a tavern I frequent, where the cook is most excellent, and where I dine daily at the same minute, in the same corner. Once that corner was usurped; I tried to dine at another table, in vain! I was unwell the next day, and had to take medicine; but the waiter, Charles, has been very careful ever since; and I believe, that, rather than allow me to be subjected again to similar inconvenience, the proprietor would feed a succession of beggars, gratis, in that place for the entire afternoon, to keep it for me, just as noblemen with younger sons at college, present octogenarians to their livings. Why must I dine in that particular corner? Because I have always done so. That unintelligible remark about noblemen's sons and livings is not mine, but my nephew Tom's; Tom, whom I have employed to write ont this account, from my dictation, insists on putting in his remarks, will "touch up" my narrative, as he calls it, and I do not quite like it; no more do I like his slapping me so hard on the back, and rubbing down the calves of my trousers when I have been standing for some time with my back to a large fire; and I do not know why I should let him and everybody play upon me, but I always have. There is also a cigar divan to which I go every morning at ten o'clock, and read the newspaper till half-past twelve, smoking during that time two cigars. One paper always lasts me the whole time, as I peruse every column; and yet, somehow, if any one in the course of the afternoon, asks me about the news, I find it has all slipped out of my head. No, Tom, I am not asleep all the time; if I were, my cigar would go out, which it does not—often. I remember my childhood; we always had roast beef and Yorkshire puddings on Saturdays, cold meat and fruit pie on Sundays. I can also call to my mind my boyhood and school-days, for never have I in after-life been able to discover such taffy as that sold at the dame's round the corner, or such open tarts as appertained to the pastry cook's higher up the street.

I was about eighteen when I first discovered that earth possessed a charm, not indeed equal to eating and drinking, but only secondary to those pleasures: the name of woman began to stir my heart; I indulged in reveries and poetical fancies; and often in the midst of the joys of some unusually piquant dish, have I thought how sweet it would be to see a fair form gracing the opposite seat, enhancing the flavor by her sympathy, and, when there was enough for both, participation.

When in the presence of ladies, however, I was bashful, embarrassed, awkward; I trod on their dresses, spilt scalding coffee down their backs, pulled all their music off the piano, split their fans, dropped and broke their smelling-bottles, and made myself generally disagreeable; so that I retired early from the field, and made up my mind to die an old bachelor. Still, I could not stifle a yearning towards beauty, which, after a while, took the settled form of a fancy for painting and sculpture; at least as far as those arts took the female face and form for their study. I never bought, but I pottered about sales and exhibitions, and spent hours daily in staring in at shop-windows, and turning over second-hand prints. The society of woman's pictures is certainly not so thrilling as direct communication with the real article; but then it is more comfortable—the bewitching smile in a painting never turns to a frown; the expression of the features fades not into a bored apathy immediately you are left alone with it. You have not got to tickle its vanity—you feel no jealousy when others gaze on it; on the contrary, the admiration of friends enhances your pleasure; and if you are poetically gifted, what charming scenes, tender and domestic—O, how far above reality?—may the imagination conjure up. Even I, who hate poetry—that is, I can't read it, can't make out what the writer is driving at—even I can fancy all sorts of things, and encounter all sorts of adventures while gazing at a good picture of a beautiful woman. I never came to understand anything about the art as an art, and it was some time before I picked up the picture-slang. For instance, one day a friend came up to me at a sale, and interrupted my musings over a painting by whispering:

"Are you thinking of bidding? Be warned, my dear fellow, and do not go high—quite a fake in; not a Titian! by no means a Titian!"

"Perhaps not," I replied, "but very pretty; I doubt whether Titian hereelf had a better leg and ankle." Of course I came to know better than that, but still I am not yet a first-rate amateur.

It was when I was about thirty that I was very much struck one May-day by a face in the exhibition of the Royal Academy. It was that of a full sized Judith, who was standing in a striking, if not strictly feminine attitude, with a bloody sword in one hand, a dripping head in the other, and her eyes turned up to heaven. That face fascinated me; I waited patiently till a seat opposite the picture was vacant, and then plumped myself down, and, heedless of the connoisseurs, country-cousins, and flirting couples, who trod on my toes, and hustled me on every side, there I sat and gazed my——(No, Tom, that is not so elegant; scratch it out)—gazed to satiety (that is better.)

I was fascinated. Day after day did I return to feast my eyes upon that picture; and the R. A. was making quite a nice little competency out of me in shillings, when I began to find myself lying awake at night, thinking of those upturned eyes, and, horrible symptom, my appetite showed signs of feebleness. Having no fancy to become a second Pig, Pig (What's his name, Tom?) Pigmealy'un, I left off my visits to Trafalgar-Square; and as Ovid tells us the best remedy for love is to multiply the objects of our admiration—proving thereby that Hahnemann was not the first homœopathist—I patronized the exhibition in Pall Mall, determined to find a rival for Judith.

In the first room there was nothing particular to arrest my attention; but the moment I entered the second, I was struck all of a heap by a Siren. No! yes! it was! The attitude was different, the expression was different, the dress was very different—indeed, the present lady only wore her hair, which was fortunately very long and plentiful, but still there was the identical nose, the very charming chin, the same bewitching mouth. It was a fate, then; for how could two artists have struck out the same idea by chance? I left the room confused, bewildered; and the waiter at Bob's that day looked astonished when I told him I was ready for the Siren; nor was his surprise mitigated when I ordered a pint of Judith. I now no longer attempted to resist my destiny, but gave myself up to rapt seraphic contemplation of the Ideal, (Ah, cabbage! Uncle has one of Bulwer Lytton's books in his hand. —Tom) visiting one or other of the exhibitions every day until they closed, and then I felt a void in my existence I had never known before. I grew melancholy and dyspeptic, and consulted a medical man, who prescribed complete change of scene; to obtain which I made up my mind to quit my native land, and take up my residence for a fortnight at Boulogne. I pass over the horrors, the perils, the miseries of the voyage, which lasted upwards of two fearful hours, and proceed to chronicle my extreme good fortune in discovering a boarding-house where the hostess was English, the guests English and Irish, the servants English, and O! the cookery English.

Here I took up my abode, and sought once more the distractions of society—that is, I played Pope Joan with the old ladies for counters at a penny the dozen; I walked on the pier, and saw the people bathing, and the packets come in; and I subscribed to the Etablissement des Bains, and sat in a corner on the ball-nights.

Plunged in the vortex of dissipation, the face which had so long haunted me began to fade from my remembrance, when one day, the third after my arrival, as I stood on the pier and watched the debarkation from the London packet, I saw a lady advancing alone along the plank leading from the vessel to the shore. Her veil was down, yet I could distinguish the outline of her features, and my heart throbbed with emotion. With a stately step she pursued her way to the custom-house door, and then, ere she entered, turned, and to see more clearly where her luggage was being carried to, raised the envious veil. It was she! the Judith! the Siren! the ideal of two artists and mine. I put the burning end of my cigar to the back of my hand to see whether I was awake or not, and an instantaneous blister proved the fact indisputably. Who shall describe my bewilderment? I felt like the ballet dancer in a ballet when the principal she-dancer bursts at unexpected moments out of cup-boards, linen-presses, laurel-bushes, flower-beds, and tombstones. Was it angelic? Was it diabolic? Was it coincidence?

I went home with an oppressive presentiment that something was going to happen to somebody somewhere, and mused till dinner.

We sat at meals in the order of our arrival, and got promotion when those above departed; and as I had hitherto been the last, I was surprised to see a clean napkin laid next to mine below me. We did not have clean napkins daily, but folded up our dirty ones, and stuck them through a ring with a number on it, which we invariably forgot; so the clean napkin attracted attention, and Mrs. Jones, the hostess, explained that we were to have an addition to our circle, a Mrs. Plantagenet, widow. My heart gave a bound in my bosom—what if it should be she! Pooh, nonsense; it was probably some dumpy old woman with a red nose, who took snuff, and next to whom it would be very unpleasant to sit. Be she whom she might, the stranger was late; the soup, the fish passed away, the entremets were handed around before the door opened, and—it was SHE! I thought I should have swooned, collapsed, died of apoplexy, of rush of blood to the heart, and believe that some or all of these calamities would have happened to me, had not a heaven-directed mouthful of oyster-pate gone down the wrong way.

"Have a glass of water?" said she in the most natural way in the world, as if we had known each other for months.

Could she have seen pictures of me? Was I her ideal, as she was mine?

"Anything going on here?" she asked, when I had somewhat recovered. "What's at the theatre?"

I replied that I had not been there, not understanding the language.

"O, you must learn it," she said; "it is soon done if you are plucky enough to talk, and don't mind being laughed at when you make mistakes."

"There is the Etablissement, where they dance."

"That is all right. I adore dancing: don't you?"

"Yes, a little: that is, I am rather clumsy at it."

"Oh, soon learn—practice in the evening, take lessons in the morning. Is the champagne good here?"

I hastened to order a bottle and offer her a glass. I had never got on so well with a lady before. I was like simple Simon (Query Cymon?—Tom) of antiquity, Love had polished me. When I sought my pillow that evening, two things astonished me: one was, the manner in which my destiny had taken my education in hand; the other that as a widow, she must have been some one else's destiny beforehand; but doubtless that was a forced match, an ill-assorted union. Bashful and unenterprising as I naturally was with the fair sex, my present advantages might have been lost from the mere want of being followed up, had not a series of minor events—lacking individually the same startling and supernatural character which distinguished those employed to bring us together, but still bearing the stamp of destiny when considered as a whole—combined to draw Mrs. Plantagenet and myself into closer intimacy. Thus, the morning after her arrival, I was smoking my after-breakfast cigar in the paved court at the back of the house, when the Venetian shutters of a window on the ground floor were opened, and she appeared, clad in a delightful fresh morning dress. She started, smiled, and bowed. I apologised for the cigar. It was the scent of all others I most preferred, which emboldened me to remain near the window. What a beautiful day it was! how she would enjoy a walk if she only had a companion. I offered to attend her; she demurred a little, and saw no harm—we were not known. In a quarter of an hour we were quite familiar. Had I a dancing-master yet? No! She herself would teach me a few steps. In two hours we were walking arm-in arm up to the Napoleon column; in two days we were dancing together at the Etablissement; in a week we called each other Leonara and Edward; in ten days, I was an engaged man.

In consequence, as she informed me, of a distressing lawsuit at the time pending, it was not convenient for Leonora to return to England just then; and as I had certain affairs to arrange, and certain relations (a word rhyming with expectations) whose advice it was desirable to ask, and, so far as it coincided with my own views, follow, it was decided that I should cross the Channel, settle everything, and return to Bliss; while Bliss remained at the boarding-house at Boulogne and occupied herself in looking out for comfortable lodgings in the upper town. It certainly saves a good deal of trouble to marry a widow.

By Leonora's advice I went straight from Boulogne to London, for though the voyage that way is of longer duration, you can go to bed and sleep all the time, or, at least, you can try to do so; so I took a berth on board the Stumakpoomp, and, in order to secure it, undressed and turned in before the vessel left the quay. The experiment was to some extent successful, for though the motion caused me to feel giddy, bewildered, and helpless, I was spared that horrible sensation of approaching dissolution, accompanied with tickling in the sides, which I had before experienced, whenever the packet shot rapidly down the side of some unusually big wave, and indeed, escaped all the worst symptoms of the malady.

After I had laid quiescent on my back for about three hours, two gentlemen came into the cabin, whom, from their long hair, beards, and general cut, I conjectured to be artists.

"Well, Jack, as it is raining cats and dogs on deck, and the saloon is full of temporary invalids drinking brandy-and-water, I suppose this is about the cosiest nook in the whole ship. Upper or lower?"

"You have the longest legs. Lower."

"All right; here goes:" and the taller of the two swung himself up into the berth immediately opposite mine, the other rolling into that underneath him.

"Jack!"

"Yes!"

"Can one smoke?"

"No!"

"What a bore!" And they plunged into general talk. They discussed politics, cookery, operas, preachers, everything; but their principal conversation was of paintings and painters; to all of which I listened in a dreamy way, passively, not paying attention, when suddenly a word caught my ear which startled me like an electric shock—"Judith."

It was at the end of something said by the under man, and the upper directly answered :

"O yes, I remember now ; she sat also for Blowser's Siren, didn't she?"

"That's her. Pity she is so extravagant. Over head and ears in debt. Can't put her foot in England, they say. I saw her yesterday on the pier."

"Speak to her?"

"Not I ; she had the prize in tow ; it might have spoiled sport. Besides, she tipped me a little frown.

"Ah ! and you say he is well off?"

"Very, they say. He won't be long so, poor beggar !"

"And he is really going to marry her?"

"Safe."

"What a consummate ass ! It is rather a bore though ; perhaps he won't let her sit."

"Not while his money lasts, perhaps; but that can't be long, in her hands ; and then he cannot be a very particular sort of chap to marry her at all."

Only Dante could describe my feelings; suffice it that on arriving in London I made searching inquiries into the antecedents of Mrs. Plantagenet, the result of which was to determine me to break off the match.

It is pleasant to have a wife who is a model of virtue, sobriety, industry, good humor ; but not one who is a model "Venus rising from the sea."

An enlightened British jury, however, saw the matter from a different point of view, and when the action was brought against me, brought in a verdict for the plaintiff—damages £500.—Chambers's Journal.

(For the Californian.)

CHRISTMAS-TIDE.

THE chiming bells at break of day
Joined in a merry Christmas lay ;
The hills in sympathy profound
Took up the same exultant sound.
I heard the prayer of priestly men,
The people's answering, deep amen ;
And these were upward borne along
Upon the wings of choral song.
From men whose forms, low bending, show
The gathering weight of winters' snow ;
From maidens in their early prime
Warbling like birds in Summer-time ;
Through the clear air from far and near
I heard the songs of Christmas cheer.
And blending in the morning air,
The songs of praise, the priestly prayer,
The chimes, the tones the hills prolong,
Seemed all to sing this Christmas song :

Forever and forever, all our days,
We'll never cease to loudly sing in praise,
That Christ was born and walked before men's gaze.

Our words are poor to tell our bursting hearts,
And the sweet peace that from us ne'er departs ;
Our heart-throbs sing the joy thy name imparts.

To poor, to rich—all were alike to thee—
To each thou leftst this richest legacy—
Pure hope, pure faith and purest charity.

Oh ! never unforgiving unto men,
No suppliant e'er was bid to ask again ;
Who touched thy garment, she was pardoned then.

Despised and rejected and alone,
Thy gentleness despised, rejected none :
Though sinless thou, thou didst not cast a stone.

Thou livest still, though centuries have fled;
In conscience slain, when self hath self misled,
Thy healing truth still lifts us from the dead.

Forever and forever, all our days,
We ne'er shall cease to sing aloud in praise
That Christ was born, and he doth live always.

Within the city's gates, through all her bounds,
All tones seemed bearing on this Christmas lay—
From cottage low, where most his truth was known,
From mansion high, where loudest it was sung.
And walking onward from the city's gates,
I caught the closing accents of a prayer.
"This offering of joy and praise for him,—
Fulness of joy and all we can of praise—
Who taught us love was better aye than hate,
Who put winged sandals on our conscience' feet,
That we might turn the course of our bad thoughts,
And catch them in the cup of penitence,
Ere they should crystallize to wicked deeds."

The air was sweet with incense of men's joy,
The human reaching up to the Divine. PHILIP.

THE OPERA.—Madame Bishop's brief opera season closes to-night with her benefit. An excellent and varied bill is announced, and, doubtless, a full house will grace the occasion. There are whisperings of a new opera season at the Americau, with Brambilla and others, but the event is yet in embryo.

THE Misses' Laemleiu's Concert, on Wednesday evening last, was a success, and the attendance was a merited compliment to the talents of the young ladies.

A VILLAGE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

IN an article with this suggestive title, Harper's Magazine indulges in a little mischievous pleasantry over the "Hub :"

BOSTON AND NEW YORK CONTRASTED.

Boston is a good place to have the conceit taken out of you, and just as good a one to have it made chronic ; want of sympathy does the one, cliqueism the other. Most people there are bookish, few genial ; men are esteemed as lions more than as brothers ; and women as brilliant rather than lovable. "What does he know?" is the query regarding each new social candidate. "How did you like ——'s speech?" asked one of the auditors of his youthful friend. "I was thinking how much better I could do it myself," was the characteristic reply. You can find more fluent and suggestive talkers in Boston in a day than you can in New York in a month ; but among the latter there is a ready hospitality for your spontaneous self, while the former meets each idea with critical comment or argumentative challenge ; the one may wake up your mind, but the other is far more likely to refresh your heart. Intellect is idolized in Boston ; fellowship enjoyed in New York. Book-stores are the casinos, clubs the mental gymnasiums, reading the recreation of the genuine modern Athenian. You see scores of pale girls carrying home books from the public library ; you hear perpetual criticism ; a bon mot is a social victory, a literary dinner the fashionable desideratum—all of which is charming in its way. It promotes mental alacrity, it keeps people out of mischief, it leads to culture and to fame—but when exclusive, leads also to hardihood, to egotism, and to the abeyance of fresh, broad, and earnest social sympathies. It is not all of life ; it does not embrace the soulful, the appreciative, the responsive, so vast and dear, that lies beyond the sphere of the academic and the grasp of the knowing faculty ; yet it is complacently regarded as a universal test and triumph. The Boston Review is named for the American continent—the Boston Magazine for the Atlantic Ocean ! Boston is an admirable place for a young man to go away from ; it is also an admirable place to which to return—for a visit ; provided that one knows how to improve his time and opportunities.

The denizen of New York in his Sunday walk in Fifth Avenue encounters such pleasurable greetings that he is assured the sight of him is a satisfaction on the mere ground of companionship, as a human being, not because he can gratify curiosity, exchange criticisms, or is a member of the Mutual Admiration Society ; the social feeling there is normal, and irrespective of intellectual or financial distinction. Let him promenade Beacon street between churches and the salutation will be curt or curious, rarely warmed by the zest of fellowship. "When did you come? How long are you going to stay? What are you about?" says the Bostonian to the occasional visitor. "How are you? I'm delighted to see you. Come in to dinner?" says the Gothamite.

TRANSCENDENTALISM.

Then arose the transcendentalists, led off by Margaret Fuller : the origin, progress, and influence wherof are described in her Memoirs. With much eloquence, and no little insight, there was vast affectation in many of those philosophers : truly were some of them described as expositors of ideas, those of which that were true were not new, and those which were new were not true. Half the apparent originality was verbal. Aphoristic language covered imitative thought ; a cant of philosophy concealed familiar convictions. In a word, the shrewdness which the Yankee trader applied to barter, the Yankee thinker applied to literature ; there was no spontaneous overflow, but a studied ingenuity ; his intellectual work was a mosaic composed of gems garnered from a wide and often a little explored range of lore. "Orphic sayings" were often a quaint remoulding of "proverbial philosophy ;" and the "Dial" measured the lifethrobs of society with no more accurate index than the town-clock, only with a mysterious picturesqueness singularly winsome to a class of minds to which simplicity of diction and integrity of thought are less impressive than oracular vagueness. Some of these aspirants for a new philosophy hunted for ideas with the sagacity wherewith their less thoughtful brethren "poke about for pence ;" and they made the most of their capital by cunning phraseology—seeing, or professing to see, so deeply and so far, that merely sensible mortals were baffled, and sometimes gained over into descrying something "very like a whale" in every cloud at which their oracular guides significantly gazed. "Margaret, this is poetry," said a transcendentalist to his companion, as Fanny Ellsler gave a miraculous twirl to her extended leg. "No, Waldo," was the reply, "it is religion." "Do you understand this?" asked an auditor of a transcendental lecturer of the most sagacious lawyer in Massachusetts. "No," he answered, "but my daughters do." There, indeed, was the true field wherein these mystic seeds of desultory and fantastic thought flourished ; the young were bewitched with the "Ideal," with "a Mission" and "Affinities ;" enchanted by "the depth of their own nature," disgusted with the material and conventional ; "there is hope," they felt, "in extravagance, there is none in routine ;" self-reliance was more grand than receptivity.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE Nation says : "Club Life of London, with Anecdotes of the Clubs, Coffee-houses, and Taverns during the Seventeenth, Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries," is the title of a new book by that industrious compiler, John Timbs, whose works, under his own name and various well-sounding pseudonyms, as "Horace Welby," etc., would almost fill a small library. Mr. Timbs is one of the best workmen of his class, and in his books of "Curiosities" and "Anecdotes" usually brings forward some interesting matter from recondite sources. The taste for reproducing and dwelling upon the life of the past which characterizes a period when original creative power is in abeyance in a nation, has caused the growth of a mob of compilers whose performances are of the most wishy-washy kind. Since Thackeray brought the eighteenth century into fashion, the literary and social characteristics of that period are the famous themes of these gentry. Dr Johnson wished he might never again hear of the Punic War. We should heartily rejoice if Goldsmith's "bloom-colored coat" should be buried in the same oblivion. It is continually turning up, along with Sir Joshua Reynolds' ear-trumpet, Dr. Johnson's tea-drinkings, Miss Burney's bashfulness, Garrick's love of saving a penny, and other scraps of worn-out anecdotes, referred to with an easy air of familiarity by writers of the Sala and Thornbury type to show their intimate acquaintance with the arcana of the past. The social and literary history of England is a mine which could hardly be exhausted by any number of genuine workers, so copious are the materials at command for its illustration. These this class of authors in question have no knowledge of. Evelyn and Pepys, Boswell and Burney, Walpole and Wraxall, form about the beginning and end of their stock in trade. It is impossible to take up an English magazine without meeting with a rehash of this old matter, destined to form a book served up under some taking title.

THE following characteristic anecdotes of the late Lord Palmerston have never, we believe, appeared in print before : On one occasion, when a vote of censure was proposed in Parliament upon his ministry, a friend asked him what the Government intended to do. "Well," he said, "there are three distinct propositions before the House. We shall take a few words from the first, add a few from the second, and transpose a few from the third, and then we shall have a resolution of our own which will be as clear—as mud." Again, at the time that the Schleswig-Holstein imbroglio was just beginning to bore the world, in the autumn of 1863, an eminent English diplomatist went to call upon the Premier to ask for information on the subject. After hearing his request, Lord Palmerston thought a while, and then answered in his short, jerky manner : "Yes, quite right to come to me. Very difficult question that of Schleswig-Holstein, and there never were but two people who really understood it—myself and ——. But then you see the misfortune is, that —— is dead, and that I have forgotten it."

AT the Students' Congress, now holding its sessions at Liége, the following characteristic letter in reply to an invitation to attend was read :

BRUSSELS, October 23d.

Your honorable invitation reached me just as I was starting for Guernsey. I regret that I cannot be present at your noble and affecting meeting. Your Students' Congress is taking a generous initiative. You are moving on with the tendencies of the age. It is well. By the fraternity of the student you announce the fraternity of the nations ; you are realizing to-day what we are dreaming of for to-morrow. Who should be the advance guard but you, young people? The union of peoples, the great aim, though far remote, of thinkers and philosophers, is now visible in you. I applaud your work of concord and of peace among men, which is already made between our children. I love in youth its resemblance to the future. One gate is open before us. On that gate is written : "Peace, light, liberty." Be the first to pass through it. You are worthy of the honor. It is the triumphal arch of progress. Yours, from the bottom of my heart,

V. HUGO."

The reading of this letter was received with loud applause.

MACMILLAN has already sold 50,000 copies of his cheap (five-shilling) and handsome "Globe" edition of Shakspeare.

A PRIZE FOR THE PRETTIEST MAIDEN.—The strangest legacies imaginable are left in England. Some time ago a reverend gentleman left a legacy to the town of Holsworthy, in Devon county, of £2 10s. to the prettiest maid of that place. Recently, a notice was posted on the church door, requesting those who considered themselves eligible to give in their names. There were six candidates, and, from the length of time the churchwardens were occupied in making this award, it would appear that they had a difficult task. It is stipulated that the maiden must be of good character, and noted for her regular attendance at church. A young lady named Jane Treble was pronounced by these churchwarden judges of beauty to be the one entitled to the prize. It is a good thing that all the parties are strict attendants at church, or the other five might be a little jealous of the happy possessor of acknowledged beauty.

THE DEVIL'S KITCHEN.

"NO, sir, no letters, sir! Breakfast on the table, sir!" and with a wave of his napkin that reminded me of the flourish a conjurer gives to the handkerchief under cover of which he has balanced a bowl of fish on a thin stick, the waiter revealed to my eyes not only fish, but ham, eggs, and a coffee-pot as well. This sight was sufficiently satisfactory, but the announcement of no letters was a very decided nuisance, for I was neither more nor less than a prisoner; a miserable captive in the hands of the Welsh, and was waiting for my ransom. The fact was, that after a walking-tour of some weeks, I had arrived in Bangor the previous evening, with my knapsack well stocked with ferns—common, as I afterwards discovered, to all parts of the United Kingdom—with several specimens of the British butterfly (Papilio vulgaris), with a book full of water-color sketches not greatly worth looking at, and with no money worth speaking of at all; for, in the confident expectation of finding a remittance awaiting me here, I had allowed my balance of cash to sink so low, that even if I had lost it, the fall to actual penury would have been anything but a severe one.

Under these circumstances, a day's delay in the arrival of the money was annoying, but still—it was certain to come the next day; Bangor was a place of considerable interest, and here was a fine opportunity for thoroughly doing it. So, breakfast over, I set to work at once, and really when you do regularly set to work upon a thing, it's surprising how soon you get it done. When you fling yourself heartily into the business, it's finished in no time, at least Bangor was: done from one end to the other and back again. The Docks, the Cathedral, the Menai Bridge, and the Tubular—the Tubular Bridge, the Menai, the Cathedral, and the Docks. And what on earth was I to do next? Luncheon! of course. So I returned to the hotel, and lunched. It was early in the season; I was almost the only person staying in the hotel, and hence enjoyed a great part of the waiter's attention. I asked the waiter whether there were any objects of interest in the neighborhood. The waiter, taking this opportunity of clearing himself from any suspicion I might have had that he was a native of the principality, informed me that he was born in London, that his place had been a well-known theatrical house-of-call not far from Drury Lane—to this connection he doubtless owed a habit he had of occasionally illuminating his conversation with quotations from Shakspeare—that he had only come to Bangor at the end of last season, and proposed leaving it at the end of this; and then, in answer to my question, mentioned Slate Quarries.

As I felt certain that I should have to tip somebody if I visited these excavations, I told the waiter I did not care for slate quarries. The waiter proceeded to speak of a model village close at hand. There would be no getting away from a model village, of course, without paying for my footing; so I affected a complete indifference for model villages, and, I fear, led the waiter to conclude that I had two or three of them on my own property at home. The waiter next hinted at a museum, and mentioned, in glowing terms, a mummy and a sword fish as being chief among the curiosities therein contained. Supposing that there was nothing to pay, the museum might have done, so I asked if there was any entrance fee. The waiter replied that there was, whereupon I told him that I could not visit the museum, as, in my opinion, all such establishments ought to be free, in order that the lower classes might improve their minds with mummies and sword-fishes at no expense to themselves. The waiter said that the charge was very small. I replied that it was not the sum but the principle to which I objected.

How I got through the rest of the day, I scarcely know. I fancy in the evening I smoked myself into a catamnose-state upon the pier, in the company of an old sailor, who, under the impression, apparently, that I was in the marines, gave me an account of a mermaid which he had seen in latitude—it really does not matter what; the reader may allow himself what latitude he likes—and at the conclusion asked me to stand something. As I thought that I had already stood enough in listening to his story, I gave him a cigar, and returned to the hotel, and I remember resolving, before I went to bed, that sooner than stay in Bangor for another day, I would dispose of my sketches to the highest bidder, and let my butterflies go for what they would fetch.

"Two letters for you, sir," said the waiter, as I entered the coffee-room next morning. The money at last, surely. No! upon my honor! One from Kitty, with any amount of love in it, but, of course, no money; and this—who on earth is this from? Oh, Merton. Pleasant, by Jove! Another day here now. No help for it. For I need scarcely say that any notions I may have had of the money value of my sketches had vanished with the morning light. So, just to spite the evil fortune that kept me prisoner, I ordered the most extravagant breakfast I could possibly think of, and ate it with the somewhat consoling reflection, that I was superior to circumstances. When one is anxiously expecting a particular letter which still does not arrive, how its absence detracts from the pleasure which other letters would at another time afford! There were love and friendship ready to my hand, and I turned but cold glances upon both. I protest I value Kitty's affection above—far above nuggets. I esteem one glance of her eye superior to the sparkle of diamonds, and untold gold could not repay me for the loss of a smile of hers; and yet I confess that that morning I occasionally skipped a sentence or so in those eight pages of crossed love—don't misunderstand me; it was the writing only that was crossed—and it was with more than my usual pleasure that I received the assurance that she was my own affectionate Kitty.

Where love obtained so cold a welcome, it may be supposed that friendship came but poorly off. I opened Merton's letter savagely, and mentally criticised the audience as I read: "How are you getting on?" [What a senseless question!] "Done many sketches? Take care how carry them in your knapsack. Pack them always in the middle—in medio, etc.; you know the rest." [Don't believe he does.] "Knew a man once"— [By Jove! he's going to tell a story!] "carried them next his back—perspired freely—came to unpack them at the end of his journey—sketches all spoiled—stained with perspiration. 'Ha!' said I, 'you use body-color, I see'—riled him awfully." [Very poor joke, it seems to me.] "We miss you at the cricket-matches." [He generally does miss people at cricket-matches.] "Played the Biddlestone last week, and what do you think?" [Why, that you got a tremendous thrashing.] "They beat us in one innings." [Said so.] "Mr. Jenkins asked for you; told him that you had been all over Wales. 'All over weals!' said he, mistaking my meaning. 'Has any one been dropping on him, sir?' Too good a joke to spoil by an explanation." [Well, I can't see it.] "Left him in his error, and he was much concerned, but hopeful that change of air might remove all traces of your misfortune." [Very kind of Jenkins.] "Dined at Sir Nicholas's on Monday night—met Hawkins there and his niece—and what do you think?" [What do I think, again: idiotic phrase.] "Hawkins's niece has been through the Devil's Kitchen!"

This was such an astounding piece of news, that I dropped the letter. What on earth, or under earth, does he mean? "The Devil's Kitchen?" I pronounced the words so audibly that a very meek-looking clergyman, the only person besides myself in the room, who was about to seat himself at the table next mine, started violently, worked himself to the furthest corner of the room by a succession of shudders, and having ordered coffee, eggs, and a muffin, sat down and stared at me in a mournful manner over the top of the Record.

Been through the Devil's Kitchen! Hawkins's niece! I remembered the girl distinctly—tall, black-eyed, good-looking girl, but forward; and always struck me as remarkably forward. There was some story about her having run away from school with the dancing-master; knew for certain that she had been engaged five times in four years; greatly feared that she'd make some absurd match some day; indeed, should not have been much surprised to hear that she'd run—but, upon my life, gone through the —— I couldn't understand it; and I turned to the letter again, a course which, if I had only taken it before, would have rendered this injurious soliloquy unnecessary. The Devil's Kitchen, Merton informed me, was the name given to a chasm high up in the mountains which separates the Pass of Llanberris from the Pass of Nant Frangon; and through this chasm, according to Merton, whose authority, I suppose, was Hawkins's niece, it is possible for a clever mountaineer to make his way from one Pass to the other. He added that the Welsh called the place Twll Du. Here, then, was a way of passing a day, instead of sauntering it over in Bangor. I could only be about ten miles from the scene of action. I would walk there, get through the Kitchen and back again, and return to Bangor in time for dinner. I would start at once. It might, however, be advisable to procure some directions as to the locality a little more definite than Merton's.

"Waiter!"

"Sir."

"Where's the Devil's Kitchen?"

"Beg pardon, sir."

"Where is the Devil's Kitchen?"

"Well, really, sir—'pon my word, sir—might 'azard a conjecture, but—unmentionable to hears polite, sir."

The menial evidently thought I was joking; so I assumed a stern expression of countenance, and explained that, as I was given to understand, there was a chasm in the mountains not far from here, which was called the Devil's Kitchen; and that, as I wished to visit it, if he could give me no information about the place himself, he had better go below, and make inquiries.

"Certainly, sir," said the waiter. "Most unpleasant name, sir. Shakspeare says, 'What's in a'"—

"Will you go at once," said I, interrupting him, "and inquire the exact locality of the"—

"Devil's Kitchen, sir; yes sir," said the waiter, interrupting me in my turn, and going off promptly on his mission.

"Stay, though," I called out; "perhaps they might know it better by its Welsh name—the Welsh call it Twll-Du."

"Now, do they though, sir?" said the waiter, turning re fleetively. "Tool Jew! Well, I should very much like to know what led 'em to take that line; what they think they mean by that in the habstract."

As my face, however, showed no desire to speculate on the subject, he turned once more, and went hastily. He soon returned with full particulars. I was first of all to go to the Falls of the Ogwen, about ten miles from Bangor; and when there, instead of turning to the left, with the road along the bank of Llyn Ogwen, I was to take a footpath in front, and walk for half a mile till I came to Llyn Idwal. Then looking across the lake, I should see in the side of the mountain a black cleft. This was the Devil's Kitchen, or the Black Hole, as the guides called it. But perhaps I would like a guide.

Certainly not.

Would I not have a car to the Falls of the Ogwen?

No; I intended to walk.

At what time would I wish a car to meet me there in the evening?

At no time; I meant to walk back.

Perhaps I would excuse the waiter's remarking that hover fatigue was not calculated to—

"Fill that brandy flask."

"Yes, sir. Pale or brown?—Pale! certainly, sir."

Should I consider it a liberty in the waiter, just returned with the brandy, if he were to call to my recollection the case of the young Hoxford gentleman, who, overtook by a fog at the summit of an 'eaven-kissing 'ill, as Shakspeare says, lost his way and his footing, and was found at the precipice, with both his eyes egstracted by the birds, and his face cut into—

"Sandwiches."

"Certainly, sir. 'Am or beef?—'Am! yes, sir"

So I set off, victualled for my voyage, and happy to turn my back upon my place of captivity even for a few hours. It was a delightful morning, with a bright sun, a fresh wind, and flying clouds that might turn into rain or might not—that probably would be everything by turns, but nothing long. I was in good walking trim, and as I was without the knapsack that had hung at my back daily for the last month, till it had grown to seem one of the fardels of my walk through life, I felt lighter than human as I marched along. Away I went, leaving Bangor and my bill behind me; the town changed into the country—the luxuriant fields and hedgerows, trees and crops of grass, and gentle undulations. Gradually the undulations became less and less gentle, the road was forced to twist and turn, in order to take advantage of the ground, the grass became thinner, the trees stumpier. Far below me on one side dashed a noisy brook; far above me on the other some wild-looking sheep were feeding; then a bend in the road, the Pass opened fairly before me, mountains on the right hand and on the left, and at the end the semicircle of mountains in whose lap is Llyn Idwal, and somewhere in whose recesses is the Devil's Kitchen, gone through by Hawkins's niece. The road, a fine broad road, ascended terrace-like, gradually but surely, so that, after a time, I seemed to be walking about half-way between the top of the mountain and the foot. Voices of invisible children high above me on my left; bark of an invisible dog a long way below me on my right; a flock of sheep crossing the road at a full gallop, and taking the walls on either hand like Irish hunters; a temperance public house; a Welshwoman, with an enormously thick waist, and ankles to match; a shepherd, in apparently hopeless pursuit of the sheep; and, now, as I get near the head of the Pass, a sound of falling water, a slight curve of the road, and here are the Falls of Ogwen, and the road turning to the left along the shore of the lake. I leave the road, strike the footpath, and follow it as directed, till I come to a stop upon the shore of a gloomy black-waved mere, which looks with its savage surroundings, like a place "where no one comes or hath come since the making of the world." There it lies "among the tumbled fragments of the hills," the gaunt mountains with their heads muffled in clouds hemming it in, the whole scene an awful solitude, an intense silence. I stand half-appalled by the heaven abandoned look of everything about me: and as my eyes wander from one point of desolation to another, they perceive, high up in the mountain, on the further side of the lake, a black cleft. There it is, the Twll-Du of the Welsh, the Black Hole of the guides, the Devil's Kitchen of Hawkins's niece. Weather appropriate to the place set in at once. A melancholy wind passed moaning by, working the black water into waves; the mountains drew their clouds still further down, as if preparing for dirty weather; and the rain came on with a rush. There was nothing to be done but wait; so I sat down underneath a rock, put up my umbrella, lighted a pipe, and reflected that, although the owner of the Kitchen had to my mind an indisputable right to the surrounding property, yet the whole affair looked as if it had been for centuries in some infernal Court of Chancery, such a scene was it of wreck and ruin. There is something particularly weird and unearthly about Llyn Idwal. I can better fancy one of "the Table Round" looking after a dragon, or hunting up an enchanter upon the shores of Idwal, than anywhere else I know. The place has a strange look of unreality about it: the lake looks a legendary lake; and the mists upon the mountains seem like the mists of antiquity, which, having allowed themselves to be rolled back for a moment, in order to give us a peep into the past, are again creeping gradually over the scene, and hiding it from our view. Turning for a moment to look the way I had come, I could see Carnedd Dafydd, rising at the head of Llyn Ogwen, with little dashes of sunshine like smiles here and there about him; and although he had one cloud upon his head, and another generally about his chest, yet he took the rough with the smooth like a man, and looked, on the whole, a good-humored well-to-do mountain; but Llyn Idwal's mountains hugged their clouds about them, refusing to be comforted; and even when the rain stopped, as it did after three-quarters of an hour's sharp practice, they only looked as if they had found that weeping brought no relief to them, and that theirs was an anguish too deep for tears.

However, the rain was over at last, and it was time for me to begin my work. The first thing to do was to get to the other side of the lake, and this I found, took some little time, inasmuch as the shore of the lake had a habit of running to marsh at every possible opportunity, which compelled the traveller to make much wider circuit than, uninfluenced by bog, he would have done; and as the circuit obliged him to take his way among the rocks at the base of the mountain, it struck me when at length I gained the opposite side, and was ready to begin my ascent, that Hawkins's niece must, for a lady, be a very fair walker. If walking round the lake takes some time, climbing up the mountain takes still longer. Great rocks lie tumbled everywhere around, and you have to clamber over them, or between them, as you can, hands and feet all at work—"Dear me!" I thought, "Hawkins's niece must be remarkably active"—and then you come to what is still worse, loose stones, that give way beneath your feet, troubling you far more than the large firm rocks did—"Hang it!" I muttered, "Hawkins's niece must have considerable powers of endurance"—then come the big rocks again, scattered about among the loose stones, and as you work along, the crags grow decidedly bigger, and the rubble seems to yield more, till at last you stand, hot and panting, at the mouth of the Devil's Kitchen. "Confound it! what excellent wind Hawkins's niece must have!" I gasped as I sat down for a few minutes, and stared into a narrow passage between two walls of rock, which go up more roughly, of course, but quite as perpendicularly, as the walls of a house for nearly one hundred yards. The passage is some five yards wide, has no roof but the sky, and as regards the floor is merely paved with—well, perhaps with good intentions, but intentious certainly unfulfilled, for heaps of great stones appear to have been shot into it, and there left. In fact the chasm is the bed of a torrent which must once have dashed with tremendous force through it, since rocks so huge that one would think nothing less than the Deluge could have stirred them, are piled up and jammed together in awful confusion. The river, however, which made this bed, disdains to lie in it in these degenerate days, and is at present represented by a comparatively small stream, whose voice, like that of many a noisy demagogue accustomed to thunder and bluster at Westminster, would attract no attention but for the place in which it speaks, and the extent of whose doing is to brawl along, irritibly splashing everything near it, but never moving a stone. As I sat for a short time to recover breath at the entrance of this cheerful place, I could not but confess that the name was very appropriate, particularly as close by me, in the very mouth of the Kitchen, lay a poor lost sheep, that could have fallen over the rocks but a few hours before, while high above his prey some large bird was making great circles in the air, as watchful as the Devil, and as silent as Death.

Leaving the hapless mutton to its fate, I resumed my work, and entered the Kitchen; and although the rocks inside the chasm were heaped together in more utter confusion than those on the side of the mountain, just as a stream when its waters have wider room, yet I met with nothing so difficult as to prevent a lady possessed of great activity and good ankles from surmounting it, till I had clambered on for about sixty yards, when I was brought to a sudden stand-still. The obstacle was a large flat rock inclined a little from you, extending entirely from one side of the chasm to the other, but not reaching to the ground—that is to say to the stones upon which you are standing—by at least five feet; so that you find yourself in front of a cavern, the top of which is formed by this rock like a very steep roof of a house. How ever did Hawkins's niece pass this? I thought. The roof looked impossible; so I put up my umbrella, and entered the cavern, through which the stream was rushing as if Diabolus had determined to clean his Kitchen in the same way that Hercules cleaned the Augean stable. Down came the water through the sides and through the top, knocking the umbrella almost out of my hand, stunning me with the roar, and driving me out in a very short time wet through, and under the impression that I had heard some one at the entrance of the Kitchen shouting and calling me by name.

Dismissing this uncomfortable idea at once, I next examined the rock, which looked as wet and slippery, and about as easy to climb up as would a roof of a church after a heavy shower.

"Well," I thought, "I'd give something to see Hawkins's niece get up that; it's impossible." So I dashed into the cave again, groped round it, examined it as well as I could for the water, and came out wetter, if possible, than ever, and more than ever convinced that Hawkins's niece never went that way, or that if she did, she must have had the assistance of the Genius Loci. This conviction left me but one conclusion—Hawkins's niece must have gone over the rock; and this conclusion left me but one course—I must go the same way that Hawkins's niece did. So fastening my umbrella to my button-hole, and muttering between my clenched teeth that if there was one woman I detested more than another, it was Hawkins's niece; and that if I broke my neck, my blood—or rather my fracture—would be on her head, I managed by means of my finger-nails and toes, to place myself in such a position against the right-hand wall as to be able to throw myself forward upon the wet rock, and hook my fingers in a crack in the stone. That done, I pulled my body up till I could hook on in a fresh place, and from that to another, till I grasped the top of the rock, and rose to my feet triumphant.

"Victoria!" I shouted as I turned to look back at the rock; "but is it possible that Hawkins's niece climbed over that?" A comparatively easy bit succeeded this, and I with singing cheered the way; but after clambering on for five minutes longer, as I merged from a partially subterranean passage, the song of triumph died upon my lips, and I cried: "What on earth did Hawkins's niece do now?" I was in a blind alley, a thorough cul de sac. The walls met and joined without becoming a jot less rigidly perpendicular; straight up, black and wet, they rose to the very top of the mountain; and over a huge rock which lay across the chasm, more than two hundred feet above me, the water streamed in a skeleton cataract. In fact, the Kitchen ended in an immense shower-bath. Impassable as this looked, I was determined not to miss any hole or passage by means of which Hawkins's niece might have overcome the difficulty, so, putting up my umbrella once more, I crept under the waterfall; but the rock, though slightly hollowed out by the water, was rock impenetrable; the bare wall drove me back; the stream battered my unhappy umbrella this way and that; and at last, feeling myself completely beaten, hating Hawkins's niece above all other women, with my boots and pockets filled with water, and with the pleasant prospect of having to get down that exeeedingly nasty place that I had got up, I turned, and then began my retreat. Foiled and dispirited as I was, I could but take notice of the awful beauty of the place in which I stood. The black precipices on three sides of me; the chasm bridged over by the rock no human hand had ever placed there; the strip of bright blue sky above, and the sunlight—like Divine mercy faithful to the end—sparkling on the stream, as it turned and flung itself into the everlasting gloom. Looking down through the mouth of the place, I could see the sun shining upon the grassy mountains far away, and on the rocky ones nearer at hand—all of them, however rugged, appearing tame compared with the Nature-in-ruins sort of den in which I was, where the sunbeams never penetrated, nor—nor Hawkins's niece either, for the matter of that.

"I don't believe a word of it," I cried out, as I picked my way back along this road of ruin. "Merton must have misunderstood her. She can't have got through here to the Pass of Llanberris; it's absurd. But if she did tell him so, why, either I've got into the wrong place—intending to get into the Kitchen, have by some mistake penetrated to the scullery or the coal-cellar; and it looks uncommonly like it—or else Hawkins's niece, finding herself in the Devil's Kitchen, thought she would try her hand at the cooking proper to the place, and so cooked her account. For does any reasonable creature, can any one not a lunatic believe that Hawkins's niece——"

But here I came to the nasty bit, to get down which required all my attention. However, the descensus Averni is proverbially facilis, and I was sufficiently reckless after my disappointment to prevent my "thinking too precisely on the event;" so that, in a short time, I found myself at the mouth of the cavern again, with no further accident than the breaking of two ribs—of my umbrella, and the fracture of my watch-glass. After that, as there was no Eurydice behind me to make my head turn round, nor any place precipitons enough to do that for me either, I was soon ontside the Devil's Kitchen. One draught from the Infernal river, the oblivious properties of which—supposing it to be owu brother to Lethe—I endeavored to counteract by a strong infusion of brandy, and I descended the mountain, passed the gloomy tarn, the very picture, in its blackness and silence, of a lake in Hades, and gained the high-road. But with regard to my walk back to Bangor, either the water I had drunk was Lethe-water after all, or perhaps I had overdone the counteractive, who knows?—at any rate, I recollect very little of it except that it seemed a terrible length, and that, when I came in sight of the hotel, I found the waiter standing on the steps with his napkin thrown over his left shoulder, after the fashion of Hamlet's cloak, and with all the look of a man mentally addressing a grave-digger.

—"Glad to see you back, sir," said he. "Almost thought you'd come to a huntimely end, sir. Dinner, sir? certainly, sir. Letter for you by the hafternoon mail, sir."

A letter for me! Here! Where is it?—Hurrah! The money at last. "Dear T.—I enclose you a ten pound note, which I hope will reach you safely. We are glad to hear that you have enjoyed your tour in"—[Ah, yes! etc.] "Agnes hopes that you have not forgotten her ferns, and that they will be of those kinds only to be found in mountain"—[Just so, I've got them.] A very sad thing"—[Here! what's this? Hallo]—"a very sad thing has happened here to a family we know well. You remember Mr. Hawkins's niece, a tall, good-looking girl, with black eyes? Well, we have just heard this morning—it really seems quite dreadful to write it—that she has run away with Sir Nicholas Hackles's man-cook, a Frenchman. If this be true——"

True! Of course, it's true. Run away with the French cook—Nick's French cook! There's the result of visiting the Devil's Kitchen!

AN IRON MINE.

A LADY, now travelling in Sweden, describes her visit to an iron mine in Stockholm: In the morning drove on a few miles further to Demora. The country has the same external appearance of all mining regions, tresselwork, machinery, ore and debris; but the openings into the mines, deep rents from the surface, are unlike any I have seen elsewhere. I shall only describe the one through which we descended, though there are many. We were lowered from an opening perhaps 100 feet across, in a bucket, slowly, 500 feet, in five minutes and ten seconds. Clinging to the walls of rock by iron hooks and pullies, were platforms, upon which men stood delving with pick and chisel into the ledge of ore. Buckets were see-sawing, lowering workmen and bringing up utensils unseen by agents. The click of the hammer came up from the depths below, accompanied by shrill signal cries, and now the reverbrated crash and roar of a blast, make us to feel that the very foundations of the earth are giving way. It seemed as we were dropping upon a race of Lilliputians, so like specks appeared the busy throng; but when brought to their level, found the workmen a sturdy set, with complexion, if half concealed by a coat of smut, as fair as that of the fairest damsel. They stood with astonished gaze, as miners always do, to see women in their midst.

The cold air, that made us draw our shawls closer as we deseended, was aeeounted for. We stood upon a pavement of ice, last year's deposit and of years before. Miniature glaciers clung to overshadowed creviees of rock. It seemed as if we stood in the midst of a ruin of a vast eathedral; above, the blue dome of heaven capped the seemingly narrow opening. The walls were chiselled so that they had the appearance of being vaulted. Vas pillars separated chamber from chamber; rents through these at various heights opening into other passages, were as windows. The sun's rays struck aslant upon isolated columns covered with drooping maidens' hair, fern and moss. We only looked into the dark chambers, which led in all directions, hundreds of feet—400 men are employed in the mines from 5 A.M. till 8 P.M., for 31 cents per day; 150 children, boys and girls, are kept at work breaking the ore into small fragments, for five cents per day each. The rock contains 70-100 ore. It is not smelted at the mines, but at Osterby and other forges near by. It is said that the excellenee of this iron over any other is owing to its being smelted with chareoal. Certain restrietions by law fetter the operations of miners. Only a certain quantity of ore is permitted to be taken out yearly. The amount of timber that may be cut is stated, and the export of unsmelted ore positively forbidden.

At Bautzen, in Saxony, on the 28th of October, justice was obliged to descend to a hideous hand-to-hand combat with a criminal about to be guillotined. The papers recount that he mounted the scaffold very tranquilly, but then commeneed a furious struggle with the executioners. Four men in vain attempted to subdue the efforts of the condemned, who was a person of slender frame and no great apparent strength. He bit and struck them, and repeatedly cried out, "Help! I am innocent! Save me! You are murderers! I want to speak to the director of the prison again!" At last one of the assistants caught the condemned by the hair, and, pulling his head violently back, rendered him helpless. He was bound to the plank, still protesting his innocence, and declaring that human justice was assassination. The fall of the knife put an end to the revolting scene, which could scarcely have impressed the spectators with the dignity and awfulness of justice.

Havard College is laboriously cataloguing the names and deeds of its students who fell and served in the war. The proper way to make a book for all this is for the various first-class colleges to combine and publish a joint book upon their contributions to the cause.

A critic says of Walt. Whitman's last that "it exhibits the effort of an essentially prosaic mind to lift itself by a prolonged muscular strain into poetry."

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

☞ All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS, } Publishers.
WM. J. BINGHAM.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

FRANCIS BRET HARTE, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1865.

WITH the close of this year, FRANCIS BRET HARTE retires from THE CALIFORNIAN.

THE HOLIDAY SEASON.—The Christmas evergreens of last week are still fresh, and make a cheerful umbrage in drawing rooms and parlors; the shops and bazaars seem to be as closely thronged with customers as ever, and New Year's day will apparently lack nothing to make it as joyous as the holiday of the past week. The old year dies peacefully and resignedly, and but that his last moments are somewhat distracted by the blare of a peculiar kind of tin toy-trumpet—a diabolical instrument lately introduced among the youth of this city—he seems to make a Christian end.

PIANO SCHOOL AND NEW MUSIC HALL.—In connection with the Miel Institute at South Park, a piano school, on the European plan of instruction, will be commenced under the directorship of Mr. Gustave A. Scott, in the January term. The pupils will be taught in classes, which experience proves insures a more thorough training, and incites ambition and emulation. At the termination of the rainy season, a fine music hall will be erected adjoining the Institute, especially adapted for the instruction of classes, and for the giving of private subscription concerts by the pupils, somewhat similar to the Chickering Hall, Boston. It will also be used for private social gatherings, soirees, etc.

THE Sumner Guards' party realized what have been its sanguine expectations of three weeks. The ladies were beautiful, by nature and adornment, and the gentlemen—the military ones—were regular Cincinnati in their way; young doctors, lawyers, etc., deserting their professional plows and organizing themselves into an army to skirmish with "dull care," and put sorrow to ignominious flight. The "Sumner Guard March," composed by Dr. Wm. J. Younger, a high private of the Company, was played by a full band, and brought down the house. The hall was beautifully decorated, supper was good, and the whole affair has grouped itself among the pleasant memories of this festive week.

MAP OF THE STATE OF NEVADA.—We acknowledge the receipt, from the publisher, Warren Holt, 305 Montgomery street, of a fine map of this new State, just issued from the lithographic press of Grafton T. Brown, 543 Clay street. The map appears to have been compiled with great care, as, in addition to the usual features of State maps, the mining districts, trails, and even ranches, are distinctly located on it.

THE Miel Institute, South Park, is announced to re-open on the 2d of January, under the joint supervision of Miss Florence James and Professor Miel. The Professor will give attention to the French class. Miss James is a daughter of the late G. P. R. James, the novelist, and has been principal assistant at the Miel Institute for several terms back. This school, in the coming term, will introduce new features of instruction, which are noted in another paragraph.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT'S GRAND BALL.—It will be seen, by a notice in our advertising columns that this ball has been postponed for a couple of weeks, in order that the committee may perfect all the arrangements necessary to make this ball the most successful one ever produced in this State. "So mote it be," as Dow, Jr., used to say.

MISS LAMMOND'S California Collegiate Institute for young ladies, on Silver street, near Third, an educational institute of which we have had occasion heretofore to speak in high terms, will commence its next term on Wednesday, January 2d. It is a school of instruction worthy of public confidence and patronage.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—We acknowledge the receipt of the following works from A. Roman & Co: "Ambrose's Letters on the Rebellion," "Atkinson's Great Schools of England," "Our Mutual Friend," (complete.) Headley's "Gen. Sheridan," "Golden Hair," Headley's "Vice-Admiral Farragut." Notice next week.

TAILINGS.*

SECOND NOTICE.

BY "BRET," THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED REVIEWER.

IT is with considerable satisfaction that we again recur to this truly admirable collection of the poetry of our Golden State. It is a work eminently Californian—and having said that, what more need be said? Freed from the enfeebling restraints which an older and more cultivated civilization throws around its bards; following no blind precedent of grammatical, metrical or rhythmical construction, our poets in this volume may be truly said to have made "a law with themselves." We believe, with the Sacramento Union, that the natural advantages of California are provocative of the grandest poesy, and that the Sierras of our State as surely tend to the creation of poets as the Alps of Switzerland do the propogation of cretins and idiots. If the compiler of Outcroppings had, instead of following Eastern precedent, looked through nature and the interior press, he would have spared himself the just designation of a "pitiful ass," which the Sunday Mercury, with a singular precision of epithet, so truly applies to him. We may remark, incidentally, that the notices of the interior press and the few city papers which reflect the provincial tone, are, with but one exception, unanimous in these flattering notices. The Sunday Mercury says: "In looking over this work we cannot help reflecting the words of the Grecian poet, Parturient montes nascitur non fit. It is a magnificent monument of human labor and skill, as enduring as the pyramids of the Eternal City; its editor is unquestionably a genius, while the compiler of Outcroppings is a d—n fool!" The Gold Hill News characteristically but playfully remarks: "No hog-wash or purp-stuff here—the real Helicon, unmixed with slumgullion." The single exception to the tenor of these notices we find in the columns of the Fiddletown Skirmisher: "A degrading and dastardly attempt," says that journal, "to rob H. J. Sedilia, so long a contributor to our columns, of his just claims to immortality, has been made by the publishers of Tailings. Without him the work is bosh!"

As we turn to the pages of the Tailings we find the following gem, which may be justly considered superior to Tennyson's "Eagle:"

THE JAYHAWK.

He grasps the swag with hooking hand,
He sees the stage come overland,
Serene in ambush doth he stand.

The toiling team below him crawls,
He looketh from his mountain walls,
And like a thunderbolt he falls.

He falleth on the good and just,
Their heads he grindeth in the dust,
And then he busteth in their crust!

Among the fugitive pieces, readers of the Bulletin will recognize the following stanzas addressed to "A Fashionable Church" by an Honest Miner. We give the two first verses:

As I gaze on yon church with its porches so grand,
And its towers so tall and so steep,
I think of the earthquake that one day will shake
Its walls to a moldering heap,
And weep
For the harvest these wretches shall reap.

O yes, you may build your disgusting old fane,
And say to your heart, it is well;
But I look below its foundations and know
That underneath that there is hell—
And smell
The sulphurous odors that dwell.

But we cannot consistently admire the line which seems to have been superadded, in its present grammatical inaccuracy:

And yell
With delight when the whole shanty fell.

After inveighing against pride and vanity, the poet concludes somewhat vaguely:

And one-half the world will be damned if they don't,
And the other half damned if they do—
And you,
Proud palace of error, adieu!

The influence of Tennyson on the provincial mind is beautifully and tenderly shewn in the following:

ONE HORSE FLAT.

Pard'ner, leave me here a moment; leave me here and go before;
Leave me here, and while you're absent I'll prospect a little more.

'Tis the place and there's the pine tree where of old the squirrels sat,
Dreary gleams the white quartz tailings lying over One Horse Flat.

One Horse Flat, that in the distance overlooks the Stanislow,
And the Chinese on the river kicking up a bloody row.

O, my claim too long forgotten! O my tunnel, mine no more!
O, the empty, empty ditches, and the rock devoid of ore

In the Spring there comes a blossom on the nose of every Pike,
In the Spring a young man fancies he is sure to make a strike.

In the Spring he lightly gambles, drawing on his future means,
In the Spring he holds two aces, and he bucks agin three queens.

Bill took up the dice and shook 'em with a sweet seraphic smile,
Shook the dice and threw four sixes, and of course raked down the pile.

But he dealt the keards more deftly than was fit in one so young,
And my eyes on all his motions with a mute observance hung.

And I said, "My festive William, speak and speak the truth to me:
How it is when I've two aces, that thou always dost have three?"

Then he turned, his whole cheek flushing—he was taken by surprise—
With a quiet imprecation in regard to his own eyes.

Saying: "I have bid the bower, Pard'ner—I would do thee wrong,
And my boots the king and ten-spot have been holding all along."

Many an evening in our cabin did we sit with flaring dips,
And the spirits mixed together, that we tasted with our lips.

Many an evening with a neighbor did we turn the festive Jack,
Lightly dealt ourselves the bowers from the bottom of the pack.

But why continue the old, old story of misplaced confidence and violated trust. The poet was deceived by his partner, and, in a single game of cut-throat euchre, lost the whole of his claim. Stung by disappointment, he announces his intention to go to Washoe, which is beautifully described as being an "Oasis of sage brush lying in a field of alkali," and affiliate with some Digger squaw:

"I will take some dusky savage for my partner, and I'll eat
The succulent grasshopper, and the luscious locust meat."

But we find ourselves beguiled beyond our usual space. Let our readers purchase the volume and judge for themselves. Agents are now engaged in selling the work in connection with Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup. Price, one set of "Tailings" and one bottle of the syrup, $1 50. A rare chance for investment.

* Tailings: being Rejections of California Verse.

DRAMATIC.

THE week has not been a very startling one in a dramatic way. Christmas brought full houses to all the theatres, the Buislays, in particular, opening the Metropolitan to a rush, which left late comers a very small chance for seeing the wonderful leaps that were performed in the vicinity of the ceiling. As gymnasts, we question whether the Buislays have their equals in the world, and are quite confident that they have no superior. It is a pity that their break-neck balloon feat could not be performed within doors, for it would draw immensely. Their Niagara leap would make Blondin open his eyes; and their performance on what may, indeed, be termed l' eschelle perilleuse is better than that of the Hanlons, excellent as those artists are. The tableaux also are very good, though the terribly long "waits" between scenes are too heavy a weight for the patience of any audience. Of the pantomimes we cannot speak so favorably. To put it mildly, they are bores, and might be omitted to the benefit of the programme. They are badly put upon the stage and badly acted. In the "trick pantomimes," which are rumored as in preparation for next week, we trust that this branch of the business will redeem itself.

Miss Charlotte Crampton made her appearance at Maguire's Opera House, on Christmas evening, to an excellent audience. The play was Lucretia Borgia, Miss Crampton appearing as the amiable Duchess. It is evident, without telling, that the lady is an old actress, for she is faithful to all the traditions of the stage, her gestures and intonations all being of the stage eminently stagey. Her conception of the character of "Lucretia Borgia" is not a good one. In the scene where "Gennaro" is brought before the "Duke," to answer for the mutilation of the Borgian name upon the facade of the palace, her demeanor is more that of a waiting-maid detected in winking at Buttons than that of the calm, self-possessed "Duchess," who could smile and smile, and murder while she smiled. Never a stammer on "Borgia's" lips when once her resolve was taken, never a moment of hesitation, for she was equal to all emergencies, and her excuses were not faltered forth. At times there was a tendency to declamation and attitudinizing, wholly distinct from the workings of passion, and decidedly at variance with the strong but subtle deviltry of that Italian lady's character. But we greatly prefer Miss Crampton feminine to Miss Crampton masculine. The gaberdine of "Shylock" does not become her, neither do the robes of "Hamlet." We should admire the ambition which prompts a lady to attempt characters so entirely out of the feminine role, did it not savor of audacity. A woman's conception of the length and breadth of a man's love, a man's hate, or a man's revenge, must necessarily be amusing, and in this view Mrs. Crampton's "Shylock" and "Hamlet" are studies. But without endorsing Mr. Bandman very emphatically, we must say that we rather prefer his rendition of the two roles mentioned. To make Hamlet, as performed on Thursday evening, complete, carefully preserving the nuities, Boniface should have been cast as "Ophelia." There would then have been little or nothing wanting. By all means we counsel Miss Crampton to abide by the habits and habiliments of her sex, for all beyond, especially in characters which are masculine in their weaknesses as well as in their strength, is dangerous ground. Last evening Miss Crampton was announced as "Marguerite of Burgundy" in La Tour de Nesle. This afternoon The Lady of Lyons will be given. Richard III. in the evening—Miss Crampton as "Richard." If there be not a full house, it will argue a very small degree of curiosity on the part of our population, for to see that character essayed by a woman should well repay the lover of art for walking ten miles. The French Spy is in rehearsal for production on Monday night.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELIST.

THE HAUNTED MAN.

A CHRISTMAS STORY—BY CH-R-S D-C-K-N-S.

CONDENSED BY "BRET."

PART I.

THE FIRST PHANTOM.

DON'T tell me that it wasn't a knocker. I had seen it often enough, and I ought to know. So ought the three o'clock beer, in dirty high-lows, swinging himself over the railing, or executing a demoniacal jig upon the door-step; so ought the butcher, although butchers as a general thing are scornful of such trifles; so ought the postman, to whom knockers of the most extravagant description were merely human weaknesses, that were to be pitied and used. And so ought, for the matter of that, &c., &c., &c.

But then it was such a knocker. A wild, extravagant and utterly incomprehensible knocker. A knocker so mysterious and suspicious that Policeman X. 37, first coming upon it, felt inclined to take it instantly in custody, but compromised with his professional instincts by sharply and sternly noting it with an eye that admitted of no nonsense, but confidently expected to detect its secret yet. An ugly knocker; a knocker with a hard, human face, that was a type of the harder human face within. A human face that held between its teeth a brazen rod. So hereafter, in the mysterious future should be held, &c., &c.

But if the knocker had a fierce human aspect in the glare of day, you should have seen it at night, when it peered out of the gathering shadows and suggested an ambushed figure; when the light of the street lamps fell upon it, and wrought a play of sinister expression in its hard outlines; when it seemed to wink meaningly at a shrouded figure who, as the night fell darkly, crept up the steps and passed into the mysterious house; when the swinging-door disclosed a black passage into which the figure seemed to lose itself and become a part of the mysterious gloom; when the night grew boisterous and the fierce wind made furious charges at the knocker, as if to wrench it off and carry it away in triumph. Such a night as this.

It was a wild and pitiless wind. A wind that had commenced life as a gentle country zephyr, but wandering through manufacturing towns had become demoralized, and reaching the city had plunged into extravagant dissipation and wild excesses. A roystering wind that indulged in Bacchanalian shouts on the street corners, that knocked off the hats from the heads of helpless passengers, and then fulfilled its duties by speeding away, like all young prodigals—to sea.

He sat alone in a gloomy library listening to the wind that roared in the chimney. Around him novels and story-books were strewn thickly; in his lap he held one with its pages freshly cut, and turned the leaves wearily until his eyes rested upon a portrait in its frontispiece. And as the wind howled the more fiercely, and the darkness without fell blacker, a strange and fateful likeness to that portrait appeared above his chair and leaned upon his shoulder. The Haunted Man gazed at the portrait and sighed. The figure gazed at the portrait and sighed too.

"Here again?" said the Haunted Man.

"Here again," it repeated in a low voice.

"Another novel?"

"Another novel."

"The old story?"

"The old story."

"I see a child," said the Haunted Man, gazing from the pages of the book into the fire—"a most unnatural child, a model infant. It is prematurely old and philosophic. It dies in poverty to slow music. It dies surrounded by luxury to slow music. It dies with an accompaniment of golden water and rattling carts to slow music. Previous to its decease it makes a will; it repeats the Lord's prayer, it kisses the 'boofer lady.' That child——"

"Is mine," said the phantom.

"I see a good woman, undersized. I see several charming women, but they are all undersized. They are more or less imbecile and idiotic, but always fascinating and undersized. They wear coquettish caps and aprons. I observe that feminine virtue is invariably below the medium height, and that it is always babyish and infantine. These women——"

"Are mine."

"I see a haughty, proud, and wicked lady. She is tall and queenly. I remark that all proud and wicked women are tall and queenly. That woman——"

"Is mine," said the phantom, wringing its hands.

"I see several things continually impeuding. I observe that whenever an accident, a murder, or death is about to happen, there is something in the furniture, in the locality, in the atmosphere that foreshadows and suggests it years in advance. I cannot say that in real life I have noticed it—the perception of this surprising fact belongs——"

"To me!" said the phantom. The Haunted Man continued, in a despairing tone:

"I see the influence of this in the magazines and daily papers: I see weak imitators rise up and enfeeble the world with senseless formula. I am getting tired of it. It won't do, CHARLES! it won't do!" and the Haunted Man buried his head in his hands and groaned. The figure looked down upon him sternly: the portrait in the frontispiece frowned as he gazed.

"Wretched man," said the phantom, "and how have these things affected you."

"Once I laughed and cried, but then I was younger. Now, I would forget them if I could."

"Have then your wish. And take this with you, man whom I renounce. From this day henceforth you shall live with those whom I displace. Without forgetting me, 'twill be your lot to walk through life as if we had not met. But first you shall survey these scenes that henceforth must be yours. At one to-night, prepare to meet the phantom I have raised. Farewell!"

The sound of its voice seemed to fade away with the dying wind, and the Haunted Man was alone. But the firelight flickered gayly, and the light danced on the walls, making grotesque figures of the furniture.

"Ha, ha!" said the Haunted Man, rubbing his hands gleefully; "now for a whiskey punch and a cigar."

BOOK II.

THE SECOND PHANTOM.

ONE! The stroke of the far off bell had hardly died before the front door closed with a reverberating clang. Steps were heard along the passage; the library door swung open of itself, and the Knocker—yes, the Knocker—slowly strode into the room. The Haunted Man rubbed his eyes—no! there could be no mistake about it—it was the Knocker's face, mounted on a misty, almost imperceptible body. The brazen rod was transferred from its mouth to its right hand, where it was held like a ghostly truncheon.

"It's a cold evening," said the Haunted Man.

"It is," said the Goblin, in a hard, metallic voice.

"It must be pretty cold out there," said the Haunted Man, with vague politeness. "Do you ever—will you—take some hot brandy and water?"

"No," said the Goblin.

"Perhaps you'd like it cold, by way of change?" continued the Haunted Man, correcting himself, as he remembered the peculiar temperature with which the Goblin was probably familiar.

"Time flies," said the Goblin coldly. We have no leisure for idle talk. Come!" He moved his ghostly truncheon toward the window, and laid his hand upon the other's arm. At his touch the body of the Haunted Man seemed to become as thin and incorporeal as that of the Goblin himself, and together they glided out of the window into the black and blowy night.

In the rapidity of their flight the senses of the Haunted Man seemed to leave him. At length they stopped suddenly.

"What do you see?" asked the Goblin.

"I see a battlemented medieval castle. Gallant men in mail ride over the drawbridge, and kiss their gauntleted fingers to fair ladies, who wave their lily hands in return. I see fight and fray and tournament. I hear roaring heralds bawling the charms of delicate women, and shamelessly proclaiming their lovers. Stay. I see a Jewess about to leap from a battlement. I see knightly deeds, violence, rapine, and a good deal of blood. I've seen pretty much the same at Astley's."

"Look again."

"I see purple moors, glens, masculine women, bare-legged men, priggish book worms, more violence, physical excellence, and blood. Always blood—and the superiority of physical attainments."

"And how do you feel now?" said the Goblin.

The Haunted Man shrugged his shoulders. "None the better for being carried back and asked to sympathize with a barbarous age."

The Goblin smiled and clutched his arm: they again sped rapidly through the black night, and again halted.

"What do you see?' said the Goblin.

"I see a barrack room, with a mess table, and a group of intoxicated Celtic officers telling funny stories, and giving challenges to duel. I see a young Irish gentleman capable of performing prodigies of valor. I learn incidentally that the acme of all heroism is the cornetcy of a dragoon regiment. I hear a good deal of French! No, thank you," said the Haunted Man hurriedly, as he stayed the waving hand of the Goblin; "I would rather not go to the Peninsula, and don't care to have a private interview with Napoleon."

Again the Goblin flew away with the unfortunate man, and from a strange roaring below them, he judged they were above the ocean. A ship hove in sight, and the Goblin stayed its flight. "Look," he said, squeezing his companion's arm.

The Haunted Man yawned, "Don't you think, CHARLES, you're rather running this thing into the ground? Of course, it's very moral and instructive, and all that. But ain't there a little too much pantomime about it? Come now!"

"Look!" repeated the Goblin, pinching his arm malevolently. The Haunted Man groaned.

"Oh, of course, I see Her Majesty's ship Arethusa. Of course, I am familiar with her stern First Lieutenant, her eccentric Captain, her one fascinating and several mischievous midshipmen. Of course, I know it's a splendid thing to see all this, and not to be sea-sick. Oh, there the young gentlemen are going to play a trick on the Purser. For God's sake, let us go," and the unhappy man absolutely dragged the Goblin away with him.

When they next halted, it was at the edge of a broad and boundless prairie, in the middle of an oak opening.

"I see," said the Haunted Man, without waiting for his cue, but mechanically, and as if he were repeating a lesson which the Goblin had taught him, "I see the Noble Savage. He is very fine to look at! But I observe under his war paint, feathers and picturesque blanket—dirt, disease, and an unsymmetrical contour. I observe beneath his inflated rhetoric deceit and hypocrisy. Beneath his physical hardihood, cruelty, malice and revenge. The Noble Savage is a humbug. I remarked the same to Mr. Catlin."

"Come," said the phantom.

The Haunted Man sighed, and took out his watch. "Couldn't we do the rest of this another time?"

"My hour is almost spent, irreverent being, but there is yet a chance for your reformation. Come!"

Again they sped through the night, and again halted. The sound of delicious but melancholy music fell upon their ears.

"I see," said the Haunted Man, with something of interest in his manner; "I see an old moss-covered manse beside a sluggish, flowing river. I see weird shapes: witches, Puritans, clergymen, little children, judges, mesmerized maidens, moving to the sound of melody that thrills me with its sweetness and purity. But, although carried along its calm and evenly-flowing current, the shapes are strange and frightful: an eating lichen gnaws at the heart of each; not only the clergyman, but witch, maiden, judge, and Puritan, all wear Scarlet Letters of some kind burned upon their hearts. I am fascinated and thrilled, but I feel a morbid sensitiveness creeping over me. I—I beg your pardon." The Goblin was yawning frightfully. "Well, perhaps, we had better go."

"One more, and the last," said the Goblin. They were moving home. Streaks of red were beginning to appear in the eastern sky. Along the banks of the blackly flowing river; by moorland and stagnant fens, by low houses, clustering close to the water's edge, like strange mollusks, crawled upon the beach to dry; by misty black barges, the more misty and indistinct seen through its mysterious veil, the river fog was slowly rising. So rolled away and rose from the heart of the Haunted Man, etc., etc.

They stopped before a quaint mansion of red brick. The Goblin waved its hand without speaking.

"I see," said the Haunted Man, "a gay drawing room. I see my old friends of the club, of the college, of society, even as they lived and moved. I see the gallant and unselfish men, whom I have loved, and the snobs whom I have hated. I see strangely mingling with them, and now and then blending with their forms, our old friends Dick Steele, Addison, and Congreve. I observe, though, that these gentlemen have a habit of getting too much in the way. The royal standard of Queen Anne, not in itself a beautiful ornament, is rather too prominent in the picture. The long, drawn galleries of black oak, the formal furniture, the old portraits are picturesque, but depressing. The house is damp. I enjoy myself better here on the lawn, where they are getting up a Vanity Fair. See, the bell rings, the curtain is rising, the puppets are brought out for a new play. Let me see."

The Haunted Man was pressing forward in his eagerness, but the hand of the Goblin stayed him, and pointing to his feet, he saw between him and the rising curtain, a new-made grave. And bending above the grave in passionate grief, the Haunted Man beheld the phantom of the previous night.

* * * * * * *

The Haunted Man started, and—woke. The bright sunshine streamed into the room. The air was sparkling with frost. He ran joyously to the window and opened it. A small boy saluted him with "Merry Christmas." The Haunted Man instantly gave him a Bank of England note. "How much like Tiny Tim, Tom and Bobby that boy looked—bless my soul, what a genius this Dickens has!"

A knock at the door, and Boots entered.

"Consider your salary doubled instantly. Have you read David Copperfield?"

"Yezzur."

"Your salary is quadrupled. What do you think of the Old Curiosity Shop?"

The man instantly burst into a torrent of tears, and then into a roar of laughter.

"Enough! Here are five thousand pounds. Open a porter-house, and call it 'Our Mutual Friend.' Huzza! I feel so happy!" And the Haunted Man danced about the room.

And so, bathed in the light of that blessed sun, and yet glowing with the warmth of a good action, the Haunted Man, haunted no longer, save by those shapes which make the dreams of children beautiful, reseated himself in his chair, and finished Our Mutual Friend.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage,
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

HOLIDAY GOODS,
AND WHERE TO BUY THEM.

BOOKS.
H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
Oak Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIQUORS.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

SEWING MACHINES.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.
Office, 436 California street.
J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.
A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!
DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,
THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,
AND THE
BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA
Published
EVERY SATURDAY MORNING
AT
532 MERCHANT STREET,
BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
A. A. SHICKNEY. J. P. BOGARDUS. WM. J. BINGHAM.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the
BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
But also as being
THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!
THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE
Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press in Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of
THE CALIFORNIAN,
and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not
EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL
on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No. 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO

STEAM COMMUNICATION
WITH THE
SANDWICH ISLANDS.
THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship
AJAX,
Two Thousand Tons Burthen,
CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - Commander,
FOR HONOLULU,
ON SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 6, 1866,
AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and from others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.
se23-de16 tf J. WHITNEY, Jr., President

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.
JUST RECEIVED,
Per last Steamer, a magnificent collection of
Fancy Glove and Odor Boxes,
Fine Fans, Opera Glasses,
Novelties in Back Combs,
Ornamental Cigar Stands,
Writing Desks, Albums,
DRESSING CASES, PARIS JEWELRY,
REAL LACE COLLARS, SLEEVES AND HANDKERCHIEFS,
REAL CHANTILLY AND POINT BARBES, VEILS, VALENCIENNE COLLARS, HANDKERCHIEFS, Etc.
Fashionable Cloaks and Shawls
Received by every Steamer from New York. Also,
CLOAKS AND LADIES' UNDERGARMENTS
MADE TO ORDER,
AT S. ROSENBLATT'S
PALACE OF FASHION,
123 AND 125 MONTGOMERY STREET,
de2 Opposite Occidental Hotel.

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,
For Wholesale and Retail Trade,
ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,
AT QUINCY HALL,
NOS. 545, 547, 549,
Washington Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
se30 3m

A MAGNIFICENT
CHRISTMAS PRESENT.
THE SUPERB NATIONAL PICTURE, by Darley, of WASHINGTON IRVING AND HIS FRIENDS. Prices: Print $15; Proof, $30; Artist's Proof, $50; or framed complete—Print, $20; Proof, $40; Artist's Proof, $100
This is NOT the cheap Lithograph called "Great Authors."
H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.
JUVENILE BOOKS, Picture Books, Primers, Sunday School Books, Books for Prizes, Cloth Picture Books, Games and Blocks for Children, Puzzles, Card Pictures, Fairy Albums, Books for Girls, Books for Amusements, Books for Boys.
H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

CHRISTMAS STATIONERY.
DESKS, PORTFOLIOS, Chess, Backgammon, Dominoes, Color Boxes, Cabinets, Scrap Books, Diaries 1866, Inkstands, Pocket Knives, Pencil Cases, Pocket Books, Papier Mache Goods.
H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS.
FIVE HUNDRED STYLES at the lowest prices.
H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

GIFT BOOKS.
AN ENDLESS VARIETY, at very low prices.
H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

FINE BOOKS FROM LONDON.
POETRY, SCIENCE and GENERAL LITERATURE, in elegant bindings, with Photographic Illustrations, and plain and colored steel engravings.
H. H. BANCROFT & CO.,
de16 Montgomery and Merchant streets.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.
We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.
We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.
Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street.
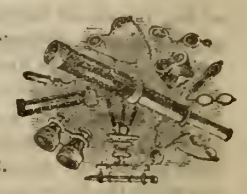
NEW YORK.

ELEGANT HOLIDAY PRESENTS.
USEFUL, ORNAMENTAL, AND INSTRUCTIVE.


FINE GOLD SPECTACLES and EYE GLASSES,
SETS OF IVORY
TABLE CUTLERY,
Stereoscopic Views of California;
(OVER ONE THOUSAND NEW VIEWS.)
Richly Mounted Opera Glasses
For sale by
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
317 and 319 Montgomery street.
CATALOGUES with Price List, FREE. de9 1m

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
J. PEIRCE,
415, 417, and 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Was awarded the
FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM
FOR
Furniture,
AND THE
FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM
FOR THE
BEST UPHOLSTERY.
The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.
Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the
ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.
A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.
J. PEIRCE,
de16 3m Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street, SAN FRANCISCO.

HILL'S HAIR DYE.
This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For sale by
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO

No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.

(In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.)

First and Highest Premium

TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.

In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilxcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.

First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,

AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,

111 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets,

San Francisco.

---

25 PER CENT. SAVED

IS 50 PER CENT. MADE!

PURCHASERS OF Toys and Fancy Goods, can save 25 per cent. by buying of

Feldbush & Co.,

307 CALIFORNIA STREET.

THEY ARE NOW RECEIVING their importations of

FALL GOODS,

per steamer and sailing vessels from all parts of the world.

For sale by the case or dozen. Also 100 cases of assorted Toys. FIELDUSH & CO., 307 California street

RETAIL STORE, 207 Montgomery street, (Russ House Block.) oc28 3m

---

TRIAL IS THE BEST AND Surest Test of Merit!

OVER TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND (200,000)

HAVE BEEN SOLD

Since they were Introduced to Public Notice,

F. L. TILESTON, Agent,

Corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, SAN FRANCISCO.

se30 3m

R. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

SACRAMENTO AND SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco, and Sacramento City.

oc28

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Department, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11 3m

---

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street, San Francisco.

jy29-3m

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street, Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,

jy29 3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3.500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - - -	6.500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,

No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.

SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14 3m

OVERSTOCKED! AND MUST SELL!

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES.

se23-3m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

se30 3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour, thereafter until 11.30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

ITEMS FOR THE LADIES.

LADIES BECOMING "HOTSPURS."

A CORRESPONDENT of a Dundee paper thus remonstrates: "A doctor's hack or a cab horse used to be considered the most miserable of the equine race; but I think, judging from the tone of some letters which have lately appeared in your paper from correspondents of the gentler sex, ladies' horses most often share that unenviable distinction with them. Not long since a letter appeared from a lady, asking for information as to the most effectual instrument of punishment in the shape of a spur, and several answers have appeared, all recommending active treatment. One says that spurs are generally worn by ladies, and that the prancing and curvetting, so much admired in Rotten Row, are caused by the sting of the spur being applied to one side, and the light but severe whips, made by modern ingenuity for ladies' use, to the other. Then, again, rowel spurs, three-eighths of an inch in length, sharp and thin in their points, and box spurs, with a single prong three-quarters of an inch long, are recommended as effectual, which, no doubt, they are. I only pity the animal with a lady hard of heart and pitiless of heel seated on his back with such instruments of torture at command. Another fair correspondent advises the spur to be kept well into the horse's side, and a sharp bit with a short rein, to be held tight at the same time, to produce the much-desired prancing. Now this is simply wanton cruelty, such as a man would be ashamed of advocating. How, then, can ladies find pleasure in practicing, and advising others to practice, such painful treatment upon their dumb slaves?"

BRIDE'S PREROGATIVE.

SOME years ago, a ludicrous incident happened at Vienna. The emperor was interrupted in the midst of a cabinet council by a message from the empress, who, it was said, wanted him immediately. On going to her majesty's apartments, she threw herself before him in an imploring attitude, and begged him that she might be allowed the extraordinary privilege of putting on her own stockings. The high dames of the court, it seems, whose duty it was to perform that function, insisted upon discharging it, though, as their imperial mistress represented, "they tickled her" when doing so in a way that she could not endure. The young princess, whom fortune had raised to be the partner of the Kaiser's throne, had been brought up in a simple and sensible manner, and really could not see why the hands God had given them should be less useful to imperial and royal personages than to any other people. The emperor yielded, doubtless to the consternation of the ladies of the bedchamber, who saw in this innovation a precedent fraught with danger to the most hallowed institutions of the monarchy.

WHAT EXTREMES OF RIBBON MEAN.

"THEY say" that one of the latest fashions with the ladies is wearing long ends of narrow ribbon around the neck. Few of the uninitiated know the significance of the same. When they wear the ends hanging in front, it means that the lady is married; over the right shoulder, that she is engaged; down the back, that she has a "feller" coming to see her, but she isn't engaged; over the left shoulder, it means, "Fellers, come follow me." If she does not wear any, it means that she is engaged, and don't wish to have anything to do with "any other feller."

PROFESSOR AGASSIZ, while collecting insects along the shores of Lake Sebago, in Maine, observed a couple of catfish, which, at his approach, left the shore suddenly, and returned to the deeper water. Examining the place which the fishes had left, he discovered a nest among the water-plants, with a number of little tadpoles. In a few moments the two fishes returned anxiously toward the nest, and came within six or eight feet of where Professor Agassiz stood. They were evidently not in search of food, and he became convinced that they were seeking the protection of their young. Large stones, thrown repeatedly into the middle of the nest after the fishes had returned to it, only frightened them away for a brief period, and they returned to the spot within ten or fifteen minutes. This was repeated four or five times, with the same result. This negatives the assertion made by some naturalists—that no fishes are known to take any care of their offspring.

BULWER says that poverty is only an idea, in nine cases out of ten. Some men, with ten thousand dollars a year, suffer more from want of means than others with three hundred. The reason is that the richer man has artificial wants. His income is ten thousand, and he suffers enough from being dunned for unpaid debts to kill a sensitive man. A man who earns a dollar a day, and does not run in debt, is the happier of the two. Very few people who have never been rich will believe this, but it is as true as the gospel. There are thousands with princely incomes who never know a moment's peace, because they live above their means. There is really more happiness in the world among working people than among these who are called rich.

[For the Californian.]

ABSENCE.

I MISS thee when the evening hour
Comes with its sober shade of twilight gray;
And when the stars of heaven assert their power,
'Tis for thy presence that I watch and pray.

'Tis then I miss thee: ah! but ask me when
I do not pine for thee; thy spirit gleams
Along my daily path where'er I stray,
And through the misty shadow of my dreams.

Such a sweet pleading measure hath thy voice,
I muse upon it like remembered chords;
E'en as lute music makes the heart rejoice,
So comes the haunting witchery of thy words.

And like the swells of some cathedral tone,
Which ever through the arches plaintive go,
So the sad spirit of my heart alone,
In search of thee, is wand'ring to and fro.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18, 1865. L. S. D. L.

WEDLOCK, AFTER DEATH.

IN Bombay, recently, occurred the following strange ceremony—the principals being a living woman and a dead man, of the Canmattee caste. The relation that had existed between the living and the dead was of a left-handed nature. They had lived together for many years as man and wife, when, after suffering from a febrile attack for only four days, the man died: "Agreeably to the peculiar custom of their caste, it was imperative, ere the corpse could be removed for interment, that the sacred rites of matrimony should be performed. The sad intelligence was soon communicated to the neighboring residents, and the loud and vehement hammering of tom-toms had the desired effect of collecting a host of friends and acquaintances, and a fluctuating stream of passers-by to the spot. A gooroo, or priest, being summoned, and the necessary preparations for the celebration of the nuptials being hurriedly completed, the ceremony commenced. The inanimate 'form divine' was placed against the outer wall of the verandah of the house, in a sitting posture, attired like a bridegroom, and the face and hands were besmeared with liquid turmeric. The woman, also, was clothed like a bride, and adorned with the usual tinsel ornaments over the face, which, as well as the arms and the drapery, were daubed over with yellow. She sat opposite the dead, now addressing it in light and unmeaning words—as is customarily done on such occasions—and then chewing nits of dry cocoanuts and squirting it on the face. And thus the ceremony proceeded and continued for three or four hours. At length, as the sun was nearing the horizon, the nuptial ceremony was brought to a close, and the preparations for the interment commenced. The dead was divested of its bridal attire, then bathed, and finally laid upon a bier and covered with a cloth of silk. The face was next rubbed over with some red powder, and in the mouth were placed some betel leaves. The widowed bride then looked her last at the shrouded form, when, amid agonizing shrieks and deafening tom-toming, the bier was lifted up and the funeral cortege proceeded in the direction of Sion. One man—a near relative of the deceased, I presume—preceded the corpse, throwing, at intervals, a handful of pice to the right and to the left, which were being being eagerly picked up by a troop of little urchins."

A RUSSIAN paper describes a recent Mohammedan execution at Batum, in Asia, which the French journals characterize as "truly patriarchal" in its simplicity. The murderer was brought into the market-place, and made to kneel with his head on the block, while his kinsmen appealed to the relatives of his victim for the mercy which, according to the Turkish law, they have the power to extend at the last moment. All consented to the pardon but the grandmother of the murdered man, and she failed to find among her kindred any who would be the criminal's executioner. At last a stranger in the crowd consented to assume the office for twenty piastres. Advancing to the condemned, he encouraged him with the hope that when the grandmother saw the naked knife displayed she would relent, and then, seizing him by the hair, and crying, "Look, old woman!" struck off his head at a blow.

JOAN OF ARC.—A society of French antiquarians are striving to prove that Joan of Arc was not burned at all, but was married, had children, and died quietly at Metz. They have published one extract from the Mercure Galant, of October, 1686, edited by Vize. We hear read that one Father Viguier, of the Oratory, discovered at Metz, and had transcribed before a notary public, a manuscript, which states that in 1436, Joan came to Metz, where her two brothers met her, and at once recognized her, though they thought she had been burned long ago. By-and-bye, she marries Mons. des Amoises, chevalier; and Father Vignier is lucky enough to find the very marriage contract, dated 1436. The Society "Du Banquet Joanne d'Arc" means to publish all its discoveries as soon as it has discovered one little missing link.

HOW TO BREATHE.—There is one rule to be observed in taking exercise by walking—the very best form in which it can be taken by the young and able bodied of all ages—and that is, never to allow the action of respiration to be carried on through the mouth. The nasal passages are clearly the medium through which respiration was, by our Creator, designed to be carried on. "God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life" previous to his becoming a living creature. The difference in the exhaustion of strength by a long walk with the mouth firmly closed, and respiration carried on through the nostrils instead of through the mouth, is inconceivable to those who have never tried the experiment. Indeed, this mischievous and really unnatural habit of carrying on the work of inspiration and expiration through the mouth, instead of through the nasal passages, is the true origin of almost all the diseases of the throat and lungs, as bronchitis, congestion, asthma, and even consumption itself. That excessive perspiration to which some individuals are so liable in their sleep, which is so weakening to the body, is solely the effect of such persons sleeping with their mouths unclosed. And the same unpleasant and exhaustive results arise to the animal system from walking with the mouth open, instead of, when not engaged in conversation, preserving the lips in a state of firm, but quiet compression. As the heat and velocity of the blood through the lungs depend almost entirely upon the quantity of the atmospheric air inhaled with each inspiration, and it is unavoidable that it should be taken in, in volume, by the mouth, while it can only be supplied in moderate quantities, and just in sufficient proportion to serve the purpose of a healthy respiratory action, while supplied through the nostrils, it is clear that the body must be much lighter and cooler, and the breathing much freer and easier, when the latter course rather than the former is the one adopted. Children ought never to be allowed to stand or walk with their mouths open; for, besides the vacant appearance it gives to the countenance, it is the certain precursor of coughs, colds, and sore throats.—Methodist.

BLAISDELL'S grand moving panorama of a tour through Ireland will open for public exhibition, at Maguire's Academy of Music, on Monday night next. Those who have seen portions of this work speak of it in the highest terms. The scenes are from drawings made on the spot by W. H. Bartlett, whose delineations of European and American scenery have made his name famous on both continents. The panorama occupies 11,000 square feet of canvas and has been produced at the expense of $6,000. The scenery of the "Gem of the Sea" is celebrated the world over for its variety and beauty, and famed in song and story. A list of the principal scenes is published in our advertising columns. Madame Blaisdell, the talented Miss Clara, and the Swiss Bell Rings will give variety to the entertainment by vocal and instrumental music. Mr Warwick will give a descriptive lecture.

SAMPSON LOW, SON & MARSTON are not to be outdone. They have caught the magazine fever. "Praying for a fair wind of popular favor, the Argosy will start on the first day of December, in this year of grace 1865, freighted with contributions from some of the first writers of the day." So the firm named announced, and doubtless their literary craft is by this time fairly under way.

IF your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

DANGER AHEAD; BE WARNED IN TIME.—Have you a slight cough? If so, do not neglect it, thinking it of no consequence. Consumption begins in this way, therefore, be warned in time, and use the only remedy that will at once relieve you of that pain in the chest, and stop that hacking cough. Newell's Pulmonary Syrup never fails to give speedy and permanent relief. Don't be afraid of using it freely; it contains no nauseating or deleterious drug.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

THE MASQUERADE.—The next local sensation will be the Grand Masquerade Ball, at Maguire's Academy of Music, under the management of the "Alemannians," a social society of this city. The ball will be given on the evening of the 13th January next.

MESSRS. WM. H. FINCH & CO., 133 Montgomery street, the appointed agents for Weed's celebrated ladies' shoes, have the best stock of ladies' fine shoes in this city. Their show window is something worth looking at, and is a very fair "onetropping" of the stock within.

THOSE wanting fancy dresses for masquerades, parties, or theatrical entertainments, will find the address of E. Campioni, costumer for Signorita Brambilla during the late opera season, in our advertising columns.

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco.

Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality.

They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland.

Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

TO POOR WRITERS.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babbittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. PELTON,
Superintendent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more evident merits.

JOHN SWETT, Supt. Pub. Instruction.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the bidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Coheu, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

THE LATEST NEWS!—Haskell & Co. are selling cheaper than the cheapest; 6 pounds Crushed Sugar for $1; 9 pounds Brown Sugar for $1; 3½ pounds Green Coffee, $1; 5 pounds Currants, $1; 4 pounds New Raisins, $1; New Citron, 40 cents per pound; 8 pounds Canary seed for $1; 10 pounds Soda Crackers, $1; 8 pounds Santa Clara Butter Crackers, $1; good Oolong Tea, 75 cents; Japan Teas, 75 to 90 cents, our Mandarin Oolong of the new crop, $1; the best Comet Tea, $1 10, or $1 per pound by the box; Mandarin Mixture (green and black,) 1; at the Mammoth Tea Store, fronting on Market and Sutter streets, below the Market. ☞ Goods delivered promptly. Open Evenings until after the Holidays.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for best the card pictures, and large photographs.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldbush & Co., 307 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

DRY GOODS!

NEW GOODS FOR THE

HOLIDAYS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

Have received by late Steamer from Europe,

AN IMMENSE STOCK OF

ELEGANT DRESS GOODS

SUITABLE FOR

Holiday Presents!

All of which they will exhibit

AT THEIR RETAIL STORE,

And will offer them all

AT PRICES THAT WILL

DEFY COMPETITION!!

DRESS GOODS.

SILKS, in rich Moire Antique, Brocade, Plaid, Plain and Chine, in all the most Fashionable colors, Black Silk of manufacture of "Bonnet," "Bischuff and Tonson," from $1 00 to $8 00 per yard.

PIM'S super. Irish Poplins and Tahinets in all colors.

MERINOS, in all the most beautiful colors, at 75c, $1 00, $1 25, $1 50, $1 75 per yard.

EMPRESS CLOTHS and OTTOMAN CLOTHS, in Plain, Striped and Chine, manufactured expressly to order.

MOURNING GOODS.

In Bombazines, Cashmeres, Merinos, Tamise, Poplins, Empress and Ottoman Cloths, Silks, Alpacas, Prints, Ginghams, etc.

SHAWLS.

Super. Broche Long and Square Shawls, from $10 to $150, in all colors and new designs.

FINE FRENCH CAMEL'S HAIR SHAWLS, in Long and Square, from $50 to $400, all in new and elegant designs. Plaid Wool do., in long and square.

CLOAKS.

500 Beautiful stylish Garments direct from Paris, comprising the richest ever brought to this city.

HOSIERY.

For Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, of every description.

LACES AND EMBROIDERIES.

CHANTILLY VEILS, all prices and new designs.

CAMBRAY VEILS, from $2 50 to $5 00.

CHANTILLY LACES, all widths.

ELEGANT CHANTILLY FLOUNCES.

DENTELES de Valencienne et Applique.

APPLIQUE and Point de Venise Collars at $2 00, $2 50, $3 00, $5 00, &c., &c.

POINT D'ALENCON and Point Duchesse Sleeves and Collars.

DENTELLES de Guipre, all widths and patterns.

A Beautiful Assortment of Linen Sets,

PLAIN AND EMBROIDERED.

Embroidery Bands, Edgings, Insertions, Jaconet, and Dimity Bands.

KID GLOVES.

2000 doz. Alexander's best, at $1 25 per pair.

ALSO,

AT REDUCED PRICES,

COTTON SHEETING and SHIRTING, of all the best brands.

4,000 DRESSES DE LAINE, best quality, at $3 00 per dress.

10,000 EMPRESS CLOTH DRESSES, from $3 00 to $10 00 per dress.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

de 1m NO. 9. LICK HOUSE.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—MRS. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and militar at the shortest notice; also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. MRS. D. NORCROSS' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

Pine street, near Montgomery.

Grand Masquerade Ball!

BY THE

ALEMANNIA,

AT MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

SATURDAY EVENING, JAN. 13, 1866.

On which occasion the parquette will be floored over level with the stage, and the whole covered with canvas. Prizes will be given to the best Lady and Gentlemen Masks, to be awarded by a committee selected from the audience.

A splendid band of music has been engaged, and no expense will be spared to make this the most brilliant affair of the season. Tickets to be had of the committee:

L. Hecht, Jr., 417 Sacramento street.
L. Schwarzschild, 320 Battery street.
A. Wangenheim, S.E. cor. California and Sansome.
C. Colman, S.W. corner Washington & Montgomery. S. H. Stern. de23-4t

---

1866. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF

FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTABLISHMENT at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. dc3-3m

---

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents. Corner of Pine and Sansome sts. jo10-6

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

Tuis Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations

INDUCEMENTS.

☞The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days.....2
Twelve Days.....3
Twenty Days.....1
Thirty Days.....5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16-3m San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

DEC. 30, - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

MONDAY, JANUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON MONDAY, - - - - JANUARY 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published (oc28) by M. GRGIO 'AY Clay street.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Building, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRENT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary.
mb25-3m

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life

INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26-1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half-way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiselessness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 1m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.

CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

WE ARE NOT GIVING AWAY!

AT 506 MARKET STREET,

Extending Through to No. 7 Sutter street,

HOGS' SPARE RIBS, 5 cents per pound;
Hogs' Kidneys, 6 cents per pound;
Pigs' Feet, 5 cents per pound;
Lean Meat for Sausages, 7 cents per pound;
Rib Roast, 12½ cents per pound;
Pork Chops, 15 cents per pound;
Pigs' Tenderloins, 15 cents per pound.

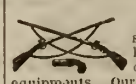
The above are cut from fat grain-fed hogs, killed at our pork-house every day, and are better and cheaper than at any other place in this city.

Mutton! Mutton! Mutton!

From 4 to 7 cents per pound—KILLED EVERY DAY, from sheep fed on our own ranches in the country, and, for that reason, we are enabled to sell the best Mutton for about HALF THE PRICE charged by any other butchers in San Francisco.

WILSON & STEVENS,
se30-6 No. 506 Market St., and No. 7 Sutter St.

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. H. WARD & SON,
NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca
je30-3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - $10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - 11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - 2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, - $75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

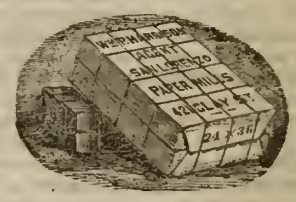
Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m



NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,

AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,

SAN FRANCISCO

Corner of Bush and Powell streets.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.

oc14 3m

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to

jy1 REV. P. I GREY, President

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

se16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT AMERICAN

PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800

PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,

no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,

a28 44 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled. H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.) Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.

no11 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAMES E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS: That I, BRIDGET STANNAH, wife of WILLIAM STANNAH, intend to make application to the Twelfth District Court of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on the

23d day of December, A. D. 1865, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day,

or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, at the court room of said Court, in said city and county, for an order of said Court permitting her to carry on business in her own name and on her own account—the nature of the business to be carried on by virtue of such order being that of keeping a boarding and lodging house, and purchasing lots and houses to be used and occupied in that business, and erecting houses therefor. That for this purpose I am desirous of availing myself of the benefit of An Act to authorize married women to transact business in their own name as sole traders, approved April 12th, 1852, and of the acts amendatory thereof.

BRIDGET STANNAH.

W. C. BURNETT, Attorney for petitioner—Office, 636 Clay street. nov25

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

TOYS, REGARDLESS OF COST!

KOHLER SELLING OFF!

THE ENDLESS VARIETY OF

Toys and Fancy Articles,

IN KOHLER'S

Washington Street Store,

(NO. 620,)

MUST BE SOLD AT ANY PRICE,

BETWEEN THIS AND CHRISTMAS, AND

THE BUSINESS CLOSED UP!

TO RENT—The Store now occupied by

A. KOHLER.

de2

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & C

my28 624 Clay stree San

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, DEC. 30TH,
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE:

THE LADY OF LYONS!

This Evening, December 30,

Miss Charlotte Crampton,

G. C. BONIFACE, HARRY JACKSON,
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,
And Every Member of the Popular Company,
Will appear in

RICHARD III.

Duke of Gloster.....Miss Charlotte Crampton

MONDAY NIGHT, JAN 1ST,

New Year's Night Festival!

On which occasion, the Grand Military Spectacular Drama entitled

THE FRENCH SPY!

Will be produced.

Henrie St. Alme.....Miss Crampton

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store.

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.
I do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30 3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on

Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE
Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

OPENING NIGHT!

MONDAY.....JAN. 1ST. 1866.

BLAISDELL'S
CELEBRATED PAINTING,
THE HIBERNICON!
OR,
A TOUR THROUGH IRELAND!

Painted on 11,000 square feet of canvas, and at a cost of $6,000, from Pen and Pencil Drawings made on the spot by

W. H. BARTLETT, ESQ.,

whose reputation as an artist has been made world-wide by his graceful and truthful delineations of the scenery of America, Switzerland, and the Bosphorus.

GRAND MOVING PANORAMA
OF THE
BEAUTIES AND ANTIQUITIES
OF THAT FAR-FAMED
GREEN ISLE OF THE WEST,
IN
THREE PARTS AND FORTY SCENES,
EMBRACING

Dublin Bay,
Killiney Hill,
Killiney Bay,
Carrickfergus Castle,
Belfast Lough,
Carrick-a-Ried,
Giant's Causeway,
Londonderry,
A Pattern in Connemara,
Seven Churches of Glenconnoise, on the Shannon;
The River Shannon,
Limerick,
Castle of Limerick,
Old Baal's Bridge, Limerick;
Rock of Cashel,
Cormac's Chapel, (Interior view, Day and Night Scene;)
Holy Cross Abbey,
Quay of Waterford,
Glengariff and Glengariff Inn,
Innisfallen, Lakes Killarney;
Kilkenny Castle,
Ross Castle, Lakes Killarney;
Upper Lake Killarney,
Lower Lake Killarney,
Cove of Cork and River;
Natural Bridge, Killkee;
Head of the Killeries,
Howth Hill and Castle,
Round Tower of Clondalkin,
Dunkerry Cave;
Round Tower and Seven Churches of Glendelaugh, etc., etc.

MADAME JULIA BLAISDELL,
SOLO HARPIST;
MISS CLARA,
The interesting IRISH BALLADIST, and the
SWISS BELL-RINGERS,
Will appear in conjunction with the Painting, each evening, with an ELABORATE DESCRIPTIVE LECTURE,
BY J. H. WARWICK, ESQ.

GRAND MATINEE ON SATURDAY, at 2 o'clock, for Schools and Family Parties.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....75 cents.
Family Circle.....50 cents.
No extra charge for reserved seats. de30 tf

BLOOD PURIFIER.

LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

The best Blood Purifier yet known. It expels all Mercurial and Constitutional Diseases, and gives Health and Strength.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
de19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

E. CAMPIONI,
COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,
(A few doors above Kearney,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30 3m

FIRE DEPARTMENT BALL.

POSTPONEMENT.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the Fire Department Ball, in accordance with the request of many friends, and in order to perfect every arrangement deemed necessary for the success of said Ball, have POSTPONED the same until
THURSDAY EVENING.....JAN. 18TH.
By order of the Executive Committee.

THE SECOND ANNUAL
Ball of the Fire Department,
Will be given at
UNION HALL,
ON THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 18.

No care or expense will be spared to make it the grandest and most fashionable Ball of the season.

MANAGERS.

Governor F F Low,	Hon Ogden Hoffman,
Maj-Gen H. W. Halleck,	" Milton S Latham,
" I McDowell,	" S H Dwinelle,
" J F Miller,	" Thos B Shannon,
Col R C Drum,	" Frank Soule,
Com Selim Woodworth,	" R F Perkins,
Maj-Gen L H Allen,	" Wm J Shaw
Chas de Cazotte,	R H Sinton,
Louis McLane,	Wm. Alvord,
J Whitney, Jr,	J H Baird,
I W Raymond,	Wm F Babcock,
Chas B Polhemus,	Henry Bigelow,
Eugene L Sullivan,	A Austin,
J Mora Moss,	S C Hastings,
R B Swain,	Camilo Martin,
E W Burr,	Maj A D Grimwood,
S P Dewey,	Abel Guy,
James Lick,	Wm B Johnston,
Nicholas Larco,	Geo W Gibbs,
Lelund Stanford,	Hall McAllister,
Joseph P Hodge,	Henry B Platt,
B F Lowe,	M Livingston,
James Bowman,	Samuel M Wilson,
D O Mills,	Francisco Sanjurjo,
Lafayette Maynard,	Lewis Leland,
F L A Pioche,	Louis Scellier,
Jos G Eastland,	Alpheus Bull,
Ira P Rankin,	John S Henning,
Henry Carlton, Jr,	A Seligman,
John B Felton,	Michael Skelly,
Samuel Brannan,	A Coleman,
R H Magill,	Wm H Tillinghast,
Geo C Boardman,	Joseph Austin,
David Scannell,	John H Gardiner,
R B Woodward,	Wm P Taaffe,
O Livermore,	W H L Barnes,
A L Tubbs,	Henry Voorman,
Marcus D Boruck,	Dr A J Bowie,
W Lane Booker,	Edward S Spear,
Eugene Casserly,	Wm. McKibbeu,
Oliver Eldridge,	Michael Castle,
H M Newhall,	John Parrott,
Joseph A Donoboe,	Wm C Talbot,
Wm C Ralston,	Erwin Davis,
Wm M Leut,	Fred'k MacCrellish,
James Otis,	H H Haight,
R. J. Vanderwater,	Maj John Stratman,
Caleb T Fay,	James H Cutter,
Martin R Roberts,	Henry Burriolhet,
James R Bolton,	John A. McGlynn,
W E Barron,	W W Haley,
S R Harris,	John J Kelly,
Morris Spyer,	Chas. R Peters,
Alfred Barstow,	Claus Spreckles,
R C Ferguson,	David Stern,
Geo H Howard,	G J Byrne,
Elie Lazard,	F W Macondray,
Edward J. Pringle,	John O Earl,
John H Saunders,	Emanuel Berri,
Jos W Winans,	Fred'k Billings,
James Bell,	E T Peuse,
E W Leonard,	Louis Cohn,
S. J. Hensley,	Thos Tobin,
Geo B Gammans,	H Heyneman,
S H Parker,	Horace W. Carpenter,
Col Wm Harney,	M M Henston,
A H Titcomb,	Wm G Badger,
M C Hillyer,	Louis Schloss,
Frank McCoppin,	Henry G Langley,
John Hewston, Jr,	A J Houghtaling,
J C L. Wadsworth,	W W Stow,
Joseph Pierce,	W B Farwell,
C F Mebius,	John T Doyle,
Chas Walcott Brooks,	Warren R Payne,
Albert Miller,	Dr Joseph Haine,
J G Kittie,	Robert Cushing,
Jonathan Hunt,	Peter Donahue,
John Middleton,	James L Fink,
C Adolphe Low,	T McCarthy.

☞ The number of Tickets to be sold is limited; they are not transferable, and none will be sold at the door. Ladies' invitations can be procured, free of charge, on application.

TICKETS (including Supper) TEN DOLLARS.

PIANO SCHOOL,
ON THE EUROPEAN PLAN,
At the South Park Institute.

MISS FLORENCE JAMES, PRINCIPAL.

IN CONNECTION with this popular and excellent Young Ladies' Seminary there will open, about January 3-1, 1866, a Piano School, on the European Plan—for first beginners as well as for advanced players. The great advantage on this plan will be a reduction of about one-half the usual price, and a thorough training, both theoretical and practical. The Musical Department will be under the directorship of Mr. GUSTAVE A. SCOTT, Organist of Cavalry Church, whose long experience in Teaching both in private and in classes, will secure to pupils a rapid advancement in the study of Music.

The Music Rooms are comfortable and convenient, and the Pianos used from the best manufacturers.

For particulars, call at the Institute, Nos. 55 and 56 South Park. de30 1m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BOOKS.
H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street

GROCERS.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimberg, 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgomery and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ET'.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgomery.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.

SALOONS.
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

SEWING MACHINES.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

CALIFORNIA
COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,
For Boarding and Day Pupils,
Nos. 64, 66, 68 and 70 Silver street.

THE NEXT TERM of this Institute will commence Wednesday, Jan. 3d. Catalogues may be obtained by addressing (de30) MISS M. LAMMOND, Principal.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,
54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 2d of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. de30

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have purchased the Eating House known as "Richards'" Restaurant, situate on Clay street, one door below Montgomery. The restaurant will be repaired and refitted throughout, and will be opened to the public on Wednesday morning, Dec. 27th.

C. H. BRICKWEDEL,
de23 H. F. HEGELER.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 6.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 6, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:

Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
The Outside Lands.
The President's Message.
Bull Fighting.
Crowding the Condemned.
Editorial Paragraphs.

AMUSEMENTS:

Theatrical Events and Announcements.

SELECTED:

Two Days of Battle.
Topham and Other Strong Men.
The Testament; or, Burning a Will.
Philosophical Puzzles.
The Closed Staircase.
Big Bones.
The Harp that Once, etc.
Old Friends with New Faces.
The Bachelor's Dream.
Good Night.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, January 6th, 1866.

THREE sixes at the first throw! See them there in the date line at the head of this column.

How brusquely the new year bursts in on one! There is a sort of a

"Whose pin here since I'se pin gone?"

air about its entrance, and we can easily fancy that the brass band is close at our heels.

It is sixes that we are making now, but before we get very perfect in them we will have to be crooking sevens. To tell the truth, things have been at sixes and sevens for some five years past, and I look to see them equally so for five years to come.

A friend of mine is growling and grumbling over holidays. He says the stores are closed, and there is no place to go to and nothing to do.

He is not the only one who objects to the stores being closed. The Fourteenth Regiment go with him in a body. So much opposed are they to the movement that they opened several of them the other evening and carried off the contents.

The flag of this famous regiment is now paraded in a famous jewelry establishment. How gladly the members would follow it. Gold watches, diamond brooches, coral necklaces, silver spoons—how perfectly at home the gallant boys would make themselves if they were permitted to rally beneath that banner which they have borne so often amid the smoke of burning hayricks and the dust of confused hen-roosts. Never before in all military annals were privates known so willing to devote themselves to the public good... or the public goods.

All is fish that comes to their net. Door-knockers, cooking-ranges, church-steeples, sets of false teeth, circular saws—they gather them in, they gather them in.

In the swoop of the Fourteenth regiment, I recognize the law of compensation. Our city has stood aloof from the shock of battle; while the crimson tide was sweeping over the villages and hamlets of other States, incarnadining every hearthstone, never a threshold here was wet with blood.

Is it not fair then that we should be made to suffer the first inflictions of peace, and have all the major generals and minor particulars that cannot be trusted elsewhere landed upon our shores?

My grumbling friend declares that during all those three holidays—Thanksgiving. Christmas and New Years—he has been miserable. That he has found nothing to be grateful for.

Is he ignorant that on these three most blessed days of the year no Flag was published? Does he not in this circumstance alone recognize something to be thankful for?

Let no one imagine from this that I am not an admirer of the Flag. It has been my friend from the beginning, and I have no doubt will continue to be to the end... the bitter end. The bitter end being its own end, I trust that end is not very far distant.

The Flag has now waved for something more than two years.

Yes... I may say that for something more than two years it has waived all the principles of well-conducted journalism, and I have no doubt it will go on until it sinks beneath these waives.

It was reported last week that some one was on the point of buying it out. Naturally enough the reported offer came from Stoekton, for who but a "demnition maniac" would think of doing such a thing?

I am rather sorry that the negotiations have fallen through, for with one daily conduеted by lunatics and all the others by idiots the readiug public would have a decidedly lively and amusing time of it.

A friend at my elbow remarks that he fears I am not a staunch supporter of the Flag.

Bless its dear heart, I am. Talk of heroism and all that! I would willingly bear it into the hottest fire that ever was opened by mortal batteries and plant it there... yes, and I think I'd have very few compunctions about leaving it there for a little while. If the Flag staff went along with the Flag so much the better.

In making this acknowledgement to a journal which has always abused me, I am actuated by the better feelings of my nature. Its deportment towards me is one of the few consistencies that has justified its career. It has stuck to me closer than a brother, never losing an opportunity of getting in a dig at me... and I am proud to say it has never said a word iu my praise. I hope it never will.

The Custom House is rejoieing in a Millerennium.

Nearly all the old employés have been swept away to make room for soldiers who have been through the war. I question whether there was ever a cleaner sweep made by any new broom in office.

The new appointees, having all lost arms, legs or something else in their country's serviee, it is perhaps only fair that the old incumbents should lose their heads.

I rather like the idea of appointing persons without arms to public offices... even without fingers such functionaries would be jewels, but when you get them without arms!—I chuckle over it.

And the wooden-legged candidates... they ran well for office in this case, but I don't think they can walk off with many of the public monies.

In general, I think General Miller is right. And when we become accustomed to his customs he will probably prove to be the original jolly Miller we read about.

Speaking of costumes:

I notice that some correspondent of a country paper speaks of "the palmy days of the Menken."

What does he mean?

We all recollect her in what might be called her leafy days ... when she figured before us with very little more of relief to her sweet figure than that which drapes a fig... aud it is worthy of remark that, if the popular verdict may be believed, the multitude had about as lief see her in that costume as any other.

Does not that bard—who is known to his French friends as "the Divine Williams"—does not that bard declare that "one touch of nature makes all Men kin?"

Menken is now, according to latest accounts, living in the bosom of her family, having purchased a country seat, which she calls "The Lair."

Lord Carmel has bestowed upon her the soubriquet of "The Bengal Tiger."

Pity he had not baptized her as "The Lion," for, aside from the fact that she has crossed the roaring main, of late, and been extensively lionized, "apt alliteration's artful aid" could be called in to say of her when she rides abroad,

The Lady Lion leaves her lonely lair.

But the "palmy days" which were under discussion in the beginning of this outcropping are probably meant as a simple allusion to the days when half our population blistered their palms in applauding, while the other half clasped their palms over their eyes and said—again drawing on the Divine Williams—

Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer clout,
Without our special wonder?

In the bitterness of my heart last week I said I would make no New Year calls.

For I had been for a number of weeks in a weak and listless condition, both mentally and physically... I'm subject to be that way.., iu truth my mind seemed totally unfit for the practical realities of existence... as it most generally is... when I happened to strike the northern eminence of Telegraph Hill... the same emiuence where "The Expiring Catfish," "Pretty Little Girl in our Alley," and "Rip Sal, Set 'em up Agin" were first impressed upon my fancy, when a being rare, etherial... too etherial for earth, in fact, though on it... and transcendantly beautiful, appeared to me and presented me with a Jews'-harp, a bull fiddle, a trombone and a mouth-organ... telling me if I could play ou them all at once I could win all her money right there, and surprise the natives on that northern eminence of Telegraph Hill—

No... I've got it all mixed, but if you will turn to the ninth page of the CALIFORNIAN, last column, long metre... you will find an adventure so very much like mine that I have persuaded the editor to copy it out and save me further trouble.

To cut a long story short, this lovely being advised me to go home, soak my feet in hot water, wrap a wet towel or two around my head, and see if I didn't feel better in the morniug. All of which I did with a happy result.

And this is the way I came to make my New Year calls.

I have "called" with only an ace high, but this time I had a pair... a buggy and pair, iu fact.

A number of ladies were complaining that they only heard the same thing said over and over again all the day through... that may be, but it was certainly said iu a great many different ways:

I wish you a happy New Year.
I wish you a nappy yew hear.
I wish you a yappy hew near.
I 'ish 'ou a wappy near ear.

But the changes are too infinite and I have not time to ring them all.

Pale sherry seems to bo the favorite beverage. Is it called pale sherry because young men are expected to drink a pailful of it before they get around and stand up under the load?

Were I the mistress of a mansion I think that, as the afternoon waned, I'd remove the sherries from the table and give my callers a "lay out" of Napa soda.

The brief report has come over the wires: "Artemus Ward is dead. His wife died at Worcester, Mass., a few days since from the effects of inhaling coal gas."

That this is our friend, the celebrated showman, I cannot for a moment believe. Notwithstanding the suspicions which his Babes in the Wood may have giveu rise to, he had no wife at last dates, and not being of a remarkably sentimental turn of mind it is not probable that he would provide himself with one at such short notice.

Nor is it at all likely that he would marry a woman who could be suffocated by coal gas.

No, no, I am confident that Artemus will speak many a piece yet, and not employ any other medium than his own sweet mouth and manner.

If not in England—he contemplated a visit thither to see what the publishers meant by publishing cheap editions of his book—he is in all likelihood at this moment in New York, presiding at the dinners which are given to Mr. Linen.

Our city seems destined to become famous for its exports of Linen.

How pleasant it is to think that our late fellow-townsman is breakfasting with Bryant, lunching with Longfellow, supping with Stoddard—perhaps dining with Dickens.

Bryant is white-haired, you know, and how he must have stared when Mr. Linen, at the lunch table, began to talk to him about his "frosty pow," and all that.

My own idea is that, seeing Linen around, the literati will be very apt to cauvass the merits of muzzlin'

INIGO.

TWO DAYS OF BATTLE.

BY GEORGE ALFRED TOWNSEND.

THE Confederates had been waiting two months for McClellan's advance. Emboldened by his delay they had gathered the whole of their available strength from remote Tennessee, from the Mississippi, and from the coast, until, confident and powerful, they crossed Meadow Bridge on the 26th of June, 1862, and drove in our right wing at Mechaniesville. The Reserves of Gen. McCall were stationed here; they made a wavering resistance—wherein four companies of Bucktails were captured bodily—and fell back at nightfall upon Porter's Corps, at Gaines' Mill. Fitz John Porter commanded the brigades of Gens Sykes and Morrell—the former made up solely of regulars. He appeared to have been ignorant of the strength of the attacking party, and he telegraphed to McClellan early on Thursday evening that he required no reinforcements, and that he could hold his ground. The next morning he was attacked in front and flank; Stewart's cavalry fell on his right and turned it at Old Church. He formed at noon in new line of battle, from Gaines' House, along the mill road to New Coal Harbor; but stubbornly persisted in the belief that he could not be beaten. By three o'clock he had been driven back two miles, and all his energies were unavailing to recover a foot of ground. He hurled lancers and cavalry upon the masses of Jackson and the Hills, but the butternut infantry formed impenetrable squares, hemmed in with rods of steel, and as the horsemen galloped around them, searching for pervious points, they were swept from their saddles with volleys of musketry. He directed the terrible fire of his artillery upon them, but though the gray footmen fell in heaps, they steadily advanced, closing up the gaps, and their lines were like long stretches of blaze and ball. Their fire never slackened nor abated. They loaded and moved forward, column on column, like so many immortals that could not be vanquished. The scene from the balloon, as Lowe informed me, was awful beyond all comparison—of puffing shells and shrieking shrapnel, with volleys that shattered the hills and filled the air with deathly whispers. Infantry, artillery, and horse turned the Federal right from time to time, and to preserve their order of battle the whole line fell back toward Grape Vine Bridge. At five o'clock Slocum's Division of volunteers crossed the creek from the south side, and made a desperate dash upon the solid columns of the Confederates. At the same time Toombs' Georgia Brigade charged Smith's redoubt from the south side, and there was a probability of the whole of both armies engaging before dark.

My fever of body had so much relinquished to my fever of mind that at three o'clock I called for my horse and determined to cross the bridge, that I might witness the battle.

It was with difficult, that I could make my way along the narrow corduroy, for hundreds of wounded were limping from the field to the safe side, and ammunition wagons were passing the other way, driven by reckless drivers who should have been blown up momentarily. Before I had reached the north side of the creek, an immense throng of panic-stricken people came surging down the slippery bridge. A few carried muskets, but I saw several wantonly throw their pieces into the flood, and as the mass were unarmed. I inferred that they had made similar dispositions. Fear, anguish, cowardice, despair, disgust, were the predominant expressions of the upturned faces. The gaunt trees, towering from the current, cast a solemn shadow upon the moving throng, and as the evening dimness was falling around them, it almost seemed that they were engulfed in some cataract. I reined my horse close to the side of a team, that I might not be borne backward by the crowd; but some of the lawless fugitives seized him by the bridle, and others attempted to pull me from the saddle.

"Gi' up that hoss!" said one, "what business you got wi' a hoss?"

"That's my critter, and I am in for a ride; so you get off!" said another.

I spurred my pony vigorously with the left foot, and with the right struck the man at the bridle under the chin. The thick column parted left and right, and though a howl of hate pursued me, I kept straight to the bank, cleared the swamp, and took the military route parallel with the creek, toward the nearest eminence. At every step of the way I met wounded persons. A horseman rode past me leaning over his pommel, with blood streaming from his mouth and hanging in gouts from his saturated beard. The day had been intensely hot, and black boys were besetting the wounded with buckets of cool lemonade. It was a common occurrence for the couples that carried the wounded on stretchers to stop on the way, purchase a glass of the beverage, and drink it. Sometimes the blankets on the stretchers were closely folded, and then I knew that the man within was dead. A little fellow, who used his sword for a cane, stopped me on the road, and said:

"See yer! This is the ball that jes' fell out o' my boot."

He handed me a lump of lead as big as my thumb, and pointed to a rent in his pantaloons, whence the drops rolled down his boots.

"I wouldn't part with that for suthin' handsome," he said; "it'll be nice to hev to hum."

As I cantered away he shouted after me:

"Be sure you spell my name right! it's Smith, with an 'E'—S-M-I-T-H-E."

In one place I met five drunken men escorting a wounded Sergeant; the latter had been shot in the jaw, and when he attempted to speak the blood choked his articulation.

"You le' go him, parduer," said one of the staggering brutes, "he's not your Sergeant. Go 'way!"

"Now, Sergeant," said the other idiotically, "I'll see you all right, Sergeant. Come, Bill, fetch him over to the corn-crib and we'll give him a drink."

Here the first speaker struck the second, and the sergeant in wrath knocked them both down. All this time the enemy's cannon were booming close at hand.

I came to an officer of rank, whose shoulder emblem I could not distinguish, riding upon a limping field horse. Four men held him to his seat, and a fifth led the animal. The officer was evidently wounded, though he did not seem to be bleeding, and the dust of battle had settled upon his blanched, stiffening face, like grave-mould upon a corpse. He was swaying in the saddle, and his hair—for he was bare-headed—shook across his white eyeballs. He reminded me of the famous Cid whose body was sent forth to scare the Saracens.

A mile, or more, from Grape Vine Bridge, on a hill top, lay a frame farm-house, with cherry trees encircling it, and along the declivity of the hill were some cabins, corn-sheds and corn-bins. The house was now a surgeon's headquarters, and the wounded lay in the yard and lane, under the shade, waiting their turns to be hacked and maimed. I caught a glimpse through the door of the butchers and their victim; some curious people were peeping through the windows at the operation. As the procession of freshly wounded went by, the poor fellows, lying on their backs, looked mutely at me, and their great eyes smote my heart.

Something has been written in the course of the war upon straggling from the ranks, during battle. But I have seen nothing that conveys an adequate idea of the number of cowards and idlers that so stroll off. In this instance, I met squads, companies, almost regiments of them. Some came boldly along the road; others skulked in woods, and made long detours to escape detection; a few were composedly playing cards, or heating their coffee, or discussing the order and consequence of the fight. The rolling drums, the constant clatter of file and volley-firing—nothing could remind them of the requirements of the time and their own infamy. Their appreciation of duty and honor seemed to be forgotten; neither hate, ambition, nor patriotism could force them back; but when the columns of mounted provosts charged upon them, they sullenly resumed their muskets and returned to the field. At the foot of the hill to which I have referred the ammunition wagons lay in long lines, with the horses' heads turned from the fight. A little beyond stood the ambulances; and between both setts of vehicles, fatigue parties were going and returning to and from the field. At the top of the next hill sat many of the Federal batteries, and I was admonished by the shriek of shells that passed over my head and burst far behind me, that I was again to look upon carnage and share the perils of the soldier.

The question at once occurred to me: Can I stand fire? Having for some months penned daily paragraphs relative to death, courage and victory, I was surprised to find that those words were now unusually significant. "Death" was a syllable to me before; it was a whole dictionary now. "Courage" was natural to every man a week ago; it was rarer than genius to-day. "Victory" was the first word in the lexicon of youth yesterday noon; "discretion" and "safety" were at present of infinitely more consequence. I resolved, notwithstanding these qualms, to venture to the hill-top; but at every step flitting projectiles took my breath. The music of the battle-field, I have often thought, should be introduced in opera. Not the drum, the bugle, or the fife, though these are thrilling after their fashion; but the music of modern ordnance and projectile, the beautiful whistle of the minie ball, the howl of shell that makes unearthly havoc with the air, the whiz-z-z of solid shot, the chirp of bullets, the scream of grape and canister, the yell of immense conical cylinders that fall like red hot stoves and spout burning coals.

All these passed over, beside, beneath, before, behind me. I seemed to be an invulnerable something at whom some cunning juggler was tossing steel, with an intent to impinge upon, not to strike him. I rode like one with his life in his hand, and, so far as I remember, seemed to think of nothing. No fear, per se; no regret; no adventure; only expectancy. It was the expectancy of a shot, a choking, a loud cry, a stiffening, a dead, dull, tumble, a quiver, and —— blindness. But with this was mingled a sort of enjoyment, like that of the daring gamester who has played his soul and is waiting for the decision of the cards. I felt all his suspense, more than his hope; and withal, there was excitement in the play. Now a whistling ball seemed to pass just under my ear, and before I commenced to congratulate myself upon the escape, a shell, with a showery and revolving fuse, appeared to tak the top off my head. Then my heart expanded and contracted, and somehow I found myself conning rhymes. At each clipping ball—for I could hear them coming—a sort of coldness and paleness rose to the very roots of my hair, and was then replaced by a hot flush. I caught myself laughing, syllabically, and shrugging my shoulders, fitfully. Once, the rhyme that came to my lips—for I am sure there was no mind in the iteration—was the simple nursery prayer:

"Now I lay me down to sleep," and I continued to say "down to sleep," "down to sleep," "down to sleep," till I discovered myself, when I ceased. Then a shell, apparently just in range, dashed toward me, and the words spasmodically leaped up: "Now's your time. This is your billet." With the same insane pertinacity I continued to repeat "Now's your time, now's your time," and "billet, billet, billet," till at last I came up to the nearest battery, where I could look over the crest of the hill; and, as if I had looked into the crater of a volcano, or down the fabled abyss into hell, the whole grand horror of a battle burst upon my sight. For a moment I could neither feel nor think. I scarcely beheld, or beholding did not understand or perceive. Only the roar of guns, the blaze that flashed along a zig-zag line and was straightway smothered with smoke, the creek lying glassily beneath me, the gathering twilight and the brownish blue of woods! I only knew that some thousands of fiends were playing with fire and tossing brands at heaven—that some pleasant slopes, dells and highlands were lit as if the conflagration of universes had commenced. There is a passage of Holy Writ that come to my mind as I write, which explains the sensation of the time better than I can do:

"He opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

"And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth."—Revelations, ix. 2, 3.

In a few moments, when I was able to compose myself, the veil of cloud blew away or dissolved, and I could see fragments of the long columns of infantry. Then from the far end of the lines puffed smoke, and from man to man the puff ran down each line, enveloping the columns again, and that they were alternately visible and invisible. At points between the masses of infantry lay field pieces, throbbing with rapid deliveries, and emitting volumes of white steam. Now and then the firing slackened for a short time, when I could remark the Federal line, fringed with bayonets, stretching from the low meadow on the left up the slope, over the ridge, up and down the crest, until its right disappeared in the gloaming of wood and distance. Standards flapped here and there above the column, and I knew from the fact that the line became momentarily more distinct, that the Federals were falling stubbornly back. At times a battery would dash a hundred yards forward, unlimber, and fire a score of times, and directly would return two hundred yards and blaze again. I saw a regiment of lancers gather at the foot of a protecting swell of field; the bugle rang thrice, the red pennons went upward like so many song birds, the mass turned the crest and disappeared, then the whole artillery belched and bellowed. In twenty minutes a broken, straggling, feeble group of horsemen returned; the red pennons still fluttered, but I knew that they were redder for the blood that dyed them. Finally, the Federal infantry fell back to the foot of the hill on which I stood; all the batteries were clustering around me, and suddenly a column of men shot up from the long sweep of the abandoned hill, with batteries on the left and right. Their muskets were turned toward us—a crash and a whiff of smoke swept from flank to flank, and the air around me rained buck, slug, bullet and ball!

The incidents that now occurred in rapid succession were so thrilling and absorbing that my solicitude was lost in their grandeur. I sat like one dumb, with my soul in my eyes and my ears stunned, watching the terrible column of Confederates. Each party was now straining every energy—the one for victory, the other against annihilation. The darkness was closing in, and neither cared to prolong the contest after night. The Confederates, therefore, aimed to finish their success with the rout or capture of the Federals, and the Federals aimed to maintain their ground till nightfall. The musketry was close, accurate and uninterrupted. Every second marked by a discharge—the one firing, the other replying promptly. No attempt was now made to remove the wounded; the coolness of the fight had gone by, and we witnessed only its fury. The stragglers seemed to appreciate the desperate emergency and came voluntarily back to relieve their comrades. The cavalry was massed, and collected for another grand charge. Like a black shadow gliding up the darkening hill-side, they precipitated themselves upon the columns; the musketry ceased for the time, and shrieks, steel-strokes, the crack of carbines and revolvers succeeded. Shattered, humiliated, sullen, the horse wheeled and returned. Then the guns thundered again, and by the blaze of the pieces, the clods and turf were revealed, fitfully strewn with men and horses.

The vicinity of my position now exhibited traces of the battle. A caisson burst close by and I heard the howl of dying wretches, as the fires flashed like meteors. A solid shot struck a field carriage not thirty yards from my feet, and one of the flying spliuters spitted a gunner as if he had been pierced by an arrow. An artilleryman was standing with folded arms so near that I could have reached to touch him; a whistle and a thumping shock, and he fell beneath my nag's head. I wonder, as I calmly recall these episodes now, how I escaped the death that played about me, chilled me, thrilled me—but spared me!

"They are fixing bayonets for a charge. My God! See them come down the hill."

In the gathering darkness, through the thick smoke, I saw or seemed to see the interminable column roll steadily downward. I fancy that I beheld great gaps cut in their ranks but closing solidly up, like the imperishable Gorgon. I may have heard some of this next day, and so confounded the testimonies of eye and ear. But I knew that there was a charge, and that the drivers were ordered to stand by their saddles, to run off the guns at any moment. The descent and bottom below me, were now all ablaze, and directly, above the din of cannon, rifle, and pistol, I heard a great cheer, as of some salvation achieved.

"The rebels are repulsed! We have saved the guns!"

A cheer greeted this announcement from the battery-men around me. They reloaded, rammed, swabbed and fired, with naked arms, and drops of sweat furrowed the powder stains upon their faces. The horses stood motionless, quivering not half so much as the pieces. The grisly officers held to their match-strings, smothering the excitement of the time. All at once there was a running hither and thither, a pause in the thunder, a quick consultation:

"S'death! They have flanked us again." In an instant I seemed overwhelmed with men. For a moment I thought the enemy had surrounded us.

"It's all up," said one, "I shall cross the river."

I wheeled my horse, fell in with the stream of fugitives, and was borne swiftly through field and lane, and trampled fence to the swampy margin of the Chickahominy. At every step the shell fell in and among the fugitives, adding to their panic. I saw officers who had forgotten their regiments or had been deserted by them, wending with the mass. The wounded fell and were trodden upon. Personal exhibitions of valor and determination there were; but the main body had lost heart, and were weary and hungry.

As we approached the bridge there was confusion and altercation ahead. The people were borne back upon me. Curses and threats ensued.

"It is the Provost-guard," said a fugitive, "driving back the boys"

"Go back!" called a voice ahead. "I'll blow you to h—l if you don't go back! Not a man shall cross the bridge without orders!"

The stragglers were variously affected by this intelligence. Some cursed and threatened; some of the wounded blubbered as they leaned languidly upon the shoulders of their comrades. Others stoically threw themselves on the ground and tried to sleep. One man called aloud that the "boys" were stronger than the Provosts and that therefore the "boys" ought to "go in and win."

"Where's the man that wants to mutiny?" said the voice ahead; "let me see him!"

The man slipped away, for the Provost officer spoke as though he meant all he said.

"Nobody wants to mutiny!" cried others.

"Three cheers for the Union."

The wounded and well threw up their hats together, and made a sickly hurrah. The grim officer relented, and he shouted stentoriously that he would take the responsibility of passing the wounded. These gathered themselves up and pushed through the throng: but many skulkers plead injuries, and so escaped. When I attempted to follow, on horseback, hands were laid upon me, and I was refused exit. In that hour of terror and sadness, there were yet jests and loud laughter. However keenly I felt these things, I had learned that modesty amounted to little in the army; so I pushed my nag steadily forward and scattered the camp vernacular, in the shape of imprecations, left and right.

"Colonel," I called to the officer in command, as the line of bayonets edged me in, "may I pass out? I am a civilian."

"No!" said the Colonel, wrathfully. "This is no place for a civilian."

"That is why I want to get away."

"Pass out!"

I followed the winding of the woods to Woodbury's Bridge—the next above Grapevine Bridge. The approaches were clogged with wagons and field-pieces, and I understood that some panic-stricken people had pulled up some of the timbers to prevent a fancied pursuit. Along the sides of the bridge many of the wounded were washing their wounds in the water, and the cries of the teamsters echoed weirdly through the trees that grew in the river. At nine o'clock we got under way—horsemen, batteries, ambulances, ammunition teams, infantry, and finally some great siege 32's that had been hauled from Gaines' House. One of these pieces broke down the timbers again, and my impression is that it was cast into the current. When we emerged from the swamp timber, the hills before us were found brilliantly illuminated with burning camps. I made toward headquarters, in one of Trest's fields; but all the tents save one had been taken down, and lines of white covered wagons stretched southward until they were lost in the shadows. The tent of Gen. McClellan alone remained, and beneath an arbor of pine boughs, close at hand, he sat, with his Corps Commanders and Aides, holding a council of war. A ruddy fire lit up the historical group, and I thought at the time, as I have said a hundred times since, that the consultation might be selected for a grand national painting. The crisis, the hour, the adjuncts, the renowned participants, peculiarly fit it for pictorial commemoration.

The young commander sat in a chair, in full uniform, uncovered. Heintzelman was kneeling upon a fagot, earnestly speaking. De Joinville sat apart, by the fire, examining a map. Fitz John Porter was standing back of McClellan, leaning upon his chair. Keyes, Franklin, and Sumner were listening attentively. Some sentries paced to and fro, to keep out vulgar curiosity. Suddenly, there was a nodding of heads, as of some policy decided; they threw themselves upon their steeds, and galloped off toward Michie's.

As I reined at Michie's porch, at ten o'clock, the bridges behind me were blown up, with a flare that seemed a blazing of the Northern Lights. The family were sitting upon the porch, and Mrs. Michie was greatly alarmed with the idea that a battle would be fought around her house next day.

O'Hanlon, of Meagher's staff, had taken the fever and sent anxiously for me, to compare our symptoms.

I bade the good people adieu before I went to bed, and gave the man "Pat" a dollar to stand by my horse while I slept, and to awake me at any disturbance, that I might be ready to scamper. The man "Pat," I am bound to say, woke me up thrice by the exclamation of:

"Sure, your honor, there's—well—to pay in the yard! I think ye and the Doctor had better ride off."

On each of those occasions, I found that the man "Pat" had been lonesome, and wanted somebody to speak to.

What a sleep was mine that night! I forgot my fever. But another and a hotter fever burned my temples—the fearful excitement of the time! Whither were we to go, cut off from the York, beaten before Richmond—perhaps, even now surrounded—and to be butchered to-morrow, till the clouds should rain blood? We were to retreat one hundred miles down the hostile Peninsula—a battle at every rod, a grave at every footstep? Then I remembered the wounded heaped at Gaines's Mill, and how they were groaning without remedy, ebbing at every pulse, counting the flashing drops, calling for water, for mercy, for death. So I found heart; for I was not buried yet. And somehow I felt that fate was to take me, as the great poet took Dante, through other and greater horrors. N. Y. Citizen.

A writer once remarked that a moment of horror is experienced when a misgiving comes over you that your servant has clandestinely assisted you in wearing out your tooth brush. A lady of Boston had a moment of horror recently, which she has not yet entirely recovered from. During her absence the past summer she left the house in charge of a very faithful attendant, who had been with her for years, and who, to all appearances, most faithfully performed her duty. Everything was in order when she returned, and her best hat and her velvet cloak remained as she left them. Recently the lady had occasion to visit a photograph room, and while looking over some pictures, her eye was attracted by one which had a familiar appearance. She puzzled her brain to think who it could be and was about giving it up when her little girl glanced at it, and exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, that's our Jenny." Close inspection revealed the fact that Miss Jenny could not resist the temptation to send her photograph home to the old country, arrayed in as much costliness as the circumstances would permit, for there was no doubting that Madame's velvet cloak and dress hat had taken an airing during her absence.

Jules Janin breaks into rapturous applause of Victor Hugo's new book of poems, "The Songs of the Streets and Woods." Of the poet he says: "He sings; he talks; he intoxicates himself with the limpid wave; he kneels at the feet of oaks strengthened by storms; he knows what the willows ponder, and what the ripe wheat-fields say. It is truly song, but also plaint and prayer, and the accent of the street where everything passes, and the murmur of the forest speaking without mystery to the clouds."

An Impudent Actor. — Reeve was in the habit of taking great liberties with his audience. He would interpolate dreadfully; nay, when he forgot his own part he would coolly improvise his share of the dialogue, without the slightest reference to his brothers. On one occasion he was acting the lover to Mrs. Fitzwilliams, who was a plump little actress, in a scene where she holds out her hand to Reeve with this speech: "Can you refuse anything to your Pauline?" Reeve, looking at the plump hand, cried out: "Paw Lean? Paw Fat! I call it."

The Pneumatic Despatch.—The formal opening of the first portion of the tube which is soon to connect the General Postoffice with the terminus of the London and North-western Railway took place recently. Four wagons with goods passed from Euston-square to Holborn, and its arrival at the company's premises at the latter place was watched by the gentlemen present. Afterwards a number of them were conveyed in the wagons to the Euston terminus, thus testing the capabilities of the service, although the journey was a little uncomfortable, the wagons not being fitted for passenger traffic. Tarpaulin coverings were obtained for one or two of the carriages, but the greater number of the excursionists had to fit themselves as best they could among the bags of shingle, taking care to keep their heads well below the edge of the carriages, lest, as an American gentleman present was credited with saying, "they might get their hair brushed by machinery." The first sensation at starting, and still more upon arriving, was certainly not agreeable. For about a quarter of a minute in each case there was a pressure upon the ears, suggestive of diving-bell experience, a suction like that with which one is drawn under a wave, and a cold draught of wind upon the eyes, having almost the effect of falling water; but once fairly within the tube, these sensations were got rid of, or left behind, and the motion had little more positive discomfort about it than would be attendant on riding on a "lorry" over the worst ballasted line in England. It was a curious sensation to be flying along through the earth, feet foremost, in utter darkness, for the best part of ten minutes, which, in such a place, seemed half an hour, knowing that to the right and left of you there were gas-pipes, drains, cellars, roots of trees, and all the intricate fibres of the London subsoilway; that nearer again to you was an arch which you might touch at your peril, and that of all of these you could see absolutely nothing. The conventional horrors of rats and catacombs troubled one little, seeming out of place beside this latest effort of human invention or audacity. But one reminiscence connected with an earlier stage in the history of this very pneumatic despatch did certainly present itself at awkward moments. The incident was as follows:

Various experiments having been tried with the tube and its powers of suction, one of the officials at last determined to see what would happen in case the train struck fast in any point on its journey. A carriage was accordingly "scotched," or fastened in such a way that it could not move, and then the power of the engine was exerted to the utmost. The carriage in question was intended for passengers, and furnished accordingly. By and by one of the cushions, the others, and finally all the moveables which the carriage contained, were whirled through the tube and delivered at the other end, the force exerted being such that even the nails keeping down the carpet were extracted.—Liverpool Paper.

A cocoanut plantation has altogether a singular appearance. The trees, being of one age, are of a uniform height and thickness of trunk, and spread of top; they are planted in horizontal lines of equal distances, and, growing up straight and perpendicular, present a series of long, tall, thin, gray columns, rounded over by green feathery foliage. The trees at maturity attain a height of forty feet, unbroken by leaf or branch, and rarely reclining more than two or three degrees from the perpendicular. The tops have a spread of about twenty five feet in diameter, and as the trees are seldom planted further apart than thirty feet, their foliage forms nearly an unbroken canopy, shading the ground below. The nuts grow in clusters between the roots of the leaves and branches at the top in all conditions of ripeness. If not picked when ripe, they drop; and, even with careful picking, many nuts are lost by dropping and being broken on the ground. Indeed, in a large plantation, the noise of the falling nuts and the dead old branches strangely breaks the silence that reigns all round. The force with which they fall is considerable—sufficient, if they alight on the head, to kill a man of ordinary thick skull, and I have thought it remarkable—at least, I have never heard of a single case. This is especially remarkable among native villages, which are thickly crowed with cocoanut trees, under the shade of which the huts repose, and the little black children play from morning till night.

"Sir," said a pompous personage, who undertook to bully an editor, "do you know that I take your paper?" "I've no doubt you do take it," replied the man of the quill, "for several of my honest subscribers have been complaining lately about their papers being missing in the morning."

"Why did Joseph's brethren cast him into the Pit?" "Because they didn't want him in the Family Circle!"

A physician, in company with others of the profession, thus boasted: "I was the first to discover the Asiatic cholera, and communicate it to the public"

Mirabeau compared the French to children who sow and the next day scratch open the ground to see if the seeds have sprouted.

THE CLOSED STAIRCASE.

I WAS walking up and down the cloistered court of St. Oswald's, with my friend Bryce, one evening early in the Lent Term of 185—. It was only my second term of residence, and as Bryce was on the point of taking his degree, I regarded him with a considerable amount of respect, not to say awe; for he it was who had allowed me to rub off my freshness upon him, and saved me, by many a timely hint, from several of the errors and gaucheries incidental to the uninitiated in undergraduate life. I had fagged for him at school, and the mutual friendship once begun there, and interrupted for a space of three years by his residence in the University, had now sprung up again more warmly than ever. And now, meeting again after the vacation, which he had spent in hard reading in his college-rooms, there was the usual comparing of notes on every conceivable subject, slipping by imperceptible graduations from skating to politics, from politics to theology, and thence round again (taking in the origin of evil, and the intermediate state of existence by the way,) to the chances that so-and-so had of obtaining the vacant university scholarship. At last it seemed as if we had pretty well exhausted everything "conversationable;" the current of our talk flowed in a shallower and still shallower stream, and we were on the point of separating for the night, when a casual question of mine altered the whole course of affairs, and kept us out of our respective beds for a considerable period longer. It arose thus: from the court, at regular intervals, staircases opened, each one leading to three or four different sets of rooms, all with their occupants, as there was never a set of rooms vacant for any length of time in college. But in one part of the court, at the south corner, where, in the natural course of things, one would have expected to see a staircase likewise, there was simply a door, shut close. Passing it for perhaps the hundredth time in our circuit of the court, I carelessly kicked against it, noticed that it was fast, and had no handle, keyhole, or other means of opening; and turning to Bryce, asked whether a sham door was supposed to be either useful or ornamental by the intelligent architect of the court. To which he replied with rather a meaning smile:

"Decidedly useful in this case, if tradition is to be believed."

"What," said I, "is there some special and peculiar vintage of old port, reserved for the most solemn carouses of most ancient fellows, to which admission is gained by a secret spring, known only to the hereditary and inviolable butler?"

"No," said he, laughing. "Bottles, if any be behind the door, must deserve the soubriquet we give to empty ones, as we roll them into the corner of the room at supper time—'dead men.' However, if you choose to hear the story as it was told me by my old tutor, who was a junior fellow of St. Oswald's when the events causing that door to be closed took place" (here he gave it another kick, which made me cold to my toes,) "and if you will do me the justice to believe that I am not practicing on your ingenuous innocence, I am entirely at your service."

Of course, I gladly assented, and though I felt so sleepy five minutes since, at that moment I could have warranted to keep awake for a week. Bryce started off with the story, which I give in his own words, as far as I can remember them."

"I think I came up here better initiated than most men in the lore of the university, owing to old Johnson, who spent at least half the time when he ought to have been polishing up my Greek Iambics in reciting thrilling tales of his own undergraduate life; striking, undoubtedly, most of them were, and much better fun than composing a dialogue (a long way) after Sophocles; none of them have, however, retained so firm a hold on my mind as the one connected with, or rather sealed by that door. It appears that one of his most intimate friends, named Marsden, moved into those rooms only a short time before his degree, having previously 'kept' in the town. The college was not so full then as now; many other colleges, which have now sunk into comparative insignificance by the side of St. Oswald's, were then competitors with it in point of numbers; and he chose these rooms as being in a quiet and retired corner of the court, where he might adventure that often repeated but generally unsuccessful experiment of making up for three years' laziness by three months reading. He had got comfortably settled in the rooms, and had begun carefully to parcel out the day, as is the custom of reading-men, into slabs of study, meals, and exercise. One evening, it was the 15th of November, 179—(he had every reason to recollect the date,) he was returning home rather later than usual, having been detained at his coach's rooms over an unusually refractory and hysterical Greek chorus, when he noticed in ascending the stairs to his rooms an unusual illumination in the sitting-room. Not being sure whether he might not have left his candle burning, or whether his bed-maker, who was not averse to brandy, had fallen a victim to spontaneous combustion, and was an unwilling holocaust on his hearth, he hurried up and in, when a most remarkable sight presented itself. The room was brilliantly lighted by wax candles, fixed in sconces against the wall, and in massive candelabra, evidently old college plate, which were set on the table; the table itself extended from end to end of the apartment, and on each side were seated young men in the dress of the end of the seventeenth or early part of the eighteenth century, carousing much after the manner of their descendants of the nineteenth. The post of chairman was occupied by a remarkably handsome young fellow, somewhat older apparently than the rest, and with a countenance which bore unmistakable traces of dissolute living, and who seemed every now and then troubled by some unpleasant thought which clouded his brow, though he was the life of the party, and seemed to be continually firing off fresh witticisms to keep them going. But still his mind was evidently not there; he kept glancing at the door, as though expecting some one to enter; and now Marsden noticed for the first time that the seat on the right hand of the host was vacant. No sooner had he noticed this (for he stood at his door spell-bound, but with every faculty, save that of speech, at its extremest tension.) than the seat was filled, and filled by a fair young man, whose boyish and innocent cast of features strangely contrasted with that of the head of the table. Over the face of this latter, as the youth entered, there seemed to pass a malicious smile, as he lifted his glass, and pledged the newcomer. While this was going on, Marsden was not conscious of hearing any sound, nay, by a sort of double sense, while kept alive to the quasi-reality of the scene before him, he could see, as in a shadowy background, his own books, surmounted by his own bust of Plato, which looked far more ghost-like than the ghostly banqueters.

"And now the drinking seemed to become fierce; the youth on the right hand, who at first refused wine, was yielding to the polite entreaties of his next neighbor (who again and again motioned to the servants to replenish his glass) and was gradually becoming flushed and heated. The whole company appeared to get disorderly, healths were drunk with great rapidity, and all the well-known accompaniments of undergraduate suppers in their most advanced stage seemed to be taking place; and just at this time Marsden noticed that the countenances of all the others, with the exception of the fair guest, were such as would stamp them as belonging to what we should call the 'worst set;' and their expression was not improved by intoxication. At least, all seemed to be either asleep or maudlin, save the host and his next neighbor, who doubtless from the lateness of his arrival, together with his abstemiousness at first, had thus held out. But now he too seemed rapidly becoming like the rest, when on a sudden the host rose, went to a small cabinet (for the servant had quitted the room) and took thence a small bottle labelled 'Tokay.' Filling a glass, he handed it to his friend, who drank it off with a sort of foolish half-tipsy smile; but in one instant the smile changed to an expression of pain, then to one of horror, and then, as he caught the eye of the host fixed on him in malicious triumph, to one of indescribable hate. Making a violent effort to rise from his chair, and a fruitless one to clinch his fist and strike his foe, his whole frame relaxed, and fell forward; and at the same moment there was a hideous groan, and the whole sight—supper, guests, poisoner, and poisoned—vanished, and the room was in utter darkness.

"Marsden awoke to find himself in his bed, diligently attended by his old bed maker, who was giving him and herself alternate spoonfuls of brandy and water.

"The state of insensibility in which she had found him, required, alas! no explanation from him in her eyes, as it was not a very uncommon experience of hers to discover her 'young gentlemen,' one or more of them, prone on the floor, rather than on the beds, of their appartments, on her arrival in the early mornings, and had she sought for or expected any account, Marsden was by no means in a humor to give one. At first, indeed, he made up his mind to tell nobody, and of course, ten minutes afterward, when his friend Johnson came into his rooms he detailed his strange vision of the preceding night at length. Sad to say, Johnson's countenance expressed the belief that Marsden had returned for one night at least to the somewhat reckless orgies which had adorned his early residence, and was suffering in consequence thereof, and his only comment on the story was: 'My dear fellow, if you will go on getting drunk up to the threshhold of your degree you will most undoubtedly be plucked.' So Marsden said no more, and merely contenting himself with writing a brief abstract of that scene which he himself knew not how to account for, he did the most sensible thing under the circumstances, and tried to forget all about it. A month rolled by, the term waned, all but a few steady readers were departing, or had departed, to their home for Christmas. The fifteenth of December was just closing in, gloomy and damp, and Marsden settled, with a wearied sigh at the vanity of life, such as is not uncommon at two-and-twenty, to his books. Wonderful to relate, he got interested, and several hours flew by without relaxing his attention. However, on looking at his watch and seeing it close on midnight, he was drowsily determining on going to bed, when on a sudden his whole room seemed to be illuminated. He was at the time standing at an upright desk for reading in one corner of his room, and instantly faced about. To his horror and astonishment, he beheld the same scene already described, of the supper and the poisoning, re-enacted in every particular. * * *

"'We shall get you better soon, old boy,' said Johnson to him, as he bent over him about a fortnight after the above date; 'but you have succeeded in reading yourself into a brain-fever, and may consider yourself lucky that you have escaped with no worse consequences than temporary baldness and the appetite of an ostrich.'

"Marsden replied by two questions:

"'What day of the month is it? and when can I be moved?'

"'It is the second of January, and in about a fortnight's time we may get you away from here.'

"To Johnson's surprise, and almost alarm, Marsden sprang up, or rather half sprang up, in bed, and, seizing him by the arm, said:

"'If you don't get me away in less than a fortnight you may spare yourselves the trouble, for the undertakers will do the job more satisfactorily.'

"Johnson endeavored to quiet him, thinking, not unreasonably, that the fever had not yet left him, and indeed he was worse for some hours afterwards. But later in the evening, he repeated the story he had told to my old tutor six weeks before; and Johnson sensibly informed the doctor, when he called, of his friend's dread of a repetition of the same scenes on the corresponding day of January, if he were suffered to remain so long; and with considerable risk to Marsden, happily unattended with bad results, he was moved out on the fourteenth of that month.

"The rooms have never since been occupied."

"Well," said I, as Bryce paused here, "had no one the courage to brave the spectral symposium?"

"Yes," said he; "the next night, Johnson made a point of sitting up in the rooms, but he unfortunately had taken so much in the way of gentle stimulants to nerve him for the expected terrors, that he awoke, after a somewhat uncomfortable slumber, at four o'clock in the morning of the 16th, to find himself in profound darkness, and with a violent cold in the head."

"But," said I, again, "was no explanation ever offered of the extraordinary scene of which Marsden was witness?"

"Only this," replied Bryce. "Some weeks afterward, when he was slowly recruiting his health at his father's house at Leicestershire, he found among a bundle of old papers in a disused room, a strange confession of an ancestor of his, whom he had heard of as a wild, fast liver, who had suddenly sobered down, gone abroad, and turned monk, but of whose history but little was known. The manuscript contained a very ordinary account of love and jealousy, induced by a handsome young rival in the affections of a certain young lady, ending with an obscure vow of vengeance against him. Then came a blank, and afterward these singular words:

"'November 16, 169- :—Good God! am I to go through that horrible evening again? Not a soul but myself knows or suspects that I had anything to do with his death—they put it down to excessive drinking and excitement; and here I am forced by some frightful fate to commit the same ghastly crime in spirit as each fifteenth day of the month comes round! Forgive me, O God!—but I know it cannot be. I must carry about a living hell within me till I die!' Here the MS. ceased abruptly. Whether its contents were intended to be made known by the unhappy man (who before the end of the year had quitted England forever,) or to be left in obscurity, it is impossible to say. At any rate, the narrative was not found till the time I mention, and I need hardly say, materially retarded Marsden's recovery. He was never able to ascertain whether the vision had appeared to others before his time, or whether, as a descendant of the murderer, he had been specially favored in the matter. Nobody else ever repeated the experiment which failed in Johnson's case, for the story came to the Master's ears, and the rooms occupied by Marsden were not particularly convenient or particularly wanted, and as he had a great dislike, as he said, to addling the brains of undergraduate members of the college by any additional distraction, he caused the door you see at the bottom of the staircase to be fixed firmly in its place; and it hasn't as far as I am aware, occurred to any succeeding college authorities to have it opened since. But I do not despair of a seance being held there yet, as there are one or two of the junior fellows who believe in that sort of thing—and in nothing else. 'But come,' concluded Bryce, 'I ought to have been in bed hours ago; so if my fire has not hopelessly subsided, we will contrive a small jug of 'Bishop' before we turn in.'"

SQUARZA—The concoctor of the popular punches which bear his name—sent to the Alta, Bulletin, Call and Flag newspaper offices a half dozen bottles each of his wondrous brewings on New Year's Day. The result was evidenced in the unusual sprightliness of their next day's issues. Elegant acknowledgements of the favor appear in the columns of all our cotemporaries.

THE crowning gift of beauty is a fair, unbleached, clear, rose blush to the complexion and skin. This is attained by all the ladies who use that charming toilet enamel, Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

"ROSES BLOOM IN SUMMER"—As sung by Charles Lascelles, has just been published by Mr. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHILOSOPHICAL PUZZLES.

THERE is a science, or rather a family of sciences, which can boast a greater antiquity than almost any other. Its great age does not in the least entail decrepitude, for it, in fact, gives this ancient father of knowledge a patriarchal authority over all the younger sciences, without at all making him suffer any of those infirmities of age which his twenty-five centuries of life might be expected to confer. This ancient learning is called Logic, a name of great power, and, alas! often taken in vain. In fact, its fame is so extensive, that persons whose knowledge is limited to the name only, are constantly invoking it with an almost superstitious feeling. The blacksmith whose political convictions are strong (not to say wordy,) when debating in the senate of a tap-room, uses the name of logic with much effect either for the conclusive settlement of the question in the manner he upholds, or to the destruction of the notions of his opponent. And many a parliamentary debater, or newspaper writer, calls aloud on the same name for a similar purpose, and it is indeed even just possible with the same simple veneration for what he knows not.

But, great as is the antiquity, and vast as are the dominions of this science, the general popular interest in, and recognition of, its principles are small; and this is the case because it has one great fault, which is sometimes the fault of age—it is not amusing. It is a very dignified science. Logic does not deal either in pleasing experiments or interesting discoveries. All the other sciences—with the exception, perhaps, of pure mathematics—have some amusing side in their character, or are capable of having amusement extracted from them by appropriate literary means. Thus, chemistry (properly seasoned) furnishes quite lively subjects of interest, as does geology also. So do astronomy, optics, and many other onomies and ics, which, accordingly, deservedly occupy their permanent though humble positions among the subjects of general literature. But from the syllogism in comprehension, or from the integral calculus, it is not easy to obtain interesting matter for light reading; and little more amusement can be furnished by taking the opposite tack, and poking fun at such respectable branches of knowledge.

There was a day, however, when philosophy was a young science, and it in that far time had, to a slight extent, the playful habits of youth, when it would in rare moments forget its usual occupation of arranging and fathoming the universe, and with ponderous humor, by the mouth of a disciple, give forth some puzzle of a more amusing character than the great problems of existence and knowledge, the discovery of whose solution formed its principal business, and to which desirable end it is still busily engaged.

Thus the celebrated and well-known puzzle of Achilles and the tortoise was invented by Zeno of Elea some centuries before Christ, and furnishes a good example of this philosophical play. This problem is as follows: If Achilles and a tortoise were to run a race, and Achilles were to run ten times as fast as the tortoise, if the latter had the start, Achilles would never overtake the tortoise, as can be thus shown: Suppose them at the starting of Achilles to be separated by a space of a thousand feet, when Achilles has run this thousand, the tortoise would have run a hundred, and when Achilles had run this hundred, the tortoise would have run ten, and so on forever. This sophism has been considered insoluble by many philosophers, and among others by Dr. Thomas Brown, since it actually leads to an absurd conclusion by a sound argument. The fallacy lies in the concealed assumption that what is infinitely divisible is also infinite.

Among other famous ancient dialectic problems are the following dilemmas, which are framed with wonderful ingenuity, the acuteness displayed in their construction being probably unsurpassed. The first is called Syllogismus Crocodilus, and may be thus stated: An infant, while playing on the bank of a river, was seized by a crocodile. The mother, hearing its cries, rushed to its assistance, and by her tearful entreaties obtained a promise from the crocodile (who was obviously of the highest intelligence) that he would give it her back if she would tell him truly what would happen to it. On this, the mother (perhaps rashly) asserted, "You will not give it back." The crocodile answers to this: "If you have spoken truly, I cannot give back the child without destroying the truth of your assertion; if you have spoken falsely, I cannot give back the child, because you have not fulfilled the agreement; therefore, I cannot give it back whether you have spoken truly or falsely." The mother retorted: "If I have spoken truly, you must give back the child, by virtue of your agreement; if I have spoken falsely, that can only be when you have given back the child: so that, whether I have spoken truly or falsely, the child must be given back." History is silent as to the issue of this remarkable dispute.

Of a similar nature is the other example above mentioned, which is even more acutely stated. A young man named Euathless received lessons in rhetoric from Protagoras, it being agreed that a certain fee should be paid if the pupil were successful in the first cause he pleaded. Euathless, however, neglected to undertake any cause, and Protagoras, in order to obtain his fee, was compelled to sue him. Euathless defended himself in the court, and it was consequently the young man's first suit. The master argued thus: "If I be successful in this cause, O Euathless, you will be compelled to pay by virtue of the sentence of these righteous judges; and should I even be unsuccessful, you will then have to pay me in fulfilment of your original contract." To this the apt pupil replied: "If I be successful, O master, I shall be free by the sentence of these righteous judges; and even if I be unsuccessful, I shall be free by virtue of the contract." The story states that such convincing arguments thus diametrically opposed completely staggered the judges, who, being quite unable to decide, postponed the judgment sine die. [The famous legal case of the Bridge, which was decided by his Excellency Sancho Panza, Governor of the island of Barataria, might be cited as companion-example to the above; but is it not written in the books of the "Adventures of Don Quixote de la Mancha."]

We, being guided by other lights, and looking on things with juster notions than in the early days of knowledge, can smile at the seemingly trifling schemes of philosophy, which were serious enough when first propounded. Just as, in laughing at the stiff expression and angular contortions of the pre-Raphaelite paintings, we forget that they represent what was believed to be the truth in art of those days, and see only the odd caricatures of humanity which they form. At a time when methods of observation and experiment were nearly unknown, or held in serene contempt, it is not strange that the early notions of the nature of things should be somewhat queer, and in this sense they certainly have a ludicrous side. Thus, Thales of Miletus, who lived about 640 B. C., from reasons only known to himself, taught and believed that the earth was a living being, and that all things were formed from water. This latter notion was contradicted by another famous philosopher and successor, Anaximenes, also of Miletus, who taught that all things were formed from air, which was the primal and universal element. Another celebrated philosopher, Heraclitus of Ephesus, in delightful unanimity with the preceding, believed that fire was the life of all things. The last furthermore taught that the sun was a mere meteor, not exceeding twelve feet in size, and was of necessity extinguished and rekindled afresh each day. Zeno Elea, above referred to, was, as may be imagined from the example of his powers which has been given, a most acute and bold reasoner, which talents, however, were employed on somewhat destructive principles. His argument for the non-existence of space affords an example. He asks: Wherein is space? For if all that exists must be in space, then must that space itself be in some other space: and so on ad infinitum; but this is absurd; therefore space itself cannot exist, as it cannot be in some other space. In a dispute with Protagoras, Zeno inquired whether a grain of corn, or the ten-thousandth part of a grain, falling to the ground would make any sound, and was told it would not. He then inquired whether a measure of corn would, and was told it would. He then retorted, that since a measure was composed of a certain definite number of grains, it followed, that either a grain makes a noise in falling, or the measure does not.

It is a sad fact that impatient spirits, after a long course of serious teaching or exercise, are apt to find an improper pleasure in modified profanity, especially as the latter has, to a great extent, the dangerous quality of being at first sight rather entertaining.

A celebrated instance of ingenious fallacy is that propounded as a just argument by Diodorus Chronos, who, by this fallacy, claimed to prove the impossibility of motion. He argues thus: All that a body does, must be done either in the place where it is, or else in the place where it is not. Now, it cannot move in the place where it is, and much less can it move in the place where it is not. Consequently, it cannot move at all, and therefore motion is impossible. It is related that the inventor of this sophism on one occasion dislocated his shoulder, and was compelled to send for a surgeon to set it. The leech assured the philosopher that the shoulder could not possibly be put out at all, since it could not be put out in the place in which it was, nor either in the place in which it was not.

The inverting argument of the lying Cretans is well known; but the reader will excuse its quotation for the sake of illustration, and for the chance of its being new to some out of the many. St. Paul says (Titus i., 12, 13): "One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said: The Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. This witness is true." The Cretans being always liars; the prophet was a Cretan, therefore he was a liar, and lied when he said they were always liars. Consequently the Cretans are not always liars. Again, since he was a Cretan, he was not always a liar. Therefore, the Cretans are always liars, and so on ad infinitum.

Another good instance is that quoted by a recent American writer, who shows, by a perfectly just argument, that the much-abused maxim, "All rules have their exceptions," is really self-contradictory. If all rules have exceptions, this maxim is itself a rule, and therefore must also have its exceptions. Consequently, the proverb at the same time affirms that all rules have their exceptions, and that some rules do not, which is an obvious case of proverbial suicide.

With regard to more trivial instances of logical profanity, I must quote one which is frequently employed in private life with much exasperating effect, and is also found by cross-examining counsel a serviceable mode of confounding a witness, and simultaneously throwing dust in the eyes of a jury. This process has, moreover, the pleasant, compact, logical name of fallacia heterozeteos. It consists in desiring to have either a direct negative or affirmative answer to a question, which, being done, a question respecting any desired improbability can then be asked, as, for instance: "Have you cut off your tail yet?" If the answer be yes, it is of course an admission that the examinee once had a tail; while, if the reply be no, it is assumed to be an admission that he still possesses that unusual personal ornament. A somewhat similar process is involved in the inquiry of a man: "How long he has left off beating his father?" It will be seen what a wide field of vexation a skillful use of this process can command. As an example, in strong contrast to the foregoing, the following problem may be cited as an interesting but somewhat hopeless subject of inquiry—namely, What is the effect of an irresistible force striking an immovable body?

It may be observed with regard to the foregoing illustrations, that they start from the borders of serious argument, and, descending by degrees, they travel first through ingenious and then trivial quibbles. Continuing the descent, we should finally arrive in the extensive region of jokes (but before arriving at that stage of debasement, it is better to quit the subject.) In fact, it has been justly observed, that jests generally are merely examples of faulty reasoning, and consequently have their place in the classification of logical fallacies. They preserve just so much of the appearance of just argument as to please by appealing to the mind, while the absurdity or incongruity of the conclusion produces a ludicrous effect, which the implied irreverence may have its share in intensifying. Thus, puns can generally be identified with the fallacy which logicians call ambiguous middle; while that conversational luxury which the outer world call "chaff," can be named by the more dignified terms of ignoratio elenchi and illicit processes.

The many and various kinds of popular and feminine arguments, which are frequently found so mystifying and unanswerable, from the amount of dust which they throw into the eyes of their less ready victims, might be probably dissected and classified with unspeakable advantage to the latter. But it is to be feared that in the domestic regions where they prevail, such formal warfare would be contemptuously scouted; and abject submission is probably a safer mode of meeting their attacks.

SLEEP WITH THE WHOLE FAMILY.—Recently, an athletic young farmer in the town of Waynesburg, took a fair girl "all bathed in blushes," from her parents, and started for the first town across the Pennsylvania line, to be married, where the ceremony could be performed without a licence. The happy pair were accompanied by a sister of the girl, a tall, gaunt, sharp-featured female of some thirty-seven summers. The pair crossed the line, were married, and returned to Wellsville to pass the night. People at the hotel where the wedding party stopped, observed that they conducted themselves in a rather singular manner. The husband would take his sister-in-law, the tall female aforesaid, into one corner of the parlor, and talk earnestly to her, gesticulating wildly all the time. Then the tall female would "put her foot down," and talk to him in an angry and excited manner. Then the husband would take his fair young bride into a corner; but he would no sooner commence talking to her, than the gaunt sister would rush in between them and angrily join the conversation. The people at the hotel ascertained what this meant about nine o'clock that evening. There was an uproar in the room which had been assigned to the newly married couple. Female shrieks and masculine "swears" startled the people in the hotel, and they rushed to the spot. The gaunt female was pressing against the door of the room, and the newly married, most undressed, was barring her out with all his might. Occasionally she would kick the door far enough open to disclose the stalwart husband, in his gentleman Greek slave apparel. It appears that the tall female insisted upon occupying the same bed with the newly wedded pair; that her sister was favorably disposed to the arrangement, and that the husband had agreed to it before the wedding took place, and now indignantly repudiated the contract.

"Won't you go away now, Susan?" said the newly married man, softening his voice.

"No," said she, "I won't; so there!"

"Don't you budge an inch!" cried the married sister, inside.

"Now—now, Maria," said the young man to his wife, in a piteous tone, "don't go to cuttin' up in this way; now don't."

"I'll cut up as much as I wanter!" she sharply replied.

"Well," roared the desperate man, throwing the door wide open and stalking out among the crowd, "jest you two wimmin put on your duds and go right straight home, and bring back the old man and woman, and your grandfather, who is nigh on to a hundred; bring 'em all here, and I'll marry the whole caboodle of 'em, and we'll all sleep together."

GOOD NIGHT.

[A SPANISH AIR.]

GOOD NIGHT! I have to say good night
To such a host of peerless things!
Good night unto that fragile hand
All queenly with its weight of rings;
Good night to fond, up-lifted eyes,
Good night to chestnut braids of hair,
Good night unto the perfect mouth,
And all the sweetness nestled there—
The snowy hand detains me, then
I'll have to say good night again!

But there will come a time, my love,
When, if I read our stars, aright,
I shall not linger by this porch
With my adieus. Till then, good night!
You wish the time were now. And I.
You do not blush to wish it so?
You would have blushed yourself to death
To own so much a year ago,—
What, both these snowy hands! ah, then,
I'll have to say good night again!

[T. B. Aldrich.

THE TESTAMENT.

AT an early hour of the day, while morning, indeed, was yet struggling with the night for mastery, Horace Morand entered the house of his uncle, and, with the confidence of a privileged relative, proceeded directly to the sleeping apartment of which the old man had been an involuntary tenant for some weeks back. An aged nurse was seated on a sofa in the chamber, half slumbering through long fatigue. The windows were yet closed: but on the table stood a single light, which showed, through the half-open curtains of the bed, the wan figure of the elder Morand, or what had been that person, for the body was now a piece of inanimate matter. The old man had sunk into his last sleep some hours before.

The noise which Horace Morand made on entering aroused the nurse. She rose, and with a melancholy air said: "Good morning, Mr. Horace. You come to see your uncle once more. Look at him He smiles as if he but slumbered pleasantly; but his eyes will reopen no more." "Console yourself, my good Margaret," returned the young man. "You have watched long, and have need of rest; go and take it, and I will remain with my uncle." "But, sir," said the nurse, "I was desired"—— "Go for a little while to rest," replied the youth, interrupting her; "go, my good Margaret, fear nothing; I will not quit the room." And, as he spoke, he pushed the attendant, with gentle violence, from the chamber. He then sat down on the sofa, and, glancing for a moment at his deceased relative he drew the curtains together, as if unwilling to have any witness of his reflections.

"At last he is gone," said the young man, "and I am rich!"

This opening reflection was followed after a time by occasional glances at the bed. Finally, Horace Morand rose, and drawing open the curtains to the shortest extent possible, he introduced his hand to the head of the bed, and brought it out again, bearing a bunch of keys. Closing the curtains anew, the young man went hurriedly to an escritoire in the room, and applying a key, as if the objects were things familiar to him, opened the repository in question. There was gold in it; there were family jewels; there were title-deeds, and other such papers. These were not what the seeker wanted; but he ultimately found the article in demand. It was a will. Stirring up the fire, the youth sat down by it with the precious document in his eager hands, and read thus:

"I nominate and appoint my nephew, Horace Morand, my general legatee."

"Excellent!" cried the heir, with a degree of joy which he thought it unnecessary to conceal: "I, then, am the inheritor, as the law and the rules of society indicate. By my faith, it was fit time!" As he spoke, Horace, who for two years had dreaded that his uncle would forget family ties in the love borne to strangers, drew one hand across his now cheerful brow, and read on.

"I give and devise twenty thousand francs to Garot and his wife Margaret, who have served me for thirty years with devoted fidelity." "Twenty thousand francs to these people!" was the passing thought of the young heir. "Why," said he, "they are rich enough already with what they have picked up during these same thirty years. Never mind. It is an old man's folly. I will pay this, since I can't help myself." The reading was continued.

"To Pierre, my man-servant, I give ten thousand francs. I leave ten thousand francs, also, to M. Martin notary; and it is my wish that the sum should be devoted to the dowering of his daughter Eugenie, my godchild."

"Ten thousand francs to Pierre!" thought the young man—"to an old rascal who ought rather to be turned to the door without his wages! Ten thousand francs to M. Martin, an old notary, who has a beautiful villa at Ville d'Avray, and wealth enough of his own! Ah, this is no dower, my worthy uncle, but a remembrance to Madame Martin. Scandal is sometimes right. I won't pay a penny of this. I will see M. Martin, and tell him what a disgrace it would be in him to take money in this shape, and what the world—or at least the scandal-loving part of it—might say of him." The reading was continued.

"I bequeath to Victoire Dubois, daughter of my brave friend, who died for his country, forty thousand francs, and request that M. Martin will endeavor to have her well married, and give her the said sum as a dowry." The reader of the will sat silent for a time, with a gloomy brow. "To a young workman at Paris," continued the testament, when the reading was resumed, "by name Gustave, whom my nephew Horace knows well, and in whom I am much interested, I give the sum of one hundred thousand francs."

"Give to this stranger lad a hundred thousand francs! Never—he shall never have a fraction of this sum." Horace Morand threw down the will as he spoke, and rose hastily. He took several turns through the apartment, and then, though the morning was a cold one of November, he threw up the window, and gazed abroad. Before him lay an immense park, filled with stately trees, and, beyond them, a wide range of fertile plains, verdant in spite of the season, and spotted with numerous flocks and herds, the best in all Normandy. Through the country rolled the beautiful waters of the Seine. "All this is mine," said the young man; "I am the natural inheritor of it—the only relative of its late possessor. Why should I give away any part of my rights to dower another man's daughter, and pension a young tradesman, for an old man's freak? This will robs me. Without any such document, the law, as it should do, would give me all. No: I will not yield up my family rights in this way." The new heir wrought himself up by these sophistries to a dark frame of mind. He forgot that vast wealth would remain to him after all, and that his own conduct as a nephew had long been scandalously bad, though, during two past years, self-interest had made him seemingly attentive to his uncle, and regardful of his advices. All this the young man forgot, and he showed that he forgot it by an act of a kind scarcely to be characterized in proper language. After moving about for a time in increasing excitement and passion, he suddenly seized the will and threw it into the flames.

He was watching its expiring ashes when a knock came to the hall door. Horace hastened to close the escritoire, and replace the keys, after which he himself went to the door to receive the visitor. This was M. Martin, the notary alluded to in the will, and who, informed by the message of the late death, had come to behold his friend Morand once more, and to take counsel relative to the deceased's affairs. The notary was a man almost as old as the defunct, and his manner was peculiarly affecting as he knelt down at his entrance before the bed, and took the hand of M. Morand, kissing it respectfully and tearfully. He then turned to Horace, and, with the ease of a man of business, passed to necessary affairs.

"I am sorry," said he, at the outset, with candid firmness, "to see you alone here, Mr. Horace. Such a thing is somewhat contrary to forms, where third parties are interested." "Third parties!" said the other sharply. Yes, third parties," replied Martin. "You will find a will, Mr. Horace." "Possibly enough," said the young man. "It is certain, sir," answered the notary. "My late friend told me of its existence yesterday, some hours before his death. The document will be discovered in that escritoire (here the notary pointed to it,) and it is your duty, Mr. Horace, as my late friend's instructions make it also mine, to search for this valuable document without delay. It is proper, likewise, that all the servants of the house, who may be interested, should be present at this search." "Certainly; do what you conceive to be necessary," replied the nephew, in an easy, natural manner. And accordingly, all the domestics then present in the house were assembled to aid in the proposed examination. The search was most minute, but fruitless. At the close, the old notary sent away all the servants, and, on being alone with Horace, said to him calmly, "It is impossible that a will should not exist. Your uncle some time since assured me that he would make it, and yesterday he told me that he had fulfilled his intent."

"Can you suspect my honesty?" answered Horace. "I know nothing of all this."

"I found you here alone," said the notary, preserving an air of cold firmness; "but I wish to impugn no one's good faith. Listen to me, however. Your youth has been a dissipated one, nay, as your uncle thought, a vicious one. You know that your conduct drove you from your uncle's house. He intended to disinherit you. I interposed, and reminded him that you were the son of an only brother whom he loved, and of a sister-in-law to whom he had promised to watch over your welfare. I succeeded in reconciling you with your uncle. Since that time, now two years ago, you have been well conducted, or seemingly so. Heaven only knows if your reformation was sincere—your uncle never believed it."

"Did my uncle do me that injustice?" cried Horace.

"He had the belief to which I refer," continued M. Martin; "and it was with difficulty that I extracted from him a promise, some time back, to appoint you his general legatee, a promise which, as I have said, he informed me of his having fulfilled." After a brief pause, the notary proceeded: "But, supposing no will were found, you would be heir-at law and would come into possession of all, as the nearest relative, what would you then do?" "Do!" exclaimed the youth; "what should I do but enjoy the fortune left to me?" "True," said the notary, "but your uncle often expressed his resolution to provide for certain persons, his domestics, for example, and to leave them with the means of comfortably enjoying life after his own decease." "If he had really had this desire," returned Horace, coldly, "he would have taken the means to assure its fulfilment." "It is necessary, moreover," pursued the notary, without heeding this remark, "that I should disclose a secret to you, Mr. Horace. Your uncle had a child, though never married." "You calumniate my uncle, sir," said the nephew; "I do not believe him capable of having so erred." "The case, nevertheless, is as I say," continued M. Martin; and you yourself know the child, now an apprentice in Paris. An honest, well behaved boy poor Gustave is; and your uncle not only meant to establish him in life, but also proposed to disinherit yourself, and leave all to this boy, at the time when you incurred his deserved displeasure."

"All this is absurd, sir," said the young heir; "pass on to other matters, if you have more to say, and let us have done with this useless talk."

"The will!—the will! young man," returned the notary; "I know there is a will!"

"Perhaps, sir," said Horace, sneeringly, "you expected some little token to come your own way!"

The aged notary seemed for a moment to have some little difficulty in restraining himself. But he commanded his temper, and proceeded earnestly to address the heir. "You know well, that, for my own part, I have a fortune sufficient for all my wants; but, in pity to these faithful old servants, conduct yourself generously and honorably, young man, and respect also the blood of your uncle. Assign some small portion of this rich heritage to these domestics, and to your uncle's son. Be humane, be just. Do not make me repent of having revived in your uncle's breast the affection of a relative, and having prevented your disinheritance. Let the boy have a slight share of the vast heritage of his father. Gustave, I know, would have compassioned you, had circumstances been reversed. Come, Mr. Horace," continued the old notary, with earnest and kind tones, and even with tears in his eyes —"come, let us search again for this will. Perhaps you may help me to find it. Come, Mr. Horace!"

The young heir assumed the appearance of a desire to satisfy the notary, notwithstanding the shade of suspicion implied in his words and manner. Again the parties turned to the escritoire, where M. Martin said the document should be; but the search was, of course, fruitless. "You see, sir," said Horace, "that the thing which we seek does not exist. You must have misunderstood my uncle, or else he himself must have been incapable, when he last spoke to you, of just thought or comprehension."

"No, young man, no," replied the notary. "Oh think, reflect! I know youth is rash. Think well, sir. Are you certain there is no will?"

"I only yield, M. Martin, to the evidence before me, and so must you," answered the young man coldly; and, as he spoke, he turned away, with the air of one who has already condescended too far, and will continue his forbearance no more

"Well, well!" said M. Martin, in severe and altered tones, "I must do my duty." He then went to the door, and called on the servants. All of them speedily appeared at his summons; and, while Horace Morand looked on with a cheek now grown pale in spite of himself, through a sense of alarm inspired by the notary's change of manner, the following words fell from the lips of the latter individual: "I have called you all hither to learn that, two years ago, M. Morand deposited a will in my hands. By that will, he disinherited his nephew, M. Horace Morand; and, with the exception of legacies to servants and others, devised his whole fortune to a young man, Gustave ——, whom he named general legatee. Authority was formally given to me to produce this will, and see it fulfilled, in the event of no later one being found to exist at the testator's decease. Such being the case, I produce this will as instructed; and my care must now be to see it executed, and to do justice to Gustave and all others concerned."

The whole force of a thunderbolt could not have prostrated a human being so completely as this disclosure did the profligate, who now saw himself stripped of a splendid fortune by his own villanous act. At a period subsequent to these events, M. Martin and the generous boy Gustave bestowed a settlement on Horace Morand, in such a way as to secure to him the necessaries of life; but it was only after he had been brought to confess, in abject terms, the story of his guilt, and to describe the whole train of feelings under which he had acted. These the reader has had pictured forth to him here, and in such a way, we hope, as to have interested him in some degree, as well as to have impressed him strongly with a sense of the value of the maxim, "Honesty is the best policy."

TOPHAM, AND OTHER STRONG MEN.

THOMAS TOPHAM, "the Strong Man," as he was usually called, was born in London about the year 1710. He was bred to the trade of a carpenter, and, although his stature never exceeded five feet ten, soon became remarkable for the extraordinary vigor of his muscular powers. His passion for athletic exercises led to his deserting his regular trade, and adopting that of an innkeeper. At his house of the "Red Lion," on the City Road, he gave the first public display of his astonishing powers, by pulling against a horse, with his feet placed on a low wall for support. He next tried his strength against two horses, but received a lasting injury in one of his legs, though to a certain extent successful in the accomplishment of the proposed feat. These exertions were made by way of rivalling those of a German performer who went to England, and drew against two horses with success. But the German executed the feat, not by sheer strength, as in Topham's case, but by a skilfully arranged piece of mechanism, which disseminated the strain through the lower part of the trunk. Other performances of the German, such as his allowing stones to be broken on his body, and the like, were managed in a similar way, by artifice more than strength.

Topham trusted only to his unaided muscular powers, and by their means he effected the following very wonderful tasks. With his fingers, he rolled up a very large and strong pewter dish. Thrusting the bowl of a very thick tobacco pipe under his garter, his legs being bent, he broke it to pieces with the tendons of his ham. He broke a similar bowl between his first and second finger, by pressing them together sideways. A table, six feet long, with half a hundredweight fastened to the end of it, was lifted by him with his teeth, and held for a considerable time in a horizontal position. He struck an iron poker, a yard long and three inches thick, against his bare left arm, between the elbow and wrist, till the instrument was bent so as to form a right angle. Taking another poker of the same kind, he held the ends of it in his hands, and placing the middle against the back of his neck, made both ends meet before him, after which he pulled it almost straight again. He broke a rope two inches in circumference, though he was obliged to exert four times the strength requisite for the purpose, in consequence of the awkward way in which he applied his powers to the task. He lifted a stone roller, weighing eight hundred pounds, by means of a chain fastened to it, using his hands only, and standing on a frame above the roller. But, perhaps, of all Topham's feats, the most surprising was his lifting of three hogsheads of water, weighing in all one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six pounds, in the presence of multitudes of spectators assembled to witness the exertion.

The attention which Topham devoted to athletic exhibitions, and the habits to which these exhibitions naturally led, had the effect to withdraw his mind from serious business, and he became a bankrupt. After this event he travelled over the country, and gave regular displays of his muscular strength in the majority of the provincial towns. The famous William Hutton of Birmingham, when resident in his native Derby, witnessed Topham's feats, and has not disdained to give an admiring record of them in his writings. Hutton's statement is characterized by his wonted clearness and accuracy. "Topham, being obliging enough to allow his person to be examined, was found to be extremely muscular; what were hollows under the arms and hams of others, were filled up with ligaments in him." After mentioning that Topham was above thirty years of age, and had a slight limp in consequence of the fracture of his leg, caused by drawing against the horses, the writer proceeds: "The performances of this wonderful person, in whom was united the strength of twelve men, consisted in rolling up a pewter dish of seven pounds, as a man rolls up a sheet of paper; holding a pewter quart at arm's length, and squeezing the sides together like an eggshell; lifting two hundredweight with his little finger, and moving it gently over his head. The bodies he touched seemed to have lost their power of gravitation. He also broke a rope, fastened to the floor, that would sustain twenty hundredweight."

Hutton mentions other feats, similar to those previously enumerated here, and continues thus:

"Weakness and feeling seemed fled together. Being a master of music, he entertained the company with 'Mad Tom.' I heard him also a sing a solo to the organ in St. Werburgh's church, then the only one in Derby; but though he might perform with judgment, yet the voice, more terrible than sweet, seemed scarcely human. Though of a pacific temper, and with the appearance of a gentleman, yet he was liable to the insults of the rude. The hostler at the Virgin's Inn, where he resided, having given him some cause of displeasure, Topham took one of the kitchen spits from the mantel-piece, and bent it round the man's neck like a handkerchief; but as he did not choose to tuck the ends in the hostler's bosom, the cumbrous ornament excited the laughter of the company till he condescended to untie the cravat. Had he not abounded in good nature, the men might have been in fear for the safety of their persons, and the women for that of their pewter-shelves, for he could instantly double up both." His strength not being particularly apparent at first sight, his ordinary and non-professional displays excited the more astonishment. One day two strangers of powerful make and quarrelsome temper, entered his tavern, and, after evincing much insolence, would fight with the quiet and patient landlord. He was at length obliged to seize them respectively by the nape of the neck, when, in spite of the most violent struggles, he coolly butted their heads together, till they asked pardon of all present in abject terms. In like manner, on the occasion of a race-exhibition, being annoyed, along with others, by a carter who would force his wagon into the scene of the sport, Topham took hold of the back of the vehicle, and dragged it back, horse, man, and all, till the way was sufficiently cleared; the carter, in the meanwhile, striving to push his horse forward, yet not daring to lay a finger on the man who was giving this terrible proof of strength.

Annoyed, like Sampson, by a wife of uncongenial dispositions, Topham fell into distresses, and died in the prime of his age.

Topham appears to have been one of the strongest men of whom we have authentic accounts. Yet very striking things are told of the men of antiquity, of which some must be true. Regarding various individuals who filled the throne of the Cæsars, in particular, wonderful stories are told; and these are the more likely to be correct, as the Roman soldiery put their favorites into the imperial chair chiefly for personal and physical qualities. Maximin, the emperor, was so strong in body, that he drew loaded wagons with ease. He struck out the teeth of a horse with his fist, and by a kick broke its thigh. He crumbled stones between his fingers, and cleft young but stout trees with his hands. Caius Marius, another of those nominated to the empire by the soldiers, is said to have stayed with his fourth finger a cart drawn by horses, and to have drawn it backward in the same way. With single fingers of his two hands, acting against one another, he could break strong cords twisted together. The Emperor Aurelian is stated by a credible author, Flavius Vopiscus, to have been of great stature, and of such marvellous strength, that he slew, in one engagement with the Sarmatians, no less than forty-nine men. Similar feats are told of other members of the imperial line, and, from the way in which these sovereigns were selected, many of these anecdotes are entitled to belief.

Froissart, a writer of undeniable honesty, speaks of a companion-knight to the Earl of Foix, one Orlando Burg, who, being hurried for fuel one cold day, went down a long flight of steps, and, finding asses loaded with wood in the court, seized the largest of them, burden and all, and never stopped till he had laid ass and all from his shoulders on the fire—a position, however, not long kept by the ass at least, as may be believed. In the French "Bibliotheque des Gens de Cour," we are told of a man named Barsabas, who was a soldier of Louis XIV.'s guards, and who, on one occasion, when the king's heavy coach of state stuck so fast in the road that all the oxen and horses that could be yoked to it were unable to pull it out, applied his single strength to it from below, and lifted it out of the place. A man was about to fight with Barsabas, and when the two were holding out their hands, the strong fellow seized the fist of the other, and by a gentle squeeze, utterly disabled him from using the limb. Barsabas could snap horse shoes in two as easily as wafers. He went in one day to a village farrier's, and said he wished for horse-shoes. Several were shown to him, and he broke them to pieces one by one with his fingers, saying they were uselessly brittle. The farrier stared, but proposed to make stronger ones. While beginning the task, Barsabas took up the large anvil and held it under his cloak. When the anvil was sought for, he set it down, on which the farrier, seeing such miraculous feats, ran off with the exclamation, that the devil in person was in his smithy.

Barsabas, the French work tells us, once met his match, however. He went into a rope-shop in Flanders, his native region, and sought to purchase some strong ropes. Several being presented to him, he snapped them like pack-thread, and said "they were very bad." "I will give you better ones," said the woman who was selling the articles, "if you have money to pay for them." Barsabas immediately produced several crown pieces. The woman took them up and broke two or three of them as easily as Barsabas had snapped the ropes. "Your crowns are as bad as my ropes," said the woman, smiling. The astonished visitor made inquiries, and found a solution of the mystery of the woman's strength in the fact that she was his own sister! They had not met from infancy, and had both left the place of their nativity.

SUCCESS IN LIFE.—Keep the law of duty ever before you; let it be your never-failing pillar of light. Be brave, and on the square with your conscience to the last. Your success in life may not be equal to your hopes or your deserts; it is not in man to insure success. The best and wisest of us may fail in the struggle; but we may have our consolation even then. To gain the world's applause, and snatch its fleeting spoils, is not man's sole and proper business here. Immortality smiles forth on the scene, and beckons him ever onward in the race for those eternal honors, which the world can neither give nor take away; the prize which all may strive for, and no one strive in vain.

GERMAN ARISTOCRACY.

THE German aristocracy is the only aristocracy of its kind in Europe. Other aristocracies have a great political and social influence, and govern their countrymen, and teach them the fashions. In other countries there is a love of titles and of high-sounding names, of crosses and decorations, of precedence and of patronage. But there are points in the German nobility that are not found in even the most aristocratic of other countries. In the first place, the nobility is opposed politically to the people, to all popular aspirations, to budgets, constitutions, and all other such contrivances of revolutionary spirits, and the nobles are still politically supreme. There is much kicking against the pricks in some parts of Northern Germany; the lower part of the nation is much inclined to throw off the yoke if it only knew how, but at this moment the nobility still rules. There, and there alone in Europe, a reactionary nobility is in possession of the reins of government.

In Spain the grandees are very awful and big grandees, but they either reside on their estates and sulk, or they take part, and not a very prominent part, in politics. In France the old noblesse have no political power whatever, and the old social superiority is gradually fading away. In Italy the aristocracy is everywhere so far at the head of the national movement that aristocrats who stand aloof from it are simply left out in the cold. Even in Austria the nobility, as a whole, takes its tones principally from the great magnates of Hungary and Bohemia, who have the feelings of provincial grandees, and not of those aliens from the mass of the people. In North Germany alone the political life of the nation is determined by the existence of a nobility that has no sympathy with its inferiors, and is thoroughly convinced that it is its inherent, indisputable privilege to lead the vulgarly born as if they were sheep.

Socially, too, the aristocracy hangs round the neck of Germany like an old man of the sea. Germans are literally throttled by their nobility. They cannot speak, or think, or move without showing that they feel the difference between them and not being a Von. They are so accustomed from their cradle to the notion of a superior caste which has sacred rights over them, that they cannot, through their whole lives, emancipate themselves from the bondage to which they are subjected. Nor does royalty do much to help them. Every now and then there is a sovereign who does not merge himself in the aristocracy. The House of Coburg has made itself conspicuous by its desire to seek in its popular sympathies a support against the claims of the petty aristocracy in its provinces.

The late King of Prussia had a vague notion of honoring intellect as much as birth, and of setting the notabilities of literature and science against the notabilities of noble society. His poor, wandering head was full of Egyptian antiquities, and Roman topography, and Jernsalem bishoprics, and of a vast amount of literary and ecclesiastical moonshine, and he naturally was pleased to think that people who were somewhat like him were as good as his marshals and his chamberlains. But all the opposition of German royalty to German aristocracy has hitherto been transient and ineffective. The kings and the nobles feel alike, think alike, believe alike, and it would be difficult for either to get on without the other, and the aristocracy keeps its hand on Germany simply because it is a caste. It has no virtues to attract, no splendid qualities to dazzle, no elegance, or refinement, or courtesy to charm its inferiors. It does nothing except puff itself, and swagger, and curse, and treat the vulgar like dogs. It is not only by far the most powerful, it is also by far the least gallant, the least intelligent, the least dignified, the least well-bred aristocracy in Europe. But its demerits give it its strength. If it were better than it is it would hate its present self; it would feel more deeply, think more deeply, behave more courteously. But, because it is gross, it is compact. It coheres as a caste, which could not be a caste if it did not cohere, and the great mass of Germans accept it because the inveterate force of habit has persuaded them that such a caste must exist.

THE CHOLERA IN PARIS.—"Spiridion," the usually lively correspondent of the Boston Evening Gazette, in a recent letter, says: Paris has lost all its gaiety. We are a city of mourners and affrighted people. Our only songs are requiems. Our spectacles are funerals. Our conversation bulletins of the cholera and specifics against that dreaded malady. Every body who could leave Paris has fled, and we, who are rivetted here, are busily engaged taking care of our health. Talk to us of pleasure; we reply pills. Tell us about beauty; we answer rice (judge how frightened we are!) Suggest the theatres; we respond laudanum. Ask us the news; we give Velpeau's suggestions on curing cholera. Baron de Rothschild has fallen immensely in our estimation—we place above him the meanest apothecary. Ought not I to throw down my pen and be silent for once (for the first time in fifteen years!) seeing my oaten pipe is not pitched to your tunes? A thousand dead have been carried from among us—can I from this house of mourning rise to your present humor? It is not easy.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1866.

THE CALIFORNIAN is now under the editorial control of its founder—CHARLES HENRY WEBB—who is also one of the proprietors.

THE OUTSIDE LANDS.

THE controversy about the Outside Lands is maintained by two classes of persons—the "ins" and the "outs." Those who are in possession want to retain "all they've got," while those who are out argue in favor of a division. The ins contend that the city, by passing the Van Ness Ordinance, established a precedent and indicated a policy in favor of giving her lands to actual settlers—to those in possession. The outs—those who at present possess none of the Outside Lands—say the decree of confirmation is to the city in trust for the use and benefit of all the inhabitants of the city and county of San Francisco, and that therefore, so far as these lands are concerned, the rights of each and every inhabitant of the city are coequal and coextensive. The Supervisors, in the plan recommended by them to the Legislature for the settlement of this question, have chosen neutral ground—they do not adopt the extreme views of either party to the controversy, but, while recognizing certain equities in favor of the settlers, they at the same time maintain the rights of the city. Should the Legislature adopt the plan recommended, it will insure the city sufficient lands for

First—Streets.
Second—A public park.
Third—A cemetery.
Fourth—Land for school and engine houses.
Fifth—Land for charitable purposes.

Besides these reservations, the percentage proposed to be charged for lands to be granted to actual settlers will constitute a fund of, it is supposed, from $100,000 to $200,000 all of which is to be expended upon the Outside Lands for the following purposes:

First—The construction of free roads to the Ocean beach.

Second—The improvement of the grounds reserved for a public park.

Third—Paying for land taken for public uses.

By its provisions, no claimant is allowed to hold more than fifty acres, and, as a condition precedent to the city's issuing grants, claimants are required to quit claim and peaceably deliver to the city possession of all over the maximum quantity, and to pay at the rate of thirty per cent. of the appraised value of said lands for the fifty acres which may be allotted to them. For ten acres, ten per cent.; twenty acres, fifteen per cent.; thirty acres, twenty per cent.; forty acres, twenty-five per cent.; and fifty acres, thirty per cent. of its appraised value—irrespective of the value of improvements, and all taxes paid on the lands claimed since 1860, for municipal purposes, to count as a part of the amount assessed and payable to the city. It is thought that this plan will be substantially adopted by the San Francisco delegation in the Legislature, and, if it be, there is scarcely a doubt but that it will become a law this session. It is desirable for all—both settlers and the city—to have the title to these lands finally quieted and settled. Once settled, the city can tax the lands in question for the support of the Government—State and Municipal; and the owners will find in the security which a perfect title affords inducements to improve and make them valuable.

Were the pretentious demands of the squatters upon those lands to be granted, the city would not be left a place wherein to bury her indigent dead. As it is, a man must be worth a small fortune at the time of his death to insure his remains decent burial. The poor may with justice ask to be spared on earth until they themselves become rich enough to afford a grave, or until the city can afford a last resting place at a reasonable charge. Even the man of moderate means cannot afford burial to himself in justice to the family he may be compelled to leave behind him. Yet every foot of land enclosed in those cemeteries belongs to this city—that is, to the people of San Francisco; and the fair proportion of each, were a division made, would certainly be more than equivalent to a spot sufficient for a grave.

MILLER RIGHT.—Collector General Miller has removed a score or more of inspectors, watchmen and clerks from the Custom House, to give the situations to those who were in active service during the war. Quite a number of the new appointees have undergone amputations, or been disabled by wounds.

CROWDING THE CONDEMNED.

THE passing of sentence of death on a human being is the most solemn and responsible duty which public justice entrusts to its ministers. The fatal mandate should be pronounced with a seriousness befitting the occasion, and with a deep sense of its awful significance to the prisoner at the bar. No feeling of self-importance, no desire to make the bench a scene for theatrical display, should be allowed to mingle with those solemn emotions which the announcement of the legal fiat of death is calculated to awaken in every reflecting mind. The Judge who, under such circumstances, can think of his own personal dignity, and study how he can best perform his part so as to impress the audience with a sense of his importance, has a poor conception of the true dignity of his station.

The ancient and approved form of passing sentence of death was as follows:

"You, A. B., shall be taken from the place where you are, and be carried to the place whence you came, and from thence [naming the time] to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck, until you be dead; and the Lord have mercy on your soul!"

This was all that was formerly said in sentencing a prisoner to death, except in treason, and for that offence certain atrocious barbarities were described in the sentence, which the humanity of later times has happily rendered obsolete. It is difficult to see why this formula is not preferable to those long and circumstantial harangues which modern innovation seems bent on introducing in its place. It is concise, solemn, and to the point. What useful purpose is answered by informing the prisoner that he was tried by twelve good and lawful men, that he was defended by able and zealous counsel, and that after an impartial trial he was convicted? It is not necessary that a sentence of death should be framed on the model of a decree in chancery—reciting every step in the progress of the case until final judgment. Why tell the prisoner that he was convicted, when the very best evidence of it is that he stands at the bar awaiting his doom? All this verbiage is useless. It only keeps the Judge a little longer before the public gaze, and lengthens out the spectacle in which he acts so conspicuous a part.

As it is not necessary to inform the prisoner, with tedious prolixity, of the steps that have preceded his conviction, still less is it necessary to enter into minute details respecting those which are to follow it. We observe in the death sentence lately pronounced upon a prisoner found guilty of murder in the first degree, one of two expressions for which we are not aware that any precedent can be found, and which we hope are not destined to become a precedent in the Courts of this State. The prisoner was told that after sentence he was to be taken to prison, and there kept in close confinement until the day of execution, and was then to "be hanged by the neck on a proper gallows to be provided for the purpose," until he should suffer death. These patibulary directions contribute nothing to the force or dignity of the judicial sentence. They make us exclaim with Hamlet: "Pah! it smells of mortality." They call up unpleasant suggestions of barbarous and bygone times, when the horrid details of punishments diabolically cruel were duly announced to the prisoner on whom they were soon to be inflicted. But the Judges of those days had this excuse, that these details were a necessary portion of the sentence, and their absence would have rendered it illegal. But no such justification now exists for minutely picturing to the criminal the means and appliances by which his death is to be accomplished. Sentence of death is just as legal without any allusion to the "proper gallows to be provided for the purpose" as with it. In the dispensations of Providence, it sometimes becomes necessary to perform a harsh duty, but the truly humane man, who has learned

"Never to blend his pleasure or his pride
With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels,"

will never prolong or aggravate the pain he is called on to inflict.

It is a matter to be regretted that in any portion of the administration of justice, a step should be taken in a backward direction—away from the humanity of the present wards the cruelty of the past. We trust that in future it may be found consistent with a conscientious discharge of judicial duty to omit in the death-sentence all farther allusion to the "proper gallows to be provided for that purpose," and to leave to the Sheriff, without this suggestion, the preparation of the necessary arrangements for accomplishing the last act of human justice.

WE MAY BE HAPPY YET!—A very interesting account of how a first poem was written is published in another column. One reason for publishing it, aside from a desire to gratify an exacting contributor, is the explanation it offers why the authoress was left out from a recent collection of California poems, which has caused much controversy. Would it have been fair to ring in a real harp against the hypothetical lutes of the other bards? to pit a poet supernaturally aided against others who had only their own imagination to back them? It would manifestly be quite as unfair as it were to pit a game cock with steel spurs against one not artificially "fixed." However, we hope the Harp will be unlike that one which is familiar to all in connection with mention of Tara's walls.

AMUSEMENTS.

NEW Year's evening was a brilliant one for the theatres, bringing them such audiences as are seldom seen in this rather theatre-worn community. With the young men it seemed to be

Call all day
Till twilight gray,
And go out with the girls in the evening.

The staid married man took his wife upon one arm and the "young person" of the family upon the other, and went forth to his reserved seat: Augustus, throwing all thought of expense to the winds, treated Laura Matilda to a sight of the show, and Bill took Sally under his lee and sallied forth. Finding one place of amusement filled, pleasure-seekers would drift around to another, and so it was that all got overflowing audiences.

Maguire's Opera House carried off the honors, being packed after a fashion somewhat strange to its walls since the departure of the Keans. Every nook and corner in the building was filled to an extent which compelled late comers to crop out on the staircase and look at the ceiling over the heads of those who occupied the higher flights. The attraction of the evening was The French Spy, Charlotte Crampton appearing as the heroine. Miss Crampton acted the character well, her pantomime being very good, indeed, and the immense audience seemed "immensely" pleased. The piece has been continued to very good houses until last evening. Aside from its spectacular display, the piece, as every one knows, is dependant for success upon what may emphatically be termed a "leg part." This fell to Miss Crampton, and naturally enough her extremities were forced to pale their ineffectual fires in comparison with the splendor of the fiery and untamed proportions that whilom were displayed upon the same boards. But Miss Crampton's pantomime is graceful and natural, and it is only physically that her predecessor has the advantage. She dresses the character like Mme. Celeste, with the exception of wearing gaiter boots instead of sandals—an innovation at which an Arab boy would be very apt to kick in travelling over the desert—but probably the lady had insufficient time to complete her wardrobe. On Friday evening, the Eureka Benevolent Association had a benefit, Mr. Baudmann again appearing as 'Hamlet." This afternoon, The French Spy will be given.

This evening, George C. Boniface, who leaves on the next steamer, takes a farewell benefit. The bill presented for the occasion is an ample and excellent one, comprising three melodramatic pieces—Black-Eyed Susan, The Dumb Girl of Genoa, and A Glance at New York. Mr. Boniface has made many friends among us, and we look to see a full house at his benefit. On Monday evening—being the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans—the McMahon Grenadier Guards announce a benefit. Mr. Boniface and Mr. Aldrich have both volunteered for the occasion; it will be the last appearance of these gentlemen in California, Mr. Aldrich also taking his departure on the next steamer, to enter upon an eastern engagement. Kathleen Mavourneen will be produced with the full strength of the company.

Mr. Setchell returned from Sacramento on Tuesday, Harry Jackson having gone up to fill his place—whether he will or not remains to be seen. In Sacramento—which in the early placer days was golden ground—Mr. Setchell has won golden opinions from all sorts of Sacramentans. On Tuesday evening he will commence a farewell engagement at Maguire's Opera House, appearing as "Sir John Falstaff," in the Merry Wives of Windsor. Mr. Setchell took this same character in New Orleans a few years ago, winning encomiums from the rather fastidious critics of the Crescent City. On Thursday the new farce of the The April Fool and The Census. Apropos of the first mentioned piece, it is about as funny as anything well can be, and, if there be anything in merit, cannot fail to make a hit. One word for Mr. Setchell. Coming to this city unheralded and unpuffed in advance, he at once won upon his audiences, and made one of the most genuine successes that has been made in this country. In the first place, Nature has been bountiful for him in his line of business, cutting him out in face and figure for a comedian. People are disposed to laugh at the first glimpse of his mobile countenance. Withal, he himself is a wit and humorist of no common calibre, and this is a decided advantage to the comedian. It is difficult to understand or interpret the humor of others without having a trick that way oneself. It may also be said of Mr. Setchell that he is never vulgar, and here he rises above Burton, with whom he is so often compared, who was not unfrequently broad to indecency. Those familiar with Burton's style will exonerate Setchell from the favorite accusation of imitation, for the "Captain Cuttle" of the latter is, in reality, as different from that of the former as a sketch of that individual drawn by Gustave Doré would be from one executed by Hogarth. Certain resemblances may exist without imitation. "The Dutch Governor," one of Mr. Setchell's best characters, was never played by the Momus of Chambers street. It may also be said for Mr. Setchell that his repertoire is extensive and varied, and that while he plays very many characters so well as to be beyond comparison with any other comedian that we know of, he plays nothing badly. We rejoice at Mr. Setchell's return, and regret that he is so soon to leave us.

It was a shrewd business talent that prompted the head and front of the Blaisdell Bell-ringer troupe to avail himself of the run of Arrah na-Pogue and the excitement relative to that Isle popularly called "Emerald," by getting up an exhibition which, while comparatively inexpensive, would possess the very essential element of popularity. We have the result in "The Hibernicon"—a word for which the philological enthusiast will search all known dictionaries in vain—now on exhibition at the Academy of Music, and drawing excellent houses. Translated into the vernacular, "Hibernicon" means Panorama of Irish Scenery. The paintings, though not conceived upon that gigantic scale sometimes attempted, are very well executed. the perspective being particularly well managed. The scenes selected for illustration are ones possessed of historical interest, and the accompanying "lecture" is sufficiently descriptive to serve as a finger-post to all. The mechanism of Mr. Warwick's delivery is rather monotonous, and we fancy that auditors sometimes think that an automaton could be invented to be worked by the same crank that rotates the canvas, which would fit Mr. Warwick's place very comfortably. A few practical encounters with the common French phrases of the day would improve his pronunciation of them somewhat. The Bulletin, which is given to gushing of late, says that the painter has "vitalized the canvas"—it probably means that it moves, which is a fact. The rest of the entertainment, consisting of bell-ringing, harp solos, etc., is very good, though we are forced to put in a slight protest against one feature. It is just possible to have too much "Little Clara," and probably there are very few in the audience who do not at times wish to change the Little for Less Clara. A matinee is given this afternoon.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

EASTERN exchanges by the last steamer bring us the first Message of President Johnson, in full. It is simple, compact, and forcible in style, and its tone throughout is one to inspire confidence in the Administration. It is rather to be regretted that the President thought it necessary to declare in one of the opening sentences of the Message, that there is "cast upon him a heavier weight of cares than ever devolved upon any of his predecessors," for, aside from the thought that this inference might, with better taste, have been left for others to draw, it will naturally occur to the reflective mind that however weighty his cares may be those of his immediate predecessor were certainly no less so. But this lapse is to be forgiven in the frank appeal for support and confidence which is made its corrollary, and for which the statement furnishes a very sufficient plea.

The Message is a diplomatic one. It was thought that President Johnson would err on the score of rashness, but his Message displays a prudence and reticence for which all were not prepared. Regarding our claims against Great Britain, for damages committed upon our commerce by the pirates which she launched, while expressing the opinion that the justification which she offers will not avail her before the proposed tribunal of nations, he at the same time does not advise that we assume a belligerent attitude—hinting that arbitration is preferable to battle. As to the Monroe Doctrine the Message is noncommittal, but there is nothing to indicate that a war with France will very soon be waged on Maximilian's account. Reconstruction and reduction of the national debt will occupy the energies of the Administration rather than plans for the conduct of a foreign war. We do not doubt that President Johnson's Message will be accepted, on all sides, as an earnest of his competence to the onerous position into which he was so suddenly and unexpectedly thrust.

THE KEARNY STREET IMPROVEMENT. — The Commissioners announce that they expect to complete the widening of Kearny street during the present year. The amount awarded for the property taken will be tendered to each owner, who can place his claim in litigation, if dissatisfied; but, after the render of such award, the committee have the legal power to remove his buildings, so that nothing can interfere to prevent their pushing the work to rapid completion. Kearny street, when widened, will take the first rank as a thoroughfare and business street, and the increase in the value of property situated along its line, and the corresponding advance of rents, is a strong argument in favor of property owners lending their assistance to the furtherance of the work by accepting the amounts awarded. It is not conjectured that much difficulty in the way of litigation will be encountered.

FILED IN ANSWER.—In another column the lover of statistics and details will find a lively bit of reading—the reply of the Connecticut Mutual Insurance Company to the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, Bigelow & Bro., agents of the former company—have produced a literary work only second to the editorials of our morning and evening journals. We have a high esteem for the Connecticut Mutual, founded upon its merit and the statement that the income of the Company is $3,000,000 a year.

THE sailing of the Ajax for Honolulu has been postponed until Saturday, January 13th.

BIG BONES.

IF the Mountain Post may be credited, some very tall gentlemen used to dwell in those "diggings" before the present generation of men went thither to dig. What enormous tunnels the giants of those days must have drilled through mountains, and what sport apple-picking must have been for them. It is easy to believe that the fossil remains of quadrupeds "twice as large as an Asiatic elephant," found by their sides, are those of the horses whereon those big first-cousins of ours were accustomed to ride:

"On Meagher's Bar, opposite Nevada, have been discovered fossils that unmistakably prove that this part of the world was at one time inhabited by a race of human beings who stood, in maturity, from ten to twelve feet high; and by a species of quadrupeds at least twice as large as the Asiatic elephant. They are imbedded about eighteen feet, in what might be termed a close diluvial deposit, and in which the configuration of the country indicates was once the eddy of a river. As an evidence of the former, we now have before us the jawbone—anatomically termed the inferior maxillary—of a biped, which is almost double the size of an ordinary human jawbone. From point to point of the condyles—the upper projections, where the junction is made with the corresponding parts above—this fossil measures five inches. It is in a most perfect state of preservation, so perfect, indeed, that had it been of ordinary size one would have supposed that its owner had not made his or her exit from this "vale of tears" over fifteen or twenty years ago. The enamel of the teeth still remains bright and uninjured by the action of fire, water or air. Not a tooth is lost. They comprise six grinders or molars (the usual number) and ten others, being sixteen in all. They have been much worn by the labor of mastication, which fact proves that this American Goliah did not cease to use them until they had prepared for his stomach the food of many years, perhaps not until the other functions of his physical organization had weakened from old age, when the utility of the teeth ceased, though decay has not marked them by a single perforation. The fact is also a good conjectural argument that this being belonged to a race similar in their habits to the existing tribes of natives, who even in their old age are notable for the fine state of their teeth. The jawbone is the only portion of the remains we have seen, but ribs and other bones were found near the spot, which undoubtedly belong to the same individual, as they are all of the proportionate size. It has been estimated by members of the medical fraternity here, that the height of this biped could not have been less than ten and a half, and might have reached twelve feet!"

BULL FIGHTING.

WITHOUT going into a very extended argument as to whether or not bull-fighting is a Christian amusement, we will at once assume that it can scarcely, even by the most polite periphrasis, be called a parlor sport. In Spain, where the pastime originated, it was varied in the good old days of the Inquisition. Thus, one day the populace would be entertained by a spirited combat between man and bull, and the next day the complaisant authorities would roast a few heretics in the market place for the popular delectation. Spain is generally recognized as a Christian country, but we question whether or not the highest type of civilization is found there, and we are not prepared as yet to engraft the exciting, but scarcely æsthetic sport of bull-fighting upon our regular holiday amusements. It is holly, and not hides, with which we deck our Christmas walls, and plum puddings, rather than blood pudding, is the conventional New Year's dish. Had the introduction of such sports been attempted by degrees—had they commenced, for instance, with badger-baiting—we might have taken kindly to the larger game at last, but dragging in a full-grown bull by the horns is a trifle too much for our philosophy, and we respectfully demand to have the ring closed.

We bear no ill will towards our municipal police, and we rather like the Willows. But we would prefer to see the former stirred up on all sides by sharp sticks and the latter closed, rather than that it should go abroad to the world that San Francisco, while giving liberally to the Sanitary Fund with one hand is baiting a bull with the other. The Bellows we provoke by the latter action are not at all akin to the one we won by the former charitable course. The well known and enterprising manager, Sheridan Corbyn, is said to be the proprietor of these beefy barbarisms. We cannot forbear suggesting to this gentleman that Sheridan's famous ride was not accomplished upon the back of a baited bull, and that many another hobby can be found for riding into fame and fortune.

WE should be pleased to hear from the author of In Articulo Mortis frequently. He will recognize the reason of a slight change in his article, in the fact that very many readers are lost in Latin.

IS THIS HAPPINESS?—Fifty-one cases of "drunk" were called before the Police Judge on the morning after New Years. Really, that number of persons must have a very queer idea of what a "Happy New Year" means!

THE HARP THAT ONCE, ETC.

[WE seldom copy from the columns of cotemporaries which manifest unkind feeling towards us, but in the present instance we depart from our rule. The experience chronicled is truly a remarkable one, and it is our desire to bring it before the scientific and analytical minds to which THE CALIFORNIAN has access. We regret we have not space to print the "first poem," but the other portion of the article we reproduce entire, verbatim et literatim—credit and all:]

[Written for the American Flag.]

MY FIRST POEM.

BY ELIZA A. PITTSINGER.

MR. EDITOR: You have solicited of me the publication of "My First Poem"—and as its general tone and sentiment must appear to the reader somewhat mystical, I will give in a brief note, its peculiar history. I had been for a number of weeks in a most unusual weak and listless condition, both mentally and physically, with no energy or concentration of thought on anything pertaining to the general routine of life—I was afflicted with no disease, but seemingly a general debilitated condition of the entire system—in truth, my mind seemed totally unfit for the practical realities of existence, during which time, I occasionally, in what appeared a most extraordinary and impressive dream, held converse with a being, rare, etherial, and transcendantly beautiful, whose appearance I described, not long since, in a poem entitled 'The Vision of a Poetess," contributed to the San Francisco Sunday Mercury. She came to me often, usually in the night, but on this occasion the interview occurred on a Northern eminence of "Telegraph Hill," where my poem of "The Eagle," "The Sunday Morning Prayer," and "Luella," were first impressed on my fancy. I had seen this lovely being so often that her presence no longer surprised me. I knew not the object of her visitations, nor little cared, so long as her presence brought to my morbid spirit such intense delight. On this occasion she came not in her usual dress of snowy white, but enrobed in a most queenly garment of purple, studded and embroidered with gold; on her head was a crown, burning with a million flashing diamonds, reflecting in their brilliancy all the varied hues of nature, the resemblance of which I have never discovered in the most noted places where our rarest jewels are obtained; in her hand was a harp of gold, on which she discoursed most eloquent music; and from the tones was revealed a power, thrilling, intense and electric—a power varied as the hues of her coronet, beyond imitation, and not hitherto remotely approached by the most noted "Queen of Song" of which we have knowledge.

I seemed to have become oblivious to all external realities for a time; until at last the melody died away, or became absorbed in the voices of the night, when I grasped to my soul the harp that she placed at my feet, bore it silently and tremblingly to my chamber; where in a thrill of doubtful extasy I struck its chords, the vibration of which was an imperfect echo of her own sweet and thrilling words. Have I proved myself worthy of this sacred and beautiful gift? I will wait for an answer from those of California who have given me support and encouragement; from those, whose tokens of appreciation have to come me from the Atlantic coast—and from those, perchance, who have translated some of my productions into the different languages, some of which I propose to read at the entertainment soon to be given in different portions of the State.

HOME AGAIN.—A charming little poem entitled "The Buried Heart" appears in the Bulletin of Thursday evening. Poor little waif, after having been borne around the world upon the waves of newspaperdom—for it has been copied into several English journals—it has at last come back to the doors from which it first set out upon its travels. As it has finally found its way into the columns of the Bulletin, and was long since shorn of its date and credit marks, we do not deem it improper to state that the poem was originally published in the columns of THE CALIFORNIAN, over the signature of "Dennar Stewart." The author is a young lady residing in Illinois, so that the poem can scarcely be included in the next collection of "California verse." But there are many, whose works are bound in blue and gold, who would be happy to call it their's—and probably will if they get a chance.

THE new Swimming Baths, on Third street opposite South Park, will open to-day. The swimming tank is fifty feet in breadth, by one hundred and sixty in length, and connects with sixty-six dressing-rooms. The water will be kept at blood heat, and at a uniform depth of eight feet; so that persons preferring to commit suicide by comfortably drowning themselves in warm water rather than in cold will have a chance. The advantages that this warm drowning possesses over the fashionable method of taking cold poison, are too numerous to mention. If any repent the rash act before its consummation, a small life-boat which is always kept floating in the reservoir will afford them an opportunity of letting themselves comfortably out.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort. I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, he they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Coben, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldbush & Co., 307 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call

TO POOR WRITERS.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babbittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. PELTON,
Superintendent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more evident merits.

JOHN SWETT, Supt. Pub. Instruction.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and militar at the shortest notice; also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's

---

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco.

Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality.

They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland.

Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for best the card pictures, and large photographs.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first class

Boot and Shoe Store.

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

I do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H. FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED.
de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1886. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTABLISHMENT at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,
Two Thousand Tons Burthen,
CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, . . . Commander,
FOR HONOLULU,
ON SATURDAY, ... JANUARY 6, 1866,
AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and to others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

se23-16 tf JOHN BENSLEY, President pro tem.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC

Pine street, near Montgomery.

Grand Masquerade Ball!

BY THE

ALEMANNIA,

AT MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

SATURDAY EVENING, JAN. 13, 1866.

On which occasion the parquette will be floored over level with the stage, and the whole covered with canvas. Prizes will be given to the best Lady and Gentlemen Masks, to be awarded by a committee selected from the audience.

A splendid band of music has been engaged, and no expense will be spared to make this the most brilliant affair of the season. Tickets to be had of the committee:

L. Hecht, Jr., 417 Sacramento street.
L. Schwarzschild, 320 Battery street.
A. Wungenheim, S. E. cor. California and Sansome.
C. Colman, S. W. corner Washington & Montgomery. S. H. Stern. de23-4t

---

DR. C. W. MOORE'S
Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - . - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,
No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16 3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and impossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3 3m

---

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

j12 SAN FRANCISCO

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage,
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash	$3,500,000
Paid claims by death,	6,500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864,	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14 3m

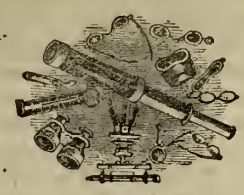
HILL'S HAIR DYE.

This Dye is superior to anything now in use, being easily applied, and imparting a natural brown or black color to the hair. For Sale by

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

ELEGANT HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

USEFUL, ORNAMENTAL, AND INSTRUCTIVE.



FINE GOLD SPECTACLES and EYE GLASSES,

SETS OF IVORY
TABLE CUTLERY,

Stereoscopic Views of California;
(OVER ONE THOUSAND NEW VIEWS.)
Richly Mounted Opera Glasses

For sale by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
317 and 319 Montgomery street.

CATALOGUES with Price List, FREE. de9 1m

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,

For Wholesale and Retail Trade,

ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,

AT QUINCY HALL,

NOS. 545, 547, 549,

Washington Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

se30 3m

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE
MECHANICS' INSTITUTE
J. PEIRCE,
415, 417, and 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the
FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM
FOR
Furniture,
AND THE
FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM
FOR THE
BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE
COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus	$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco	$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus	$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco	$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure
BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

HENRY B. PLATT, President,
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
R. N. VAN BRUNT, Secretary.
S. ROTHSCHILD, Actuary. mh25 3m

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the
BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,
The Connecticut Mutual Life
INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
AGENTS,
Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.
no26 1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S
California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 1m 28 Second street, San Fraucisco.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9 3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 141 Broadway, New York,
FOR INSURING AGAINST
Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500	$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000	15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000 (Without compensation.)	30 00
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation	12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation	25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation	50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days	$1
Eight Days	2
Twelve Days	3
Twenty Days	4
Thirty Days	5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16 3m San Francisco.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

MONDAY, JANUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship
AMERICA.

ON MONDAY, - - - - JANUARY 15TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JANUARY 10th, - - , - CONSTITUTION
From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
Jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesdorff sts.

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

THE BACHELOR'S DREAM.

"NOT guilty the verdict! Miss Harris set free!
She is kissed by her counsel! huzzaed by the crowd!"
I threw down the paper—"My stars! Can it be
That Justice approves of the dagger and shroud?

"Has the arrow of Cupid been changed for the knife,
The pistol ball, halter, and death-dealing bowl?
And woman henceforth put an end to the life
Of him who'll not give her his body and soul?"

I was horrified—shocked—at the frailty of man:
And, leaning half carelessly back in my chair,
I folded the newspaper into a fan,
And waved off the heat of the summer night air.

"What a lucky dog I am!" ran through my mind
As I pulled at my pipe and gazed at the smoke;
"I'm at peace with the world and the rest of mankind,
And women amuse me by way of a joke."

So, resting my head on the back of the chair,
I sat at the window and gazed at the sky;
The moon and a cluster of stars were all there,
But were now and then veiled by a cloud passing by.

The wreaths from my pipe and the beams of the moon
Commingled together, befogging my brain;
The breeze filled the room with a musical tune,
And my senses gave way to the soothing refrain.

In a minute thereafter there stood by my side
A bevy of ladies, each armed to the teeth,
Each dressed in the elegant robe of a bride,
Her head being crowned with a wreath.

There was Mary, whose voice I so often had praised—
She was loading a pistol with powder and shot;
While Sarah, whose eyes had me more than half crazed,
Held tight in her hand a stout rope with a knot.

There was Katie, to whom I had said once or twice,
"Sweet Katie, you'll make a most excellent wife!"
She held firm in her hand, with the gripe of a vice,
A villainous, blood-thirsty, sharp-pointed knife.

There was Frances and Georgia, and one or two more,
Each of whom I had said was a dear little soul:
They objected to seeing me writhe in my gore,
When the deed could be decently done with the bowl.

Behind them came Bridgot. Ye gods! did I think,
When I said that I loved every steak that she cooked,
That I went so close to the marital brink
That I for her lover should one day be booked?

She was armed with a poker and a large water pail—
The latter being filled with a liquid quite hot—
"Oh, heavens!" I groaned, with a piteous wail:
"I'm first to be poisoned, next scalded, then shot!"

Like Brutus I covered my face from the sight:
A moment—and then came a deafening crash!
I was shot. Was that all? No, a knife, gleaming bright,
Opened my side with a horrible gash!

I was gasping my last, when there deluged my face
The water from cold-hearted Bridget's great pail;
It revived me, and wildly I leaped from the place,
Like a felon broke loose from his iron-bound jail.

I awoke. Through the window came dashes of rain;
The thunder was dying away with a moan:
And my pipe, which had caused in my side all the pain,
Burned a hole through my clothes almost reaching the bone!

OLD FRIENDS WITH NEW FACES.

[UNDER the above head we find the following amusing article in the columns of The Nation. It abounds with dry humor and drollery, and we imagine that few can read it without a laugh:]

THE bloodlessness of turnips is a fact undoubtedly established by science; but the kindred assumption, that diplomatic correspondence must be dry and juiceless, is one on which we have learned to look with misgiving, especially since we read Mr. Seward's report on Mexican affairs for 1865. It is a large volume of state papers, to which the student of contemporary history may turn for instruction concerning the French conquest of Mexico, and the foundation of Archduke Maximilian's imperial rocking-chair upon the volcanic rules of the republic; but the report has also a lighter character, which opens upon the reader with the charm of surprise when he comes to the account given to Mr. Seward, by the Mexican Minister, of the dinner which the latter received last year from distinguished citizens of New York, in compliment to his personal and official qualities.

Señor Romero had cause (as what public man who has ever been reported has not cause?) to be dissatisfied with the newspaper histories of the dinner and its eloquence, and he prepared in Spanish a faithful relation of the whole affair, which he caused to be exactly done into English, and which he then sent to Mr. Seward. The relation embraces a narrative not only of the dinner in question, but also of a previous dinner given by Señor Romero to the eminent gentlemen who afterwards returned his compliment. In both cases, full reports of the speeches are given, with brief notices of the character and position of the guests, and a statement of the places which they relatively occupied at the time, while the whole is concluded with a copy of the bill of fare, diplomatically subscribed Delmonico." An exalted restaurateur is thus made to fill that high station in public affairs to which his talents entitle him, and his bill of fare assumes the dignity of a state paper. It is, of course, not possible to say that if Mr Delmonico could have foreseen the distinction he was to achieve in Mexican affairs he would not have subscribed his bill of fare, addressing it to some personified general public, "I have the honor, sir, to renew to you the assurance of my distinguished consideration—DELMONICO;" but we rejoice that the choice was not offered him of language alien to the national spirit, and that his name appears signed with a republican simplicity, "Fruits et Dessert"—DELMONICO." We imagine that this fortunate accident must have consoled Mexican patriots fighting against the government forced upon their country, while it gave all Spanish-America a pledge that the representation of the principle of Spanish-American liberty was worthily entrusted in this country to a man who could dine at such a democratic restaurateur's. We hope it has also not been without effect in Europe. We figure to ourselves the dismay of courts not accustomed to the publication of bills of fare among state papers when they came to that august signature, "Fruits et Dessert—DELMONICO," and tried to evolve a meaning from the appearance of the bill among our public documents, and we suppose that the Emperor of the French, who, while in this country, had scarcely the means of making acquaintance with those costly birds, must have been greatly disturbed by the words "canvas-back ducks" among the rotis. That imperial Machiavelli would suspect a more dangerous game than that which plainly appears to us under the name given, and, remembering Mr. Pickwick's declaration of love disguised in the phrase, "Chops and tomato sauce," would shudder at the menace with which these canvas-back ducks might be stuffed.

But it is not in the reproduction of Mr. Delmonico's bill of fare that Señor Romero is most ingenious, that Mr. Seward is most amusing. The one eminent statesman furnishes to the other, in the biographical notices of his guests which we have already mentioned, a great deal that is useful for Spanish-Americans to know, and even more entertaining for us to read. Perhaps, also, there is instruction in all this; and the Secretary of State has, while he diverted, wished to teach us by what slight shades of misconception the alien mind produces a ludicrous image of that which is gravest and awfullest in our esteem. The French, who love to call Shakspeare the Divine Williams, and who always spoke of a certain English Statesman as Sir Peel, have produced the same sort of flavorous absurdity which Señor Romero carries to such delightful excess in his relation. It is not a mistake, but something much droller than a mistake, when he describes Mr. Bancroft as enjoying "a well-deserved reputation as a literary man," and Mr. H. E. Pierrepont as a "protector of the fine arts," and belonging "to one of the oldest and most respectable Huguenot families." Hon. George Folsom is a "distinguished member of the Ethnological Society of New York, and consequently a noted philologist; Mr. J. W. Hammersley is "of an ancient and notable family in this city," and though not a politician (because, singularly enough, of his "independent position,") "his heart is entirely American, and he considers that the absolute independence of this continent from the old is (as he eloquently expresses it) a principle filtered in the veins of every true son of Washington by the milk that he has drawn from his mother's breast, a password and countersign, and a terrible monition to Europe!" It is on Mr. Bryant, however, that Señor Romero expends the wealth of his peculiar powers of characterization, and we cannot forbear presenting to our readers the reflex of our reverend poet in the admiring Spanish-American mind:

"Mr. William Cullen Bryant is a most respectable elderly person, great poet, eminent literary man, and one of the first editors of the press of this city. As a poet he has been a perfect prodigy of precocity and lengthened genius, to be compared only with Lope de Vega and Voltaire. When he was only nine years old he published his first verses, and at thirteen a regular poem, in connection with other beautiful compositions, was issued to the eyes of the world. He is now over seventy years of age, and has just given light to a new poem that has called forth the eulogy of the press, and in which his robust mental faculties have not deteriorated in the slightest degree. By the refined taste displayed in his compositions, he is considered as a poet of the most classical taste that this nation has hitherto produced. To the golden crown that girdles his venerable head may be added the respectability which Mr. Bryant enjoys for his knowledge, his well-tried probity, and his constancy in defending the most disinterested political opinions. In regard to these, Mr. Bryant belongs to the extreme portion of the Republican party, being, consequently, an abolitionist. Septuagenary as he is, he still preserves the moral and physical vigor of youth, and is ready to defend any cause that has for a foundation liberty and justice; he has also the necessary activity to be even now chief editor of the New York Evening Post."

It is, of course, not possible to know what may have been the Spanish of which Señor Romero says the foregoing is "a correct translation in the English language;" but we assure him that the English is very funny, and that it reads like the English of a Spaniard who had acquired fluency in our tongue from perusal of the newspapers. Señor Romero could scarcely have understood this, however, and it is difficult to comprehend why the Secretary of State, to whom all this was unofficially addressed, should have caused it to be printed in a public document. Señor Romero would have been amply protected from the mischief likely to attend his erroneously reported remarks by the publication of the remarks alone; and the condition of Republican Mexico is such that she can ill afford to have her representative laughed at to serve the end we have hinted. If the Secretary of State merely wished to make fun, why, there are the reports of our own ambassadors abroad, which are sometimes infinitely amusing.

DEATH OF MRS. GASKELL.

THE death of Mrs. Gaskell, that occurred at her home near Manchester, England, will be even more widely noted with sorrow in America than in Great Britain. Her books probably had wider sale and reading here than there. And she had not only warm personal friends among us, but the interest and sympathy which she so largely manifested toward the Union during the war, have endeared her to many who before knew her simply as a successful author. Her very last book, just finished before her death, is dedicated to her "northern friends" in general, and Mr. Charles Eliot Norton and wife of Cambridge, in particular; and her paper in Fraser's Magazine, on the death of Robert Gould Shaw, testifies to the strength of her interest and the genuineness of her sympathy with us.

As a novelist, Mrs. Gaskell has a wide popularity. She received for her first story, Mary Barton, published in 1848 when she was 28 years old, one hundred pounds, and its success was so marked that a few days after its publication she was offered one thousand pounds if she would write another. Mary Barton was followed by Moorland Cottage (a Christmas story) in 1850. Ruth was published in 1853, and North and South in 1855. The more recent publications are Lizzie Leigh, Cranford, Life of Charlotte Bronte, Sylvia's Lovers, and Round the Sofa.

In some respects, Mrs. Gaskell has no superior among her cotemporary sister novelists. She is not so romantic as Miss Mulock, and though not as forcible as the author of the Eliot novels, she writes in better taste. She is more healthy than Charlotte Bronte, though neither so intense nor so fascinating, and she excels her in the delineation and discrimination of character. Charlotte Bronte's heroines are, with the exception of those in Shirley, abnormal creations, the products of a brain prematurely developed. Mrs. Gaskell's heroines are ordinary, every-day women, and still they are not commonplace. In the simplicity of her style, quiet tone of narrative, and in the peculiar flavor of her humor, as well as in the revelation of character by means of dialogue, she resembles Jane Austin; while she possesses other qualities which render her more attractive to readers generally. She has more sentiment and imagination, a wider range of vision, and she gives us what Miss Austin never does—exquisite descriptions of natural scenery—and many scenes of tender pathos.

Mrs. Gaskell has also considerable dramatic power, as shown in the "Strike" in North and South, and in the resistance to the press gang in Sylvia's Lovers; but though often thrilling, she is never sensational. If we can judge of her character from her writings, we should say she was a remarkably well-balanced person, whose creative faculty, strong as it was, did not tyrannize over her judgment. It is rare to see the creative and the critical faculty combined, yet, judging from the artistic finish of these novels, it is evident Mrs. Gaskell possessed both in no mean degree. A strong flavor of reality and truthfulness pervade her stories. As we read, the conviction steals over us, that it is a real experience the author is relating, and not the fancies of a fertile brain. In a letter to a friend, written after the publication of Sylvia's Lovers, she said that, when contemplating a new story, she thought it all out in her mind before putting pen to paper. Then it became real to her, and she could not alter in any way the course of the narrative. In this lay the secret of her power. It proves, also, that she had true genius—that her creations were not mere puppets of her will, dependent upon the whim or fancy of the moment, but inspirations—genuine conceptions, over which, when once created, she had no power. Whether she writes of life in the mills, as in Mary Barton, or of society in a little village, made up principally of old maids and widows, as in Cranford; or lays the scenes of her story among the discontented Yorkshire operatives, as in North and South, or amid the primitive inhabitants of a seaport town in the last century, as in Sylvia's Lovers, she everywhere develops the same faculty of faithful representation, merging her own personality into scenes and characters widely different, and thus imparting to them that reality which alone gives zest and power to fiction.

Of her several publications, North and South and Sylvia's Lovers are the most powerfully written, with the exception of Wives and Daughters, now being published in numbers in the Cornhill Magazine. In the delineation of fine shades of character, in the varied and pleasant interest of the narrative, and in its artistic finish, we consider Wives and Daughters her greatest effort, and it is matter of gratification and congratulation that this most attractive story has not been left uncompleted by her death.

But successful as Mrs. Gaskell has been as a novelist, she has been equally so as a biographer. Few memoirs exceed in interest that of Charlotte Bronte by her. Not only is the character of Miss Bronte herself most graphically portrayed, and those of her father and sisters, but their life in the gloomy old parsonage, surrounded by its black moors, is sketched with photographic distinctness. Most biographers are content to give to the public what Carlyle styles "a mere bead roll of facts." Not so Mrs. Gaskell. Under her touch the dry facts become living, breathing realities, full of significance and replete with instruction. She was about fifty years old; and her private life has been conspicuous for personal sympathy and kindly endeavor among the poor families of the neighboring manufacturing populations.

IF your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

RAINY SEASON AT HAND.—Which is always accompanied with Coughs, Colds, Influenza, and kindred affections of the throat and lungs. If you would be speedily relieved of these serious and annoying difficulties, use Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

SECOND REPLY.

—

THE

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL

VERSUS

The Mutual Life of New York.

IN JULY LAST the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York published an attack upon the Connecticut Mutual, which contained many invidious comparisons and flagrant misrepresentations. This assault was promptly repelled by an exposition of facts, substantiated by the Massachusetts Insurance Reports. The Mutual Life now rejoin with a DENIAL of nearly all the facts set forth in our first reply. Correcting none of the exploded errors of their former articles, they are now even more extravagant than before, apparently betraying greater eagerness for victory than for truth.

We have some reluctance to prosecute a controversy with those capable of such transparent insincerity and such wilful perversion of facts. We will nevertheless characterize this last manifesto as it deserves, and disentangle some of its sophistries. It is untruthful in statement; it is uncandid and unjust in inferences; it is evasive and fallacious in argument; its audacity would be amusing if its depravity were not too shocking; it is strange indeed that so respectable a company as the Mutual Life should compromise its reputation for integrity by endorsing such unfairness as must lead to humiliating exposure.

In our former reply we stated and demonstrated the following propositions, fundamental and conclusive, respecting the comparative standing of the Connecticut Mutual and all other companies in the country, to wit:

I.—It has the LARGEST number insured.
II.—It has the LARGEST amount insured.
III.—It has the LARGEST surplus.
IV.—It has the LARGEST divisible surplus.
V.—It has the LARGEST business.
VI.—It has the LARGEST income.
VII.—It has had, through its whole history, the smallest average expenses.
VIII.—It obtains the highest rates of interest on its investments.

These facts, demonstrated by statistics from the Massachusetts Insurance Reports, establish the Connecticut Mutual as the Great Life Insurance Company of America, and the one in which investment is the Safest, the Cheapest, and the Best. The only way in which its title to this position and character can be disputed is, as we stated, to assail the Massachusetts Insurance Reports. These Reports, written by the Hon. Elizur Wright of Boston, an accomplished Actuary, appointed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for that purpose, are universally esteemed as the most reliable authority on American Companies, as well as an invaluable contribution to both the history and science of Life Insurance.

The Mutual Life, in their rejoinder, not daring to assail these Reports, ignore their existence. While pretending to "take direct issue with the Connecticut Mutual on all the 'fundamental and conclusive' propositions save one," they do not even allude to the Reports upon which these propositions are founded; nor do they sustain their denial of even one of the propositions. In fact their denials are but pretended ones, well calculated, if not intended to deceive the cursory reader into the belief that the positions we had taken were untenable. Yet, notwithstanding this pretended denial of facts which we had drawn from the Reports of the Massachusetts Commissioners, and the apparent appeal from their authority, the Actuary of the Mutual Life, in an article published since the one now under consideration, has spoken of Prof. Wright, the author of these Reports, as "the highest official authority in this country." We shall therefore be justified, even by our opponents, if we continue to appeal to the Massachusetts Reports, and insist that their decision is final.

Reaffirming our fundamental and conclusive propositions, we proceed to submit some additional proof of their validity, and to disentangle some of the sophistries and fallacies in which they are involved, in the recent remarkable manifesto of the Mutual Life.

I. THE LARGEST NUMBER INSURED.—The Mutual Life state the number of their policies in force August 1, 1865, to be.....20,888
Connecticut Mutual records show (same date).....28,475

At the date of the last Massachusetts Report, the number of policies in the Connecticut Mutual exceed the number in the Mutual Life by 4,596; August 1, 1865, the excess was 7,865; a gain upon that company of more than 3,000 policies per year.

II. THE LARGEST AMOUNT INSURED.—The Mutual Life state their amount insured August 1, 1865, to be.....$72,764,534 52
Connecticut Mutual records show (same date).....78,361,972 00

The gain of the Connecticut Mutual upon the Mutual Life in the amount insured during this year has been over $7,000,000.

We give the amount insured as indicative of the amount of business the company has done. The Mutual Life suggests that assets are a better "test of merit and standing." We esteem the surplus of assets over all liabilities to be a still better test, though by no means the only one.

III. THE LARGEST SURPLUS.—According to the last Massachusetts Report, the surplus of the Connecticut Mutual exceeds that of the Mutual Life by $162,163 69, although the Connecticut Mutual had paid during the year a dividend of 50 per cent., while the Mutual Life had paid none. The only way in which the Mutual Life is able to establish even a pretense that the surplus of the Connecticut Mutual is less than their own is by arbitrarily and unfairly deducting from it a reservation of $641,500 for dividends not yet declared. And not content with this sharp practice, they compare the rapidity of accumulation of the two companies for a period in which the Connecticut Mutual has made a distribution, while the Mutual Life had made none.

IV. THE LARGEST DIVISIBLE SURPLUS.—In estimating the divisible surplus, we reserved 15 per cent. above the value of the policies. When the unsettled financial condition of the country is taken into account, this "reserve" will not be deemed excessive. As we treated both companies alike in this respect, the Mutual Life would seem to have little cause of complaint. This datum gives the Connecticut Mutual, November 1, 1864, more than twice the divisible surplus of the Mutual Life, although this company had paid one dividend since the last distribution of the Mutual Life.

V. THE LARGEST BUSINESS.—The net increase in number of policies and amount insured for the year ending November 1, 1864, was about twice as great in the Connecticut Mutual as in the Mutual Life, (see Massachusetts Insurance Reports—1864 and 1865.)
Conn. Mutual, net inc.....6,875 Policies, insuring $18,988,561 00
Mutual Life, net inc.....2,969 Policies, insuring 9,527,779 10

These figures representing the growth of the business of the two companies, have not been disputed; though the Mutual Life seek to obscure their significance by claiming that the cash receipts are a better "test" of the amount of business done than the business itself!

We may be permitted to offer the following as a pertinent illustration of this logic; The cash receipts of the Mutual Life on a single payment policy of $10,000, age 40, are $1,242 50. The cash receipts of the Connecticut Mutual on twenty-six life policies for $10,000 each, same age, are $4,100 Of course, therefore, by their logic, one policy for $10,000 in the Mutual Life constitutes a larger business than twenty-six policies, insuring $260,000, in the Connecticut Mutual!

VI. THE LARGEST INCOME.—According to the last Massachusetts Insurance Report, the income of the Connecticut Mutual for the year ending November 1, 1865, exceeds that of the Mutual Life by $182,054 41. The incomes for the year ending February 1, 1865, are:
Mutual Life see Annual statement of Co.).....$2,849,866 50
Conn. Mutual (see Annual Statement of Co.)..... 2,938,562 52

VII. THE SMALLEST AVERAGE EXPENSES.—During the first four years of the history of the Connecticut Mutual, and also during the years 1861 and 1864, the expenses of this Company were a trifle in excess of those of the Mutual Life; DURING ALL THE OTHER YEARS of its existence its expenses have been LESS THAN THOSE OF THAT COMPANY.

The General Average of the Connecticut Mutual is 829 (or about four-fifths) of that of the Mutual Life. The Mutual Life evade the "direct issue" on this "fundamental and conclusive position," by substituting for the general average the ratio for a single year; and though their year's ratio is exceptionally in their favor, they are not satisfied to state it correctly.

VIII. THE HIGHEST RATE OF INTEREST ON INVESTMENTS.—The Mutual Life do not attempt to take issue with the Connecticut Mutual on this peculiarly "fundamental and conclusive position," but endeavor to destroy its force by intimating that high rates are obtained at the expense of security. The fact that up to the date of the last report is a sufficient reply to the insinuation. The investments of this Company have been made with remarkable prudence and skill, as their safety and productiveness sufficiently attest.

NOT ONE DOLLAR HAD EVER BEEN LOST ON INVESTMENTS BY THE CONNECTICUT MUTUAL,

—

Having thus reaffirmed and re-established the eight fundamental propositions of our reply to the first attack of the Mutual Life, and exposed the evasions and sophistries with which that Company have struggled to avoid the logical consequences, we now proceed to exhibit some of the miscellaneous representations which are scattered through their last remarkable production:

NOTE PLAN.

The false position of the Mutual Life in regard to the Note system, is the source of many grave errors. It perverts their statements respecting assets, surplus, divisible surplus receipts, expenses, amount of business, dividends, cost of insurance, and almost every other topic connected with the subject.

The surplus premium, when paid in cash, must be invested, and in due time returned to the insured as dividend, being temporarily held in trust by the company. Premium notes are of the same character as any other investment of this surplus premium, except that they draw a rather low rate of interest, and it is utterly impossible to lose anything by means of them. In whatever manner the SURPLUS premium is invested, it can only be used in payment of dividends. Premium Notes, therefore, being the safest possible investment, and entirely available in payment of dividends, constitute legitimate assets—as perfectly so as the cash receipts for surplus premiums.

Aside from the inconvenience attending the payment of money, it makes little difference to the insured whether he pays the surplus premium in an interest bearing note or in cash. If he pays it in cash, it is afterwards returned to him as dividend, he meanwhile losing the interest on it; if he pays it in note, instead of LOSING the interest on the money, he PAYS the interest on a note of equal amount, and has the USE of the money, the note being returned as dividend. The insured pays, and the company receive, the SAME VALUE in either case.

It is only by disguising this

OBVIOUS FACT that the cost of Insurance can be made to appear greater on the Note Plan than on the Cash Plan.

—

DIVIDENDS.

The dividends of the Mutual Life, while they were on the percentage plan (previous to the last distribution,) averaged less than 40 per cent. The first, 1848, originally declared at 52 per cent., was investigated at the instance of a policy holder, and, being found excessive, was "adjusted" at 35 per cent.; this dividend was payable only at DEATH; the second, 1852, was "33⅓" per cent., payable at DEATH, or in (slow) reduction of future premiums; the third, 1858, was "40" per cent., payable only at DEATH; the fourth, 1863, (not a percentage dividend,) was payable at death or in reduction of future premiums; it was larger than any preceding one in consequence of the forfeiture of Southern policies at the outbreak of the rebellion, leaving, as is well known, a large amount of money, (consisting of the entire "reserve" and all the dividends for these policies,) to be divided among the remaining members. The dividend was, therefore, an exceptional one, and cannot be repeated except under similar circumstances; though its ratio to the real participating premiums

Has been Largely Overstated

in the documents of that company. It will be observed that the MUTUAL LIFE HAVE CHANGED THEIR METHOD OF DISTRIBUTION, or rather, APPORTIONMENT, as that company have NEVER MADE A REAL DISTRIBUTION,

at each successive dividend period. How long that company will maintain the policy now announced, their extraordinary vacillation hitherto gives as no means of forming a reliable opinion.

The dividends of the Connecticut Mutual have been, in all cases,

Available to diminish Current Premiums,

AND HAVE AVERAGED OVER FIFTY PER CENT.

The surplus of the Connecticut Mutual, at the present rate of increase, will, at the end of this fiscal year, exceed $3,500,000 The surplus, January 1, 1865, was $2,646,333 13, an amount sufficient, if distributed, to cancel all the premium notes, leaving a

SURPLUS OVER ALL LIABILITES OF OVER $400,000 IN CASH;

and if the present value of the interest which the insured would pay on the notes in the ordinary mode of settlement were included in the above calculations, the surplus of the company, after the cancellation of the notes would be about three-quarters of a million of dollars, or enough to pay a still further dividend in cash of more than THIRTY-FIVE per cent. on the premiums of the year 1861.

The "cash dividends" of the Mutual Life are said to be available to diminish the SECOND cash premium, "or sooner than in any other company."

The "Note Dividends" of the Connecticut Mutual, are AVAILABLE TO DIMINISH THE FIRST CASH PREMIUM, or one year sooner than in the Mutual Life. The "Note Dividends" of the Connecticut Mutual, let it be observed, are precisely as effectual to diminish the CASH premiums as the so-called "cash dividends" of the Mutual Life, and they have as real a cash value.

We have no desire to disparage the method of ascertaining and distributing surplus, lately adopted by the Mutual Life, and with which the name of their eminent Actuary is so honorably connected. If it shall be shown, by experience, to be PRACTICABLE, it may in due time be generally adopted. We do, however, question the reliability of the application of the method in the tabular statements of the cost of insurance in the Mutual Life, published by that Company as "undeniable figures," "which may be relied upon as certain," since they are based upon the supposition that the investments of the Company, including unemployed capital, will yield seven per cent. interest, (more than that Company has usually obtained,) no allowance whatever being made for the expenses of conducting the business, other than the profits arising from forfeited policies and other miscellaneous sources. We quote from an article in the "Wall Street Underwriter," by the able Actuary of the Mutual Life, in which he refers to the same tables:

"It is manifest, since the conditions are as favorable as possible, that the over-payments (dividends) are the MAXIMA which can be anticipated."

"We have thus seen that on all the 'fundamental and conclusive' policies" of the Connecticut Mutual the Mutual Life fails to make a successful assault; and, further, that the "undeniable facts and figures" of that Company can NOT be "relied on as certain."

A Mutual Life Insurance Company receives and invests money, and (on the average) returns it to the policy-holder, with the accumulated interest, less the expense of conducting business, and the Company in which the

Average Expenses are the LOWEST, and the Rate of Interest obtained on Investments is the HIGHEST,

(other things being equal,) affords Life Insurance at the LEAST COST.

THAT COMPANY IS THE

Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co.

OF HARTFORD.

The accumulated capital is nearly TEN MILLION DOLLARS. It has paid since its organization over FOUR MILLION DOLLARS to the families and creditors of deceased members, and has refunded over THREE MILLION DOLLARS to policy holders in dividends or surplus premiums. Its present surplus is over THREE MILLION DOLLARS, from which the annexed dividend will be declared on the 1st of February next.

The number of policies issued during the year (1861) was 7,533. Its annual income is over $3,000,000 per year—its receipts for interest alone being over half a million, which more than paid its losses for the year ending November last.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
GENERAL AGENTS
Northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento stree
Ja6 SAN FRANC

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that be has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
Proprietor.

my6-3m

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. H. WARD & SON,

NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca

je30-3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11.522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19-3m

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S STEAM PRINTING HOUSE, 533 CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
305 Montgomery street.

dec9-3m

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,
28 Second street, San Francisco.

jy29-3m

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO

No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.

In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.)

First and Highest Premium

TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.

In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.

First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,

AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,

111 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets,

San Francisco.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & C

my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents.

je10-½ Corner of Pine and Sansome street

R. H. McDONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

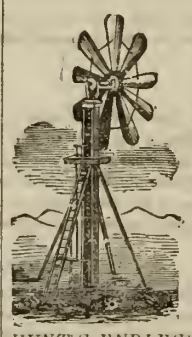
Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.



THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

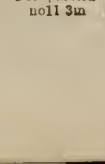
E. O. HUNT,
No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,
jy29-3m San Francisco.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS



Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances. Department, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy.

no11 3m

OVERSTOCKED! AND MUST SELL

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES.

se23 3m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
se30 3m San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

FIRE DEPARTMENT BALL.

POSTPONEMENT.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the Fire Department Ball, in accordance with the request of many friends, and in order to perfect every arrangement deemed necessary for the success of said Ball. have POSTPONED the same until

THURSDAY EVENING.....JAN. 18TH.

By order of the Executive Committee.

THE SECOND ANNUAL

Ball of the Fire Department,

Will be given at

UNION HALL,

ON THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 18th

No care or expense will be spared to make it the grandest and most fashionable Ball of the season.

MANAGERS.

Governor F F Low,	Hon Ogden Hoffman,
Maj-Gen H. W. Halleck,	" Milton S Latham,
" I McDowell,	" S H Dwinelle,
" J F Miller,	" Thos B Shannon,
Col R C Drum,	" Frank Soule,
Com Selim Woodworth,	" R F Perkins,
Maj-Gen L H Allen,	" Wm J Shaw
Chas de Cazotte,	R H Sinton,
Louis McLane,	Wm. Alvord,
J Whitney, Jr,	J H Baird,
I W Raymond,	Wm F Babcock,
Chas B Polhemus,	Henry Bigelow,
Eugene L Sullivan,	A Austin,
J Mora Moss,	S C Hastings,
R B Swain,	Camilo Martin,
E W Burr,	Maj A D Grimwood,
S P Dewey,	Abel Guy,
James Lick,	Wm B Johnston,
Nicholas Larco,	Geo W Gibbs,
Leland Stanford,	Hall McAllister,
Joseph P Hodge,	Henry B Platt,
B F Lowe,	M Livingston,
James Bowman,	Samuel M Wilson,
D O Mills,	Francisco Sanjurjo,
Lafayette Maynard,	Lewis Leland,
F L A Pioche,	Louis Scellier,
Jos G Eastland,	Alpheus Bull,
Ira P Rankin,	John S Henning,
Henry Carlton, Jr,	A Seligman,
John B Felton,	Michael Skelly,
Samuel Brannan,	A Coleman,
R H Magill,	Wm H Tillinghast,
Geo C Boardman,	Joseph Austin,
David Seannell,	John H Gardiner,
R B Woodward,	Wm P Tuaffe,
O Livermore,	W H L Barnes,
A L Tubbs,	Henry Voorman,
Marcus D Bornek,	Dr A J Bowie,
W Lane Booker,	Edward S Spenr,
Eugene Casserly,	Wm. McKibben,
Oliver Eldridge,	Michael Castle,
H M Newhall,	John Parrott,
Joseph A Donohoe,	Wm C Talbot,
Wm C Ralston,	Erwin Davis,
Wm M Lent,	Fred'k MacCrellish,
James Otis,	H H Haight,
R. J. Vanderwater,	Maj John Stratman,
Caleb T Fay,	James H Cutter,
Martin R Roberts,	Henry Barriolhet,
James R Bolton,	John A. McGlynn,
W E Barron,	W W Haney,
S R Harris,	John J Kelly,
Morris Speyer,	Chas. R Peters,
Alfred Barstow,	Claus Spreckles,
R C Ferguson,	David Stern,
Geo H Howard,	G J Byrne,
Elie Lazard,	F W Macondray,
Edward J. Pringle,	John O Earl,
John H Saunders,	Emanuel Berri,
Jos W Winans,	Fred'k Billings,
James Bell,	E T Pease,
E W Leonard,	Louis Cohn,
S. J. Hensley,	Thos Tobin,
Geo B Gammans,	H Heyneman,
S H Parker,	Horace W. Carpenter,
Col Wm Harney,	M M Heuston,
A H Titcomb,	Wm G Badger,
M C Hillyer,	Louis Schloss,
Frank McCoppin,	Henry G Langley,
John Hewston, Jr,	A J Houghtaling,
J C L. Wadsworth,	W W Stow,
Joseph Pierce,	W B Farwell,
C F Mebius,	John T Doyle,
Chas Walcott Brooks,	Warren R Payne,
Albert Miller,	Dr Joseph Haine,
J G Kittie,	Robert Cushing,
Jonathan Hunt,	Peter Donohue,
John Middleton,	James L Fink,
C Adolphe Low,	T McCarthy.

☞ The number of Tickets to be sold is limited; they are not transferable, and none will be sold at the door. Ladies' invitations can be procured, free of charge, on application.

TICKETS (including Supper) TEN DOLLARS.

PIANO SCHOOL,

ON THE EUROPEAN PLAN,

At the South Park Institute.

MISS FLORENCE JAMES, PRINCIPAL.

IN CONNECTION with this popular and excellent Young Ladies' Seminary there will open, about January 31, 1866, a Piano School, on the European Plan—for first beginners as well as for advanced players. The great advantage on this plan will be a reduction of about one-half the usual price, and a thorough training, both theoretical and practical. The Musical Department will be under the directorship of Mr. GUSTAVE A. SCOTT, Organist of Cavalry Church, whose long experience in Teaching both in private and in classes, will secure to pupils a rapid advancement in the study of Music.

The Music Rooms are comfortable and convenient, and the Pianos used from the best manufacturers.

For particulars, call at the Institute, Nos. 55 and 56 South Park. de30-1m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias
U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled.

H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.

no11 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAMES C. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal of Court. Int. rev. stamp. de23 3m

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS,
Plaintiff's Attorney.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
San Francisco

fe11-6m

GREAT AMERICAN PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800

PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

20,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 dorff street, San Francisco.

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated. The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14 3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

CALIFORNIA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

For Boarding and Day Pupils,

Nos. 64, 66, 68 and 70 Silver street.

THE NEXT TERM of this Institute will commence Wednesday, Jan. 3d. Catalogues may be obtained by addressing (dc30) MISS M. LAMMOND, Principal.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 2d of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. dc20

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, JAN. 6TH,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

Miss Charlotte Crampton,

In the Grand Military Speetacular Drama entitled

THE FRENCH SPY!

This Evening, January 6th,

Benefit of G. C. Boniface!

On which occasion,

BLACK-EYED SUSAN;

The Dumb Girl of Genoa,

AND

A GLANCE AT NEW YORK,

Will be produced.

MONDAY NIGHT, JAN. 8TH,

BENEFIT OF THE

McMahon Grenadier Guards!

On which occasiou, will be produced

KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN.

TUESDAY NIGHT, JAN. 9TH,

DAN SETCHEL,

As - - SIR JOHN FALSTAFF!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commeuce at 8 o'clock.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES

OF

Standard Books,

ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on

Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of

ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!

CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE

Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

BRILLIANT SUCCESS

— OF —

BLAISDELL'S

CELEBRATED PAINTING,

THE HIBERNICON!

OR,

A TOUR THROUGH IRELAND!

Painted on 11,000 square feet of canvas, and at a cost of $6,000, from Pen and Pencil Drawings made on the spot by

W. H. BARTLETT, ESQ.,

whose reputation as an artist has been made world-wide by his graceful and truthful delineatoins of the scenery of America, Switzerland, and the Bosphorus.

GRAND MOVING PANORAMA

OF THE

BEAUTIES AND ANTIQUITIES

OF THAT FAR-FAMED

GREEN ISLE OF THE WEST,

IN

THREE PARTS AND FORTY SCENES,

EMBRACING

Dublin Bay,
Killiney Hill,
Killiney Bay,
Carrickfergus Castle,
Belfast Lough,
Carrick-a-Ried,
Giant's Causeway,
Londonderry,
A Pattern in Connemara,
Seven Churches of Glencohnoise, on the Shannon;
The River Shannon,
Limerick,
Castle of Limerick,
Old Baal's Bridge, Limerick;
Rock of Cashel,
Cormac's Chapel, (Interior view, Day and Night Scene;)
Holy Cross Abbey,
Quay of Waterford,
Glengariff and Glengariff Inn,
Innisfallen, Lakes Killarney;
Kilkenny Castle,
Ross Castle, Lakes Killarney;
Upper Lake Killarney,
Lower Lake Killarney,
Cove of Cork and River;
Natural Bridge, Killkee;
Head of the Killeries,
Howth Hill and Castle,
Round Tower of Clondalkin,
Dunkerry Cave;
Round Tower and Seven Churches of Gleudelaugh, etc., etc.

MADAME JULIA BLAISDELL,

SOLO HARPIST;

MISS CLARA,

The interesting IRISH BALLADIST, and the

SWISS BELL-RINGERS,

Will appear in conjunction with the Painting, each evening, with an

ELABORATE DESCRIPTIVE LECTURE,

BY J. H. WARWICK, ESQ.

GRAND MATINEE ON SATURDAY, at 2 o'clock, for Schools and Family Parties.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....75 cents.
Family Circle.....50 cents.
No extra charge for reserved seats. de30 tf

THE NEW WARM

SWIMMING BATH,

THIRD STREET, OPPOSITE SOUTH PARK,

IS NOW OPEN!

ja6-1m

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SAND WICH ISLANDS.

POSTPONEMENT.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON SATURDAY, - - - - JANUARY 13, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

se23c16-tf JOHN BENSLEY, President pro tem.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

MONDAY EVENING.....JAN. 8TH

ANNIVERSARY OF

The Battle of New Orleans.

BENEFIT OF THE

McMAHON GRENADIER GUARD!!

For which occasion

GEORGE C. BONIFACE

AND

LOUIS ALDRICH

Have kindly volunteered, and will appear for the last time in California.

C. R. THORNE, JR, W. BARRY,
W. M. LEMAN, FRED. FRANKS,
D. C. ANDERSON, J. H. RUBY,
C. RICHARDS, L. R. RENEUX,
FRED. WOODHULL,
MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN,

And a host of other popular Actors and Actresses will appear. For the last time in California, the celebrated drama entitled

KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN;
OR, THE DARK HOUR BEFORE DAY.

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children

GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.

TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
de19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impuritics, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect ROBUST HEALTH. The preparation is called "ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER," and is for sale at wholesale at the

UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,

Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco,

AND BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

ja6-1m

THE RUSS HOUSE BOWLING SALOON, corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, has reopened under the management of Ferdinand Shrader. There are Eight Alleys—six for Americans and two for Germans. The finest Wines and Liquors can be had at the bar. All lovers of the health-invigorating game of ten pins are invited to pay a visit to the saloon.—Dramatic Chronicle.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.

J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.

George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

F. Schrader, cor. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.

CLOTHING.

H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FURNITURE.

Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.

P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimberg, 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 620 Merchant.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.

SALOONS.

Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.

Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have purchased the Eating House known as "Richards'" Restaurant, situate on Clay street, one door below Montgomery. The restaurant will be repaired and refitted throughout, and will be opened to the public on Wednesday morning, Dec. 27th.

C. H. BRICKWEDELL,
de23 H. F. HEGELER.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 7.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 13, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- The Religion of Flowers. — By "Iris."
- Monopolizing Graves.
- Sunday Amusements.
- A Ballooning Reminiscence.
- The Love Life of Dr. Kane.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events and Announcements.

SELECTED:
- McArone on Vaccinations.
- The Poet Husband.
- Tom Sayor's Funeral.
- Life's Value—A Story of Brittany.
- Seville.
- The Angel of Patience.
- False Hair.
- Caught at Last.
- The Magic Stove—A Lottery Tale.

POETRY:
- The Erl King.
- Up-Hill.

[For the Californian.]

THE RED SEA OVER.

THE sea that was one has been severed in twain,
And frightful the chasm that yawns in the main!
Loving waves that an hour ago played side by side,
In the bosom of far-sundered surges now ride.

Where the sheen of the heavens lay all the day long,
And the voice of the waters rose ever in song,
The sheen gathers blackness—the music, a roar—
And the waters are cloven from shore to shore!

A gorge is revealed as in mountains of prey,
Where the sea-shell and sea-flower shall fall to decay.
A dreadful abyss! where the light of the waves
Shall wander and perish in dismalest caves.

And yet—look again! let the sea-flower decay!
And gladly, ye waves, lose awhile the bright ray.
For the cleft in those depths is a path to be trod,
A way of release to the people of God!

A furrow it is, in the plain of the sea,
From whose thrice-blessed bosom shall spring Liberty!
An outlet of peril to one guilty land,
An inlet of weal to the welcoming strand.

And then,—shall it stay when its mission is done?
The waters once sundered be never as one?
The wonder abide when its errand is o'er,
And two hostile seas still be found in one shore?

No, no! Scarce begun is the song of the free,
And the last footworn captive passed through the Red Sea,
Ere its waters return with a frenzy as wild
As the mother's who flies to her long-lost child!

And they who pursue and would drag them back
To chains and to darkness, the lash and the rack,
They sink, as a stone, in the terrible surge,
And their last dying wails are their only dirge!

CHARLES RUSSELL CLARKE.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, January 13th, 1866.

THIS week has been prolific of accidents among the theatrical profession.

First, there was one of the Buislays, who made an ascension from Hayes Park on Sunday last.

(By the way, when Tom Hayes was imprisoned in Alcatraz a while ago, might not that fortification then have been called Hayes' Park?)

But revenons a nos Buislays. A good many went out to see the æronaut on Sunday... he went out to sea also, the wind blowing his balloon beyond the Golden Gate.

Buislay, with great presence of mind, dropped himself down into the water, presenting the phenomena of a Falling Star.

He arose a wiser and a wetter man.

I trust he will profit by this salt and solemn warning, and not balloon it any more on Sundays. For, aside from the human law which he wilfully breaks, is he not flying directly in the face of Heaven?

The next accident was one which befell Setchell while playing the Fat Knight.

Right here I would suggest to him that it would have been better had he saved the fat night for his benefit.

But about the accident. He has an India rubber stomach... not "for the fray," but for the part. You would think that Mark Twain had an India rubber stomach, too, if you could see the way he astonishes our landlady and his fellow boarders at dinner occasionally... but this of Setchell's is of another kind.

It blows up like a balloon... in fact, it was blown up with him at the time of the Yosemite explosion.

Well, the chambermaid seeing the stomach on his dressing table the other morning, mistook it for a pin-cushion, and stuck all the loose pins that were lying around into it.

Imagine the consequence. He came on as Falstaff on Tuesday evening, and a fairer front was never seen. Protuberance and exuberance were joined together, and he could not see his own toes... he thought that no one could take the wind out of his sails.

But see the sequel. He grew lean by degrees; the bubble reputation, which he had sought at the Chinaman's mouth who blew him up, was pricked. The air escaped from him like steam from a series of pipes... for the moment he was a Calliope.

Imagine his feelings as he found himself gradually flattening out. Wind on the stomach is not usually what people desire, but in this instance he would have given a bonus for a supply. He perspired and turned pale, and all appearances indicated that he had no stomach to go on with the piece.

Fortunately an exit came, and he had a chance to go off the stage and bolster himself up with pillows and pulu matrasses.

But he is very tender on that point yet. Attempt to be jocose with him thereauent, and he immediately becomes bellycose.

He has quarrelled with several intimate friends because they alluded triflingly to the affair. That abominable abdomen seems destined to stand on record as telerrima causa belli, so far as he is concerned.

You will observe that in playing Captain Cuttle he no longer says: "Over'aul your dixionary, and when found, stick a pin in it." For unpleasant reminiscences are awakened at once.

Art being under discussion, I should have expressed my pleasure at the hit which "Podgers" says Mark Twain has made at the East in "Jim Smiley and his Jumping Frog." But he deserves it all. For he's a good fellow, and his sketch "is good"... better than any of their funny fellows can do.

And... it has been reported Frank Soulé is not an Outcropper.

Notice him when you see him again, and see if he hasn't outcropped everybody. All his whiskers are gone.

He is no longer pearded like the bard.

He met with a dye-saster. His barber insisted on trying some nostrum of his on a whisker that showed a suspicion of gray, and it turned them all of so many colors that you would have thought he had a rainbow on his chin.

He carries his whiskers around in his pocket now-a-days, and shows them to his friends with a mournful hair.

While among the poets I wish to ask the laureate of the newly enfranchised race... J. Madison Bell... what he means in his fine poem in the Flag, by saying of Tell:

"When once upon his Alpine brow,
He stood reclining on his bow?"

Does he mean to tell us that Tell was standing on his head and falling back upon the conviction that he was making a graceful bow?

INIGO.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S condensed weatherist furnishes the following: "We have had a season of weather lately—in fact there has been hail up, not only in the Sub-Treasury, but elsewhere. A friend whose room adjoins that of a veritable house raiser, says that, waking in the night, he heard the congealed dew-drops beating against his window, while his neighbor was snowering furiously. This is the only report we have heard of snow on this side the bay; and it is but fair to state that our informant was half-seas-over."

MONOPOLIZING GRAVES.

PUBLIC sentiment, in the flush of the mining mania, received a severe shock on learning that a "Lone Mountain Mining Company" had been incorporated, and that preparations were in progress for an active development of the quartz ledge which had been discovered in that silent city of the dead.

What! cried the indignant voice of citizens yet in the flesh, is it purposed to tunnel the tombs of early settlers? to sink shafts through the marble vaults where we have put our loved ones to rest? to drift among the dead and establish lower levels under the crumbling coffins of those who are unable to even lift their hands in remonstrance against the invasion of their rights? No! And the tunneling came to an end speedily, while the spades at this very day stand resting in the shafts.

If the thought that the dead might be disturbed in their last resting place so troubled our sensitive citizens, what vexation must it cause them to know positively that if one of them died to-morrow he would be debarred a grave, unless he died possessed of a greater amount of wealth than falls to the fortune of more than two men in ten taking the whole population through? Yet this is notoriously a fact! The burying-places are in the hands of the most outrageous and heartless monopolies that ever existed, and the poor man clamors in vain for a grave at their hands. Even the man of moderate means cannot contemplate decent interment for any of his family in event of bereavement, without feeling that in caring for the dead he is guilty of injustice to the living, impoverishing those who remain. Is land so dear that a few feet of earth must be sold so high, or is dying such a luxury that it must be taxed at such a rate?

It seems hard that a man should be compelled to come, hat in hand, to one of these cemetery companies, and ask humbly for a reduction of their terms, to enable him to bury the wife or child whom Providence has removed, and upon whom he can only bestow this one last affectionate care. It seems harder still that the modestly preferred request should be refused. But, incredible as the statement may seem, it is asserted as a fact. We are informed that, a short time since, one of our most prominent citizens went to one of the monopolies, in company with a well-known attorney, to intercede for or petition in behalf of a poor family, bereft of its head, for a cheap grave. The deceased, though poor, was of the utmost respectability, so it must not be inferred that any objection could be made to the request upon the ground that social equality must be preserved in the abode of the dead, and that plebeians could not be admitted. But the gentlemen scarcely obtained an audience: their petition was entirely disregarded. Yet that very land of right belongs to the city, and the deceased would be entitled, were it divided and his share allotted to him, to much more than sufficient for a grave.

For the credit of humanity, men may well refuse to believe such a story, but, unfortunately, it is too well authenticated to even admit of doubt. Is there no remedy in such a case? Owing to the probable malfeasance of a former city attorney, this same cemetery company obtained, years ago, a disclaimer on the part of the city, as well as a decree against it. But that such a monstrous monopoly will be permitted to exist we cannot believe. Graves, at best, are not very desirable residences, and there is a hideousness in the grasping avarice which would sell them to us at a greater price than comfortably furnished cottages. If we remember rightly, it was but an obolus, according to the heathen mythology, that Charon received for ferrying the shades of the departed across the Styx, but one of our dead is compelled to ride over a turnpike road, to be deposited in a few feet of earth, at a cost which would pay the grisly boatman of the ancients double ferriage fees for half the heroes who fell before the walls of Troy. It is fortunate, indeed, that in their outside graspings, these charnel companies cannot reach beyond the grave, for, otherwise, we should look to see them establish a toll-gate at the entrance of Elysium. What shall be done with these men who jump "God's half acre," as the Saxons called the bury-ground, and, with unholy speculation in their eyes, follow the dead until the earth, which they weigh out to the mourners as though it were grains of gold, falls like the mantle of mercy, and covers the remains from further extortion?

UP-HILL.

DOES the road wind up hill all the way?
Yes, to the very end.
Will the day's journey take the whole long day?
From morn to night, my friend.

But is there for the night a resting-place?
A roof for when the slow dark hours begin.
May not the darkness hide it from my face?
You cannot miss that inn.

Shall I meet other wayfarers at night?
Those who have gone before.
Then must I knock, or call when just in sight?
They will not keep you standing at that door.

Shall I find comfort, travel-sore and weak?
Of labor you shall find the sum.
Will there be beds for me and all who seek?
Yes, beds for all who come.

[Christina Rosetti.

LIFE'S VALUE.

A STORY OF BRITTANY.

THE scene of the following story opens in an apartment in an ancient castle in Brittany. The young proprietor is about to quit the abode of his forefathers, to pursue schemes of ambition at court, or in the great world. The family, consisting of the mother and two sisters, with the hero of the piece, are met together on this interesting occasion. But we let the young gentleman relate what passed at the interview.

The time at length came when I should depart; and Joseph, opening the door gently, informed us that the chaise de poste was ready. This announcement was startling to my mother and sisters, who, in an agony of feeling, threw their arms around me.

"It is not yet too late!" they exclaimed, with tears; "renounce this intended journey. Oh, do not leave us!"

"My dearest mother," I replied, "at twenty years of age, and the inheritor of a noble name, I must make myself known in my native land. I must open a path to fame, either in the army or at court."

"And when you are gone," said my poor mother, "what will become of me?"

"You will hear with pride and pleasure of your son's success!"

"And should I hear of his death in battle?"

"Well; of what use is life at my age," I replied, "but to gain honor and glory! Think rather of the time when I shall return a colonel—perhaps a marshal of France."

"And then?" said my mother.

"Why, then, honor and respect will follow my steps wherever I go."

"And then?"—pursued she.

"Then, I will marry my cousin Henrietta; we shall find noble husbands for my sisters; and we will all live together in peace and happiness in these ancient halls of my ancestors."

"And why not commence this life of happiness from this moment?" said my mother. "Where is there a wider or fairer domain in Brittany than yours? Who claims a nobler name in the province? In the midst of your faithful vassals, are you not sufficiently honored and beloved? Leave us not, my son!—leave not your friends, your sisters, your aged mother, whom you may never again behold! Go not to waste, in the pursuit of vain glory, or to shorten, by sorrows and disappointments, those youthful days that pass so rapidly. Life is a treasure, my beloved Bernard: and where can you enjoy it more than under the lovely sky of Brittany?" As my mother spoke, she led me to a window, and pointed out the noble avenues of the ancient park, where the stately chestnuts were mingled with lilacs and woodbines, whose fragrant blossoms perfumed the air. Before the door stood the aged gardener and his family, whose saddened looks seemed so say: "Desert us not, our noble master—desert not those you are bound to protect!" Hortensia, my eldest sister, twined her arms round my neck, while Amelia, the youngest, taking up a volume of La Fontaine, pointed to an engraving, and with sobs placed the book in my hands. It was the fable of the "Two Pigeons." I started up, and extricating myself from their embraces, again exclaimed, "I must win honor and glory!—let me go, let me go!"—and I rushed into the courtyard.

As I was about to ascend the carriage, a female figure appeared at the hall door. It was my cousin Henrietta. She wept not, spoke not; but, pale as marble, appeared sinking to the earth. She held a handkerchief in her hand, with which she waved me a last farewell, and then fell senseless. I rushed to her, raised her in my arms, and uttered the tenderest vows of love and constancy. But when I saw the color revisit her cheek, leaving her to the anxious care of my mother and sisters, I hastened back to the carriage, without even turning my head. One look more at Henrietta, and I felt I could not have left her. In a few minutes after, the chaise de poste was rolling along the high road to Sedan.

For some time, my thoughts were entirely filled with my beloved Henrietta, my weeping sisters, my dear mother, and all the happiness I felt I was leaving. But as the ancient turrets of Roche Bernard receded from my view, these saddening images seemed to vanish also, and were succeeded by the brilliant visions of glory and ambition. What airy castles rose before me as I leaned back in the rumbling vehicle! Riches—honors—dignities—nothing did I refuse to myself as the just reward of my merit; and the scale ascending as I advanced on my journey, I was a duke, governor of a province, and Maréchal of France, by the time I reached the inn at which I was to repose for the night. The voice of my servant, simply addressing me as Monsieur le Chevalier, forced me, unwillingly, to abdicate my newly created dignity.

The next day, and for several succeeding ones, I indulged in the same intoxicating dreams, my journey being of some length. I was repairing to Sedan, to the residence of the Duke of C——, an old and tried friend of my father's, and the protector of the family. He had promised to take me to Paris, and introduce me at the court of Versailles. He hoped, also, to obtain for me a company in a regiment of dragoons, by the influence of his sister, the Marchioness of F——, a young and beautiful woman, whom public opinion pointed out as the probable successor of Madame de Pompadour.

I reached Sedan at so late an hour that I could not think of presenting myself at the ducal chateau, and therefore installed myself for the night at the Arms of France, the best inn the town afforded, and the rendezvous of all the officers of the garrison. Sedan was then a fortified town; the very streets had a warlike appearance, and the citizens a martial air, that seemed to say to a stranger, "We are compatriots of the great Turenne!"

I supped at a table-d'hote, and took the opportunity of inquiring my way to the chateau, where I intended going in the morning."

"Any one will point it out to you," was the answer; "it is well known to the whole country. In that chateau expired one of our most celebrated men, and bravest warriors, Marechal Fabert."

And hereupon, as was natural amongst so many military heroes, the conversation fell upon the career of the marechal. They spoke of his many gallant exploits, and of his singular modesty, which made him refuse the titles of nobility, and the ribbons of several orders, offered to him by Louis XIV. Above all, they expatiated upon his extraordinary good fortune, which had enabled him, without the aid of family interest, he being the son of an obscure printer, to raise himself from a common soldier to the rank of Marechal of France. It had appeared so extraordinary and unprecedented an elevation, that even during the life of Fabert, popular rumor had not been backward in attributing it to supernatural causes. It was currently reported that he dealt in magic, and it was even affirmed he had made a compact with Satan.

Our landlord, who, to the ignorance of a native of Champagne added the credulity of a peasant of Brittany, gravely assured us, that a few moments before Fabert expired, a black man, unknown to any one in the chateau, had entered the chamber and carried off the marechal's soul, which, indeed, of right appertained to him, he having purchased it long before. Mine host also went on to state, that from that period to the present time, upon each anniversary of Fabert's death, the black man was seen at midnight bearing a lighted torch in his hand. The recital enlivened our dessert, and we quaffed several bumpers of champagne to the familiar demon of the deceased marechal, hoping he might also take us under his protection, and give us similar triumphs to the battles of Collioure and Marfee.

The next morning, at an early hour, I repaired to the chateau of the Duke de C——. It was an immense and gloomy Gothic pile, which would not, perhaps, at another time, have made much impression upon me, but I must confess that I now gazed upon it with a singular feeling of interest, as I called to mind the landlord's story.

The domestic who ushered me in told me his master was not yet visible. I gave my name, and was then left alone in an ancient hall, adorned with the trophies of the chase, and hung round with family portraits. I waited a considerable time, but no one appeared. "Is this brilliant career of glory to commence by the antechamber?" exclaimed I, beginning to conceive the impatience of a discontented place-hunter. I had gone three times the round of the grim portraits, and had sedulously counted all the beams in the lofty ceiling, when I heard a slight noise in the wainscot, and found it proceeded from a half-closed door, moved by the wind. I pushed it gently open, and saw a small room, tastefully furnished, and from which a glass door opened into a magnificent park. I advanced, in order to enjoy the view from the window, when another object met my sight. Stretched on a sofa, whose back was turned to the door by which I entered, was a man, who, not observing me, rose hastily and rushed to the window. I then perceived that his face was bathed in tears, and that despair was marked in every feature. He remained for a moment motionless, his face buried in his hands, then with rapid steps began to pace the apartment. As soon as his eye fell upon me, he stopped and shuddered, while I, distressed at my intrusion, muttered some words in apology, and was about to withdraw.

"Who are you?—what brings you here?" he exclaimed, in a loud voice, and seizing my arm with violence.

"I am the Chevalier de Bernard, and I come——"

"I know, I know," he said, hastily; and taking my hand warmly, he made me sit down by him, and inquired with much interest about my family; spoke of my father, whom he appeared to have known so well, that I could not doubt my being in the presence of the master of the chateau.

"You are Monsieur de C——?" said I.

He rose, and replied, in an agitated tone, "I was once; but I am nothing—nothing now. Hush!—do not speak—do not ask me any questions!"

"Permit me, at least," I ventured to say, "to assure you, that if the most devoted friendship can in any way lighten the affliction of which I have been an involuntary witness——"

"You are right," he replied, abruptly; "though you cannot change my doom, yet you may receive my last wishes. That is the only service you can render me."

He closed the door carefully, and returned to his seat at my side, where I waited in trembling anxiety for the result. There was something awfully solemn in the tone of his voice, and an expression in his countenance I had never seen before. His face was deadly pale, while lightnings seemed to flash from his large dark eyes, and his features, worn by suffering, were frequently convulsed by a demoniac smile.

"What I am about to relate to you," he said at length, in a hollow tone, "will confound your reason. You will doubt—you will perhaps utterly disbelieve. Even I almost doubt at times still—at least I wish to do so; but the proof, the fatal proof, is too strong. Alas! are there not in all that surrounds us, in our very organization itself, mysteries whose existence we are compelled to acknowledge without any powers of comprehending them?" He paused for a moment, as if to recollect his ideas, pressed his hand to his brow, and continued—

"In this castle I first drew breath; and being a younger son, upon the elder born was of course to devolve all the wealth and honors of our house, while I had nothing to look forward to but the cloak and band of an abbé. With a heart burning with ambition, and a head filled with dreams of glory, the prospect of this obscure lot made me wretched, and I resolved, by some means or other, to raise myself above it. Life was distasteful to me; I lived but in the future; and yet what a gloomy future appeared to my aching sight!

I thus attained my thirtieth year, and I was still nothing—nothing; while I daily heard of colossal reputations, whose fame reached even this remote province. 'I will try the career of letters!' I exclaimed; 'let me win fame in any way, for fame alone is happiness.'

The only confidant of my chagrin was an aged negro, who had been in the chateau even before my birth. Indeed, he was so old, that no one remembered his coming; and it was said he had been present at the death of Marechal Fabert."

Here an involuntary start of surprise, which I could not repress, made my companion pause. "Go on," I said. "'tis nothing;" but, notwithstanding, I thought of the black man described by the old landlord.

"One day," continued Monsieur de C——, "I gave way before Yago (so the old negro was called) to the despair of my soul, at the shameful obscurity in which I dragged on my days. 'I would give ten years of my life,' I exclaimed, 'to become a celebrated author!'

'Ten years,' said Yago, coldly; 'it is paying dear for such a trifle. However, I accept your offer. The ten years are mine. Keep your promise; you will find me true to my word.'

I will not attempt to depict my astonishment at this speech. However, after a moment's reflection, I naturally concluded that age had enfeebled his intellects; and with a smile of pity I left the room, and in a few days after the chateau. I arrived in Paris, and soon found myself in the most distinguished literary society of the metropolis. Encouraged by their approval, I published several works. My success exceeded my most flattering dreams. The journals of Paris, of France, of even foreign nations, rung with my name; yourself, even yesterday, young man, acknowledged the power of my genius."

"How!" I exclaimed, with astonishment; "you are not, then, the Duke of C—— ?"

"No," he replied, coldly.

"What favored son of genius, then, stands before me?" said I: "Marmoutel? D'Alembert? Voltaire?"

The unknown, with a smile of contempt, continued his recital.

"The literary fame I enjoyed, unbounded as it was, could not satisfy a soul like mine. I longed for nobler triumphs, and could not help exclaiming to Yago, who had followed me to Paris, 'Oh, there is no real glory but that which is gained on the battle-field! What is a philosopher—a poet?—nothing! Speak to me of a hero! What are the poet's bays compared to the laurel wreath of a conqueror? To purchase that, I would willingly give ten years more of my life

'I agree to the bargain,' said Yago. 'They are mine also. Do not forget.'"

At this part of the narrative, the unknown paused, for he observed the astonishment expressed in my countenance.

"I told you," he said, "you would not believe. You think it a dream, as I, a'as! did once. But the honors I won, the triumphs I gained—squadrons led to meet the fire of the enemy—fortresses carried by skill—standards seized by my bravery—victories that were echoed through the world: these were not dreams—no! that glory was real, and that glory was mine!"

He paced the room with rapid strides, and his cheeks flushed with the vehemence of his discourse, while I muttered to myself, "Who, then, is this renowned warrier?—Coigny? Richelieu?—perhaps Maréchal Saxe himself."

The fever of enthusiasm passed away, and the unknown sunk again into despondency.

"Yago spoke truly," he continued, in a low and mournful tone. "I was soon wearied with the vain incense of military fame, and perceiving there was but one thing real and substantial in the world, I purchased, by five years more of my existence, the riches I coveted. Yes, young man, it is true, though incredible—I saw my wealth increase beyond my most sanguine desires. Lands, forests, castles, all were mine; even this morning I thought myself—but no matter; you will soon be convinced of the truth—oh, how soon!"

He approached the clock on the chimney, and looked at it with a terrified gaze, then continued, rapidly:

"This morning, on awaking at daybreak, I felt a degree of exhaustion throughout my whole frame that alarmed me. I rang my bell, and Yago answered the summons. 'What is the matter?' I exclaimed: 'I am faint.' 'It is but the course of nature,' he answered, calmly. 'Master, the hour approaches—it is come.' 'What hour?' I cried, in surprise. 'Do you not divine it?' said Yago. 'Heaven allotted as your portion sixty years of existence. You had lived thirty of them when I first became your slave.'

'Yago,' I cried, 'you are jesting with me!'

'No, master, no; in five years of life you have expended twenty-five to purchase glory. They became my property, and will be added to the term of my existence.'

'That, then,' I cried,' was the price I paid for your services!'

'Others have paid dearer,' he answered, boldly; 'for instance, Fabert, whom I served also.'

'Tis false, 'tis false!' I exclaimed, vehemently.

'You will find it true, my master,' said the black; 'you have but half an hour to live.'

'Oh, say not so, Yago; you are deceiving me!'

'Calculate yourself,' he answered; 'thirty-five years that you have actually lived, and twenty-five lost. The account is square. It is my turn now; every one their own, is but justice.'

He turned to go, but feeling myself gradually sinking, I exclaimed in despair: 'Oh Yago, Yago! give me but a few hours more!'

'They would be deducted from mine,' said he; 'and I know the value of life better than you did. What treasure is equal to two hours of existence?'

A dark cloud seemed to pass before my eyes, and the chill of death was in my veins. With a last effort, I gasped out, 'Take back the wealth for which I have paid so dear. Give me but four hours more of life, and I resign my lands, my castles, my gold—all, all!"

'You have been a kind master,' said he, after a pause; 'I wish to do something in gratitude.' I felt my courage revive, and ventured to say, 'Four hours are almost nothing: Yago, Yago, Yago, grant me some more in addition, and I resign the literary fame that placed my name so high in the world!'

'Four hours of life for such a bagatelle as that!' said the negro, with disdain; 'but for your sake I will not refuse your last request.'

'Oh! say not my last,' said I, emboldened by his compliance; 'give me the twelve hours complete—and let the fame of my battles and victories be forever effaced from the memory of mankind. One day, Yago—one day, and I am willing to resign all else.'

'You arouse my good nature,' he said; 'but I will not refuse. I give you till sunset. Farewell—with the last beam of day I come to fetch you'—And left me," continued the unknown, in the accents of despair; "and this is the last day I have to remain on earth." He rushed to the window, and pointed to the park. "I shall never again behold that lovely sky, that verdant lawn, that silvery stream, nor ever again breathe the balmy air of spring. Fool—fool that I was; the blessings that God lavishes upon all were mine also, and I despised them! Now I know their inestimable value; and I might have enjoyed them for twenty-five years longer; and in a few hours I must lose them forever! I have squandered my life for a vain chimera—a sterile fame, that has perished even before myself. Look!" he cried, pointing to a group of peasants, who, on their return to labor, filled the air with their joyous songs; "what would I not give to share their labors and poverty? But I have nothing now to hope for—not even labor and poverty." A bright sunbeam at this moment fell upon his pale and distorted features; he grasped my arm convulsively, and exclaimed, "Look—look at that glorious sun; and I must leave it forever! Ah! let me not lose a moment of this precious day, to which, for me, alas! there will be no morrow!" Thus saying, he rushed into the park, and disappeared amongst the foliage of a shady alley.

I threw myself upon the sofa, bewildered and oppressed by all I had heard and seen. Was it indeed a reality, or was I under the influence of some fantastic dream? The door was opened by a servant, who announced the Duke of C——.

A noble-looking personage, of about sixty years of age, entered, and cordially taking my hand, apologised for having detained me so long. "He had been compelled," he said, "to attend a consultation of the faculty upon the state of his unfortunate brother."

"He is not in danger, I trust," said I.

"No," replied the duke, mournfully: "the disease is a mental one. From his youth he suffered the most extravagant ideas of glory and ambition to gain possession of his mind, till his frame, weakened by such violent emotions, was attacked by a fever in which his life was despaired of. He recovered, however; but his reason is, I fear, gone forever. The unhappy illusion under which he labors is, that he has but one day more to live."

All was explained.

"Now, my young friend," continued the duke, "let us speak of your future prospects. Towards the end of the month I will be able to accompany you to court."

"I am fully sensible of your kindness, my lord," I replied; "but I have given up all idea of profiting by your generous offer"

"How is this?" exclaimed the duke, in unfeigned surprise; "give up the advantages that are almost within your grasp!"

"I resign them all, my lord."

"Young man," said the duke, "you know not what you do. Good Heavens! such a brilliant career open before you! In ten years—"

"Which would be ten years of my life lost," said I, with a smile.

"Lost!" cried the duke; "would it not be cheaply buying glory, fortune, and honors? Come, come, you but jest; you will go with me to Versailles?"

"No, my lord," I replied, in a respectful but firm tone; "I will return to Brittany, where I will ever retain a grateful sense of your lordship's goodness and condescension."

"This is madness—downright madness!" muttered the duke, in a disappointed and angry tone.

"I feel it is sound reason," whispered I, as I thought of all I had heard and seen so lately.

The next morning I was on the road. Oh, with what inexpressible delight I beheld again the sweet sky of Brittany—the trees of my noble park—the turrets of my ancient castle! There I found my beloved mother, my sweet sisters, my faithful vassals; and there I found true happiness, which I have never since quitted. Eight days afterwards I was the husband of Henrietta.

THE NUMBER OF LANGUAGES.—The least learned are aware that there are many languages in the world, but the actual number is probably beyond the dreams of ordinary people. The geographer Rabi enumerated eight hundred and sixty, which are entitled to be considered as distinct languages; five thousand which may be regarded as dialects. Adelung, another modern writer on this subject, reckons three thousand and sixty-four languages and dialects existing and which have existed. Even after we have allowed either of these as the number of languages, we must acknowledge the existence of almost infinite minor diversities, for almost every province has a tongue more or less peculiar, and this we may well believe to be the case throughout the world at large. It is said there are little islands in the South Sea, the inhabitants of which do not understand each other. Of the eight hundred and sixty distinct languages enumerated by Rabi, fifty-three belong to Europe, one hundred and fourteen to Africa, one hundred and twenty-three to Asia, four hundred and seventeen to America, one hundred and seventeen to Oceanica—which term distinguishes the vast number of islands stretching between Hindostan and South America.

THE Paris Figaro gives the following interesting particulars about Victor Hugo's mode of composition: It seems that, up to this time, he has never allowed a single line of his writing to go to the printer's. He has all his "slips" copied out out by his wife or daughter, and forms a kind of autographic museum of the original manuscripts of all his works. From that rule, however, he has departed, as regards the new poems, which were chiefly in pencil on an album; the slips were torn out of the book and taken directly to the printer's, at Brussels; where they are being set up under the author's own eye. It is a curious fact that Victor Hugo should labor under the delusion that he has mistaken his vocation, and that as a painter he would have achieved greater fame.

FALSE HAIR.

SAINT PAUL said, the glory of a woman is her long hair. The glory of a fashionable woman now seems to be in the quantity of the hair of other people she can put on her head. The prevalence and the pride of false hair is a striking illustration of the power of fashion. Not long ago it was a last resort to replace decay, and a necessity to be concealed even from one's friends. Now women pride themselves upon the magnitude of the structure which all know to be false, and there is as much ostentation in costly hair as in costly dress.

Recently, a Frenchwoman of rank, riding in a secluded road, was assaulted by her coachman, who struck her over the head several times with an iron wrench, but her false hair structure broke the force of the blows and saved her from being overcome. This is the only rational purpose we have heard of for this appendage; but this is rather too suggestive.

Besides the unwholesome relations of false hair, there is something still more suspicious in the materials of the framework of the various structures now worn, some of which are fitly called by unwholesome names. These composite fabrics have run to an extreme that must react, one would think, and perhaps the next extreme of fashion will be a style of hair so diminished that shall give to the world assurance of its being identical with the wearer.

The waterfall which, from its name, ought to be naturally flowing, has expanded to a stiff, stretched contrivance, like a pin-cushion or a snuff bladder, without grace, and a mere excrescence, like an exaggerated wen. It is said these are going out. For that, if true, we are thankful.

This is the only specially ungraceful feature of the present style of hair. But we doubt if the puffs, called by some verminous name, worn high above the temples, are artistic. They narrow the appearance of the head at that place where breadth is associated with intellectuality. But many women have an idea that height instead of breadth of forehead is a sign of intellect. The ancient Greeks did not think so, and the types of female beauty they have left will still continue to be the general model. The dressing of the hair will continue to revert to the classic style, which, in its general features, is a graceful flowing from the central parting to a coil behind. But the most objectionable feature of the present fashion is the prominence it gives to the foreign origin of the hair.

It is a grave question whether this habit of artificial substitutes for natural features does not diminish the regard for the true and natural in everything, and thus tend to demoralize the female mind. Will not the line between the false and the true be indistinct? Will not the air of falsehood surround mental as well as physical developments? We suggest this for the serious consideration of women. But there can be no question that in the minds of men the sanctity of female mysteries is much broken down by the prevalence of artificial substitutes, and by the manner in which their anatomical fabrication is laid bare in the shop windows. Men cannot know but that the object to be adored is a mere idol, of hay, wood and stubble, like those mentioned in Scripture.

We do not make an onslaught on the fashions of female dress by any means, for generally they are graceful and elegant; and we have exceeding scorn for those newspaper railers at female fashions who could not see the beauty of the style of bonnets of this year, and their vast improvement over the sky-scraper fronts and stiff projecting capes of the previous fashion. We are content that the order of nature, which in all other animals makes the male of the sex for display and swell, should be reversed in the case of women. Solomon, in all his glory, did not behold women arrayed like those which we can see upon our streets any fair day, without a care for the expense. And the cloth of gold which used to be laid down for princes to walk upon on occasions of unusual splendor, was a poor display compared with the sidewalks continually swept by silks of fabulous cost, on which any man can walk in this happy age.

THE following extract from a most deservedly popular work, called "The Rover; or, the Bootblack's Wife's Sister's Niece," is awfully thrilling. We will not insure any young lady against fainting right away at the close of this terrible, terrific extract:

A dark frown o'erspread the handsome and courtly features of Fernando, the Rover.

"Why, why!" he asked, brandishing his silver-handled sword furiously, "wilt thou not believe me, beauteous Maria de Argyle? By this good sword do I swear I love thee—truly, wildly, passionately I love thee! Then why stand so coldly aloof from this bosom that is bursting for thee?"

The beautiful girl essayed to speak, but could not.

"Ha!" exclaimed Fernando, the Rover, and a sardonic smile lit up his face, "thou lovest another!"

"No!" she tremblingly yet with dignity replied.

"Then why not come to this bosom?" wildly repeated the Rover.

"Because, sir," she replied, drawing herself up to her full height, "I'm afraid yer gassin'!"

THE ERL KING.

[In the days of his boyhood, and of Monk Lewis, Sir Walter Scott translated the "Erl King," and since then it has been a kind of essay-piece for aspiring German students to thump and hammer at will. We have heard it sung so often at the piano by soft-voiced maidens, and hirsute musicians, before whose roaring the bull of Phalaris might be dumb, that we have been accustomed to associate it with stiff white cravats, green tea, and a superabundance of lemonade. But to do full justice to its unearthly fascination, one ought to hear it chanted by night in a lonely glade of the Schwartzwald or Spessert forest, with the wind moaning as an accompaniment, and the ghostly shadows of the branches flitting in the moonlight across the path.]

WHO rides so late through the grisly night?
'Tis a father and child, and he grasps him tight;
He wraps him close in his mantle's fold,
And shelters the boy from the biting cold.

"My son, why thus to my arm dost cling?"
"Futher, dost thou not see the Erlie-king?
The king with his crown and long black train?"
"My son, 'tis a streak of the misty rain!"

"Come hither, thou darling! come, go with me!
Fair games know I that I'll play with thee;
Many bright flowers my kingdoms hold!
My mother has many a robe of gold!"

"O father, dear father! and dost thou not hear
What the Erlie-king whispers so low in mine ear?"
"Calm thee, my boy, 'tis only the breeze
Rustling the dry leaves beneath the trees!"

"Wilt thou go, bonny boy! wilt thou go with me?
My daughters shall wait on thee daintilie;
My daughters around thee in dance shall sweep,
And rock thee, and kiss thee, and sing thee to sleep!"

"O father, dear father! and dost thou not mark Erlie-king's daughters move by in the dark?"
"I see it, my child; but it is not they,
'Tis the old willow nodding its head so gray!"

"I love thee! thy beauty charms me quite;
And if thou refusest, I'll take thee by might!"
"O father, dear father! he 's grasping me—
My heart is as cold as cold can be!"

The father rides swiftly—with terror he gasps—
The sobbing child in his arms he clasps:
He reaches the castle with spurring and dread;
But, alack! in his arms the child lay dead!

[From the German of Goethe.

THE POET HUSBAND.

[Every one is by this time familiar with the episode of "Silas Wegg," in Our Mutual Friend. Mr Boffin, on his sudden acquisition of wealth, thought it necessary to retain a literary man, and deemed himself extraordinarily fortunate in securing the services of Wegg—a literary man, and, as Boffin was wont to exult in his enthusiastic moments, "a literary man—and with a wooden leg." In the annexed extract from the Paris correspondence of the Publishers' Circular, the story is told by a young lady who thought it would be quite the thing to set up a literary husband, and accordingly married a poet. The experiment did not result very satisfactorily for either party—certainly not for the poor Outropper.]

HAPPENING to be at Saint M——, a small town in the south of France, I visited the lunatic asylum. I have always been fond of lunatics. I have never met among them a stupid and bad man. I was shown into a tidy cell occupied by a little old man bent over a desk, and writing with his finger with inexpressible rapidity. He rose timidly, twirling his fingers. He was at least sixty years old, but occasionally did not seem to be above fifteen. His white, almost blonde hair fell in childlike curls, and his sweet face, smiling and uneasy, wore the expression of infants when they both weep and laugh at the same time. Nevertheless, one could detect profound grief, trembling agony, in his dilated eyes, which wore the fixed expression of madness and despair. My attendant made a gesture, and the poor old man resumed his seat with extravagant delight, and began to write as fast as ever he could. Then, seated in a corner of the cell in front of this infantine old man, my attendant told me the unhappy creature's history. Some forty or more years ago, there lived in a small town named St. R—— a young orphan. She was intellectual, wealthy, beautiful. Every unmarried man of the province was at her feet, his eye fixed on her fortune. She was so flattered, so adulated, so complimented, her gorge would rise at night when, upon going to bed, she would think of the sugar forced upon her during the day. At last such was the nausea she experienced, she resolved to give her hand and all it contained to a 'promising young man' who would give her in affection and reputation a substantial exchange for the beauty and estate she gave him. There was at that time in her town a prodigy of eighteen, who had rhymed from his infancy—had 'lisped in numbers.' He had already written many a fable, tragedy, sonnet, and epic, and the whole province held for firm belief that he would bloom into a great genius. She married this prodigy that no material obstacle might delay his progress on the road to fame. She brought him up to Paris, and so planted him in wealth's pothouse to force him to bear fruit. Strange and inexplicable fatality! unheard of catastrophe! The poet bore no fruit. He had a charming study; it was nothing but bronze and black marble. He lived in most favorable quiet. He knew nothing of the thorns of life. And after all he rhymed as he rhymed when he was fifteen, mere doggerel, fit at best for a confectioner's kisses. He was the best little husband that ever was seen, gentle and timid, amiable and laborious. She was the best little wife that ever was seen, conciliating and encouraging, extremely tolerant and of an invariable good humor. Nevertheless, by degrees she became nervous and irritable. He became ashamed of himself. Every morning he would lock himself up in his study, write madly, blot quire after quire of paper, read it over, and in despair confess 'twas not worth the ink 'twas written in. Every evening she would come, her heart throbbing with anxiety, to see if some good lines had at last made their appearance. She would question the poet, who every day hung his head still lower. At last impatience and disdain appeared; she could not long check their outbreak; and she upbraided her husband for defrauding her, because in return for her beauty and her money he had not given her genius.

After this scene matters went from bad to worse. The husband became a child scolded by the wife. He lived in a state of constant uneasiness, eternal shame. He lived blushing and trembling; his heart was wrung by all the tortures of the impotent artist and the insolvent man. He suffered the torments of the damned by the side of the woman he had robbed (so she said,) and whose only sentiment for him now was disdainful pity. So long as that woman had not abandoned all hope of seeing her husband bloom into a genius, she chained him to his writing-desk, and made him write a given number of lines every day before dinner. The unhappy man addressed himself to the task, and daily wrote worse. 'Twas an hourly battle between them of contempt and pain. She laughed disdainfully. He shivered with fear and anguish.

He had spent $2,500 of her money in attempting to become a great poet. This was his galled withers. One morning he refused to do his daily task set him every morning by his wife. He had found in the office of some joint-stock company a copying clerk's place, with a salary of $250, and henceforward he began to pay his debt to his wife. He lived under the same roof with her, but he paid rent for his room, he took his solitary meals in restaurants whose price was 14 sous, he dressed himself with his own money, and nevertheless managed to pay his wife a considerable amount of money annually in payment of his debt to her. He lived in this way above thirty years, silent and uneasy, shunning every eye, and blushing suddenly when no one was looking. His sole pleasure was to consult a little blank book wherein he recorded the money he paid his wife in extinguishment of her debt. His wife, seized by pity, by love perhaps, for this great baby, so pure and so young despite his years, tried to refuse his money and to win back to herself the poor heart she had shattered to pieces. Her weak, will-less husband refused with energy. He would listen to nothing. Work he would to pay off his wife. He copied letters. He made out bills. When his employers suggested advancement and increase of pay, he would blush and beseech them to take pity on him and not jeer his want of intellect. He was crazy—one of those harmless insanities akin to the mania for collecting old pipes, old snuff boxes, and the like. The day when he saw from his blank book that he owed his wife nothing, he became furiously insane. He made somersaults, he danced, he walked on his head, he wrote a sonnet and an elegy. It became necessary to lock him up in an insane asylum. His insanity is intermittent. He remains whole weeks together writing with his finger on the board of his desk, and occasionally adding together imaginary sums. Then, on the day when he believes he has obtained the desired sum total, he gives way to unbounded joy, which he exhibits by howling and leaping like some wild beast.

Look Out for Balls.—There is a decided disposition to keep the ball rolling, for two are announced within the next sennight, and they promise to be the affairs of the season. First, this evening, comes the Masquerade Ball of the Alemannia at the Academy of Music, where un ballo in maschera was so charmingly rendered a few months ago, when Addie Phillips was with us. The parquette is to be floored over; prizes will be awarded to the best marks, and, altogether, it bids fair to be a carnival of fun presided over by propriety. No side arms nor children in arms are allowed. And then there is the Ball of the Fire Department, on Thursday evening next, always one of the sensations of the year. It would be impossible for this to prove a failure, the list of managers being a guarantee for its success. We may remark, en passant, that if all the gentlemen are there who are down on the list of management, the attendance will be very fair, indeed, even if no others turn out; and we apprehend that all will be there, with the exception of three or four who have been quietly slumbering in Lone Mountain for a year past. Do not forget the Allemania this evening, and do not neglect the Firemen's next Thursday.

"Man wants but little here below." Hoff-man wanted a few thousand votes for Mayor in New York, and he got them by drawing on Wood—the most profitable piece of wood-engraving we have heard of lately. We notice, however, that the Atlas thinks it no better than stealing

McARONE ON VACCINATION.

[The following article was contributed by the late George Arnold (McArone) to the New York Weekly Review during the vaccinating furore consequent upon the anticipated spread of the small-pox in that city. The lamented McArone rarely put pen to paper without inoculating his readers with laughter; it scarcely seems possible that so much of sparkling life and humor can have found an early grave:]

I FAIL in respect for the memory of Jenner. Undoubtedly, he imagined that he had done something remarkable when he conceived the brilliant though nasty idea of scraping a little dried blood and poison from Tom, Dick, or Harry's sore arm and applying it to an abrasion upon mine. No doubt, too, he has saved us from a good deal of small-pox. But he is also responsible for the present epidemic that is raging all over this region—the vaccination fever. It is, on the whole, worse than the small-pox.

A few days ago I met X. He was once my dearest friend, but we had not seen each other for some years. We rushed into each other's arms and mingled tears of joy. After the first transports of delight, we fell to hand-shaking. I seized his right hand in mine, and placed my left upon his arm near the shoulder. He started back in horror.

"For heaven's sake, my dear fellow," he cried, "don't! My vaccination!"

Our joy was dashed; our enthusiasm damped. He felt hurt. So did I. We mumbled a few commonplaces and parted without tipulation. I walked mournfully up Broadway, and encountered Madame Arcencial with her two beautiful children. Children are one of my especial weaknesses. Although a man of celibate habits myself, I am not one of those who find these little epitomes of humanity wearisome. I touched my hat to the matron with that air of graceful politeness which has always distinguished me, and lifted up the youngest and chubbiest Arcenciel for a kiss. The child made up a face like a Nuremberg nut-cracker, and evolved a howl of more than average dismalness.

"Be careful!" said Madame, hurriedly and with emotion, "she has been vaccinated, and it has taken beautifully!"

I smiled grimly, and passed on with a brief word of farewell.

At the Lafarge House door, soldier Frank pounced upon me like a military osprey upon a civil herring.

"What on earth is the matter?" said he.

"Matter?" I replied, "why, vaccine!"

At this moment, a fine-looking old gentleman slipped on a frozen spot close by us, and fell heavily. We hastened to get him up and set him on his feet. He shook himself, brushed the dirt from his garments, and began searching the pavement with eager scrutiny.

"Have you lost your eye-glass, sir?" I demanded.

"No, sir; not an eye-glass."

"Your watch, sir?" asked Frank.

"No, no—not my watch."

"Your pocket-book, perhaps?"

"No, sir; my pocket-book is all right."

"Can't we assist you, sir, in your search? What have you lost?"

"Well, gentlemen, the truth is, I've been vaccinated, and promised the thingamy to my doctor, but it was knocked off when I fell just now, and I'm afraid it is lost."

We did not search for the thingamy.

I never told you, did I, that I have an own true lover. I have. She is the most beautiful creature on earth, and possesses all the virtues of her sex. When we are together, we are perfectly happy. When apart, we are utterly miserable. I know that it is common for every young man to suppose that his individual own true love is the most wonderful, lovely and glorious being ever created. We all know that this foolish hallucination is natural to the condition of love. But, realizing this, I have positive evidence that in my case there is no mistake about it. She is young, vivacious, graceful, witty, affectionate, unselfish, and healthy. She has lovely hair, an exquisite mouth, delicious eyes, a splendid figure, intelligent hands, a good appetite, and a little cooing laugh that drives wise men mad. In a word, she is perfection itself, and her name is Aimee Chou-chou. I was in low spirits yesterday, and, as she always acts upon me like unlimited sunshine, I went to see her. The dear child was doing her back hair when I arrived, and could not be disturbed, so I had to wait five mortal minutes for her in the parlor. That is, she said to her maid, "Tell him I will be down in five minutes." And before she came, I read half of a volume of Walpole's Letters, the greater part of Enoch Arden, and two articles in the last Atlantic, besides examining a case of rare shells on the mantel and the sheet music on the piano. Then I got up and looked out of the window at a small boy who was experimenting with one skate on a frozen gutter across the way. I watched him till he slipped and came down with his left arm against the curb-stone. From the manner in which he clapped his hand to the place and squealed, I judged that he had been recently vaccinated.

In came the dear child at this juncture, looking like a cross between a rose-bud and a cream almond

She was so radiant, so dazzling, so wholesome and irresistible, that without regarding the amenities of social life or the integrity of her toilet, I caught her at once in my arms. She gave a shriek. "O, Mac! My vaccination!" "My dear child," I said, "d—n the vaccination!" I am aware it was wrong: I regret having spoken in this military manner to one so young and fair: but I was deeply moved. Since then I have become morbid and cynical on the subject. Wherever I go and whatever I do, vaccination stares me in the face. My friends no longer ask me, "How do you do?" They say, "How have you taken?" or, "How's your arm?" I repeat that I fail in respect for the memory of Jenner. I will confess to you, quite in secret, that at a moment of dark despair, I went and got vaccinated. Of course, it did not take. I am debarred the poor consolation of being in sympathy with my fellow-men. It is impossible, at this era, to know who is athletic and who is not. I received a most able-bodied insult, the other day, in abject silence, because the man who affronted me had what I took to be an enormous biceps muscle. I made sure that he was a pugilist of the first magnitude. Judge of my disgust on learning that his arm was only swelled in consequence of a late successful vaccination. I could have whipped him with one hand! But I have had a small amount of revenge after all. With the vain and inconsequent idea of escaping from this absurd misery, I went into the rural districts. The first statement I heard there, was that there were two cases of small-pox within a mile; and the first question asked me was, "Have you been vaccinated?" Filled with a gloomy and sardonic humor, I gave out that I was an expert at the process, and having procured some of the interesting substance with which that mild species of torture is performed, I went to work upon all the neighborhood. It was, perhaps, fiendish, but I took an unnamable pleasure in hurting these excellent people as much as possible without becoming liable to a legal penalty. It was the first ray of joy I have known since the epidemic commenced to rage. And in due time, when the malicious poison got to work, a huge delight in sitting tranquilly at a tea-fight, surrounded by decorous and polished persons, all dying with a secret desire to scratch, but too well bred to gratify it publicly. How long the agony may last, heaven only knows. When it is over, I hope my friends will be able to rest on their arms; a feat that they find somewhat painful just now. Meanwhile I despair of hearing anything about the draft, or the peace commission, or the price of gold, or anything else except this confounded invention of Jenner's And, as I think I have before remarked, I fail in respect for that person's memory.

THE MAGIC STOVE.

I AM aware, ladies and gentlemen, gasped Sir Joshua, that I have wandered sadly from my point, but this old-world matter of the lottery always sets my tongue going. It was the same with my good father, who could have told you a hundred stories about it, and was indeed, I am sorry to say, a regular victim at the shrine of Fortune for half his life. For twenty years he had annually purchased a whole ticket without seeing a sixpence of his money back; but at last he wisely determined to stop, without sending more good money after bad. Yet, as the first day's Drawing came near in that one-and-twentieth year, I could see that my parent's prudence was not by any means giving him the satisfaction that it deserved His friends and neighbors were buying tickets upon all hands, and speculating upon their chances of success. "Well," one would say, "I should think, sir, your turn must come round this time;" and another would hope to see him repaid for all his losses by this single coup. I saw it annoyed him to have to answer: "I have bought no ticket; I never mean to try again;" and when some gossip would rally him about his faint heartedness and want of courage, it quite ruffled his ordinarily excellent temper. Still he stuck to his resolution until the very Saturday before the drawing—when he sent for me into his private parlor after dinner, and addressed me as follows: "I have something to say to you of a very singular kind, my boy. It may be of no consequence, and it may be of the greatest possible importance; but however it turns out, you must promise me, upon your honor, to keep it a secret as long as I live."

Of course, I gave the required security; and my good father, who sat with his handkerchief over his head in front of a huge stove—for it was winter-time, and he loved warmth—continued with the greatest gravity: "You know, my boy, that I had resolved upon purchasing no more lottery tickets, and that I am not a man to lightly break my resolutions. Still, I am not so obstinate as to resist the manifest influences of—of—I hardly know what to call it, or who it comes from, but the fact is—— Just lock the door, will you?"

Here I cast an involuntary glance towards the bottle of hollands which always stood at my father's right hand after dinner, although I had never known him to be overtaken by liquor before.

"No, no; it's not that, Joshua," said he, divining my thoughts; "although, when you have heard me out, I shall not blame you for thinking anything, so singular is the experience I have to narrate. I feel 'led,' my boy, as your Aunt Dorcas calls it, absolutely enjoined by a higher power, to purchase No. 472."

"When Aunt Dorcas wants to do anything whatever, she always says she feels 'led,'" replied I drily.

"Yes; of course I want to buy a ticket, although against my better judgment, that is true; but why should I set my mind upon this No. 472?"

I was an opinionated young dog in those days, and did not feel so much touched by my father's confidence as to prevent me from shrugging my shoulders.

He colored a little, but with great good-nature repeated his question.

"Well, perhaps you dreamed it, sir," returned I, "like Mrs. Fosbey."

This was a poor widow lady who lived in the next street, and who had dreamed three times running of a lucky number in the lottery, and had borrowed the money of my father wherewith to purchase the ticket.

"No, my boy," replied my father (but with a perceptible wince, for the said number had turned out a blank both for her and for him;) "I did not exactly dream it; but it happened thus: You know that I have had this stove set up here but a few days ago, and used it for the first time on Thursday last. Upon that very evening, when I had come in here as usual after dinner, and having read the paper, had dozed off for an hour or two, I awoke, and beheld in the centre of this iron door, which, as you see, has nothing upon it whatsoever, in letters and figures of fire, No. 472! I was wide awake by that time, and I am as certain as ever I was of anything in my whole life, that the thing was as I have told you. However, so distrustful was I of myself—for I know how the lottery occupies my mind, and I confess I had been dreaming of it at that very time—that I said nothing about it, but waited for the next night, when I give you my sacred word of honor that the same thing happened again. Once more I dreamed of the lottery, and upon waking, with my feet upon the stove, once more I saw No. 472 glowing forth out of its iron door, like some mysterious warning, or perchance—a—a——"

"Or a Providential intimation as to how to lay out your money to the best advantage," suggested I demurely.

"Well, yes—of course it's very odd, looked at in that light; but I've been thinking of it a good deal in the meantime, and the ticket-office has not yet closed; so I will just trouble you, my boy, to step out and purchase for me, without saying a word about it, Number——"

"My dear father," interrupted I, "of course I have no right to dictate to you——"

"Don't do it, then," returned the old gentleman curtly. "Just take this money, and don't say a word to anybody; but if No. 472 is on hand, bring it; and if it's sold, find out who has got it, and bring me word. I will have it, whatever it costs me; and if that ticket does not come up a prize, I will never spend a silver sixpence again in flattery of the jade Fortune."

As my father had threatened this for eighteen successive years, it did not give me great hopes of his reformation; while my expectations of the ticket in question turning out a prize were equally low. However, there was no course for me but to obey. It was late, but being the Saturday before the Drawing, the offices were allowed to be open until after 8 P. M.; so if the ticket should be unsold, I could get it that night. It was, however, not at all probable that this should be the case; and I was not surprised to hear that No. 472 had been purchased many days before by a gentleman living in the country—or what was then the country—about half a mile north of Kensington Palace. My father seemed very disappointed when I took him this news; and wishing me good night, retired to his private room, saying that he had some business to transact which would occupy him until very late.

I had been in bed and asleep I knew not how long, when I was awaked by hearing the front door closed (although as softly as it could be done;) and thinking there might be something wrong, I hurried on a few clothes, and slipped down stairs. My father's hat and greatcoat were not hanging up in their usual places, so that I felt certain it was he who had just gone out; nor had I far to look for the reason, for the door of his private room was open, and I could see from the hall the magic stove before which he had been sitting with No. 472 gleaming from the iron door, as he had truly described them, in letters and figures of flame. It was evident that my father had been unable to resist this third manifestation, but had hurried off to Kensington to knock the gentleman up, and buy his ticket whether he would or not. Under such circumstances, what a price would he have to pay for it! At the same time, I could scarcely blame him; I had now the evidence of my own eyes to corroborate his extraordinary experience. Here was No. 472 glaring and gleaming out of an iron door, which was ordinarily as blank as a—— I was going to say a lottery ticket, but I avoided that metaphor as an ill omen! Yes, there was the N, and the O, and the 4, and the 7, and the 2, as distinct as the red letters in the calendar. There was certainly something in it: and I determined to wait up until my father came home to tell him what I myself had seen. The worst of it was that the coals in the scuttle were exhausted, and that after an hour or so—and I knew that he must be a long time away—the room would probably be getting cold. In this surmise I was correct; but as the stove waxed cooler and cooler, something far more disagreeable than cold supervened. I saw that the magic letters waned and waned as the fire within got low, and long before it went out, they had grown quite black and invisible; then the truth gleamed upon me, chill and bare enough. The wonderful inscription was, after all, only the number of the stove, inscribed upon it by the Iron Company that sold it, but which could not be seen, without very close inspection, until it became of a white heat.

I dared not sit up for my father any longer, nor had I the heart to tell him when he explained to me the next day how fortunate he had been in purchasing the ticket for only three times the cost price, how wofully he had been deceived.

SEVILLE.

SEVILLE is still the city of the guitar, the fan, the song, and the fandango, the ne plus ultra ana zeviya nia of the majo and bull-fighter, of the gipsy and contrabandist; the rendezvous of the most picturesque blackguards in the South of Spain, who lounge and hang about the suburban tabernas, breakfast on a glass of water, and dine on an air on the guitar, argue among each other with the navaja and other such arguments of point; make love to their neighbor's pocket, and know of heaven what they see of it through the golden juice of an orange, as they lie on their backs in the cool shade, a picture of contentment and sweet nothing-to-do. The town has preserved more of the character of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries than of the Moorish period, of which, however, many vestiges remain. This is evinced in the style of the private houses of the nobility, the general appearance of the edifices, etc., which all denote the influence of Italian taste, and its happy combination with the Moorish style. The people themselves seem to have lost that grave, solemn, stern and melancholy mood of the Spaniard of the fifteenth century, which he inherited from the Moors, and to retain only that gay, brilliant capa y espada, devil-may-care humor of the seventeenth century in Spain, coupled with the more sombre types of the inquisitorial and inquisitioned, somewhat suspicious, jealous and haughty spirit of Lope de Rueda, Calderon's and Vega's dramas. Seville is still in many points the city of pleasure and love of Beaumarchais-Rossini's Barbiere. And look, there goes Almaviva, on his prancing horse, gay and dashing, now dressed in velvets and fillagree buttons, all sunshine and moonshine, invincible and enamorado, sending kisses to Rosina, who peeps at him behind her mirador. He is always that personification of youth, love and summer; and Rosina is always as pretty under her black mantilla, though she now reads French novels, and knows the names of Lor Biron y Saspir; and Figaro is not the less qui, and Figaro la, laughing, joking, running to and fro, all fuss and intrigue, all gossip and mirth, for his being raised to sangrador y comadron, and other high offices within his calling; nay, Bartolo himself is not dead, only now he dresses like an undertaker, is a man dil ano doce, wears a diamond pin in his shirt, and a wide gold ring on the forefinger, and looks as sharp as ever, whether Rosina is dropping a bouquet or picking up a scented esquelita. Basilio is also alive, and there we may see him sneaking through the crowd, with his long barco, tile-shaped, greasy hat, his worn-out sotana, his bilious skin, his hypocritical eyes: vade retro! and would that thou wert but a spectre of bygone times, and not a sad reality of the present! The other types, may they always remain, natural and charming offsprings of a land of sun and love; and all members of the immortal family of Mozart's and Byron's Don Juan, a pure Sevillano, of Don Miguel de Mañara, of Don Bustos. Tavera, of La Estrella de Seville. The houses are superior to those of the rest of Andalusian cities, in style and appearance; they are generally of two or three stories, gaily painted outside, with lofty rooms, numerous rejas, charming patios, or inner courts, which, during the summer, are covered with an awning, and furnished with pianos, sofas, etc., for the evening tertulia, when the whole town is converted into a vast drawing room. They are, moreover, decorated with brightly painted and gilt miradores, which, with their glass and flowers, look like conservatories suspended. A lengthened residence will be found more pleasant here than anywhere else in Spain.

BANCROFT'S CATALOGUE.—We are indebted to H. H. Bancroft & Co. for a catalogue of the scientific books which their shelves contain. Catalogues do very well for occasional reading—the same may be said of Langley's Directory—but for a steady course of reading we prefer the books.

CHARITY LECTURE.—Dr. J. F. Morse will deliver a lecture before the Berith Shulom Society at Dashaway Hall, on Friday evening of next week—the proceeds to be applied towards the relief of one of the members who met with an accident which forever disables him from pursuing his vocation."

THE ANGEL OF PATIENCE.

IN a former age of the world, while as yet it was judged necessary that heaven should communicate its wisdom directly to man, an angel was intrusted with the duty of imparting lessons in patience.

A great lord lay upon silken cushions in a splendid apartment, surrounded by every luxury which his own and neighboring countries could produce, and waited on by troops of menials who were ready to obey his most slightly expressed wish. But, amidst all his enjoyments, the great lord writhed in mental anguish. The king had that afternoon passed him without notice;-and the want of one word from the royal lips had been sufficient to produce a complete insensibility to all the other blessings of life, of which he possessed such abundance. "Was there ever any mortal so miserable as I am!" he bitterly exclaimed; and next minute, when his butler presented him with a cup of the most delicious wine, he started up in a paroxysm of anger, and threw the liquor in the man's face, merely because he observed a speck of dust upon the salver on which the cup was borne.

He had no sooner been left alone, than the Angel of Patience stood before him, and, holding up a mirror, desired him to look in it. He coldly raised his eyes, and, looking in the mirror, beheld a vessel struggling with a tempest, while the merchant, its proprietor, was directing the sailors to throw bales of rich merchandise overboard, in order to save it from destruction. "Great lord," said the angel, "behold this scene. It is one really taking place at this moment. An honest and industrious merchant has committed all he possesses in the world to this vessel, with the hope of turning it to profit; but he has been overtaken by a storm, and now, for the sake of bare life, he is compelled to sacrifice all that property which was the result of so many years of toil, and upon which he calculated for the means of spending his latter days in peace, and portioning his sons and daughters. Is he not more miserable than thou?"

The great lord held his peace, and, after a brief panse, the angel desired him to look again. The whole of the merchandise had now been thrown from the vessel, and the merchant showed by his attitude and looks, that he was resigned to the great loss which it had been the will of Heaven that he should experience. "Seest thou," said the angel, "how patient the merchant is? He knows that he is pennyless, and must once more begin the world, if he would wish again to be wealthy, or even to acquire the means of subsistence. Yet he breathes not a word of complaint. He submits to fate, and his soul is at peace." "Oh, angel," said the great lord, "I see all that thou showest to me, and am corrected. May I never again repine about trifles, or fall into such unworthy fits of anger!" The angel then departed, for her purpose had been accomplished.

Bakrak sat in his magnificent bazaar in the city of Betlis, which was filled with all the rich spices, and cloths, and porcelain of the east. He was the richest man in the city, and fortune still continued to flow upon him in an unremitting stream. But at this moment a cloud sat upon the brow of Bakrak. One of his slaves had that day disappeared with a package of the rich shawls of Lahore, and, as misfortunes rarely come single, his coffee had not been scorched exactly to the right degree of dryness, so that it wanted much of its usual flavor. He was in such an angry mood, that not one of his remaining servants durst approach him. His favorite son, young Bakrak, whom he rarely saw without loading with caresses, had gone up to him as he was accustomed to do, and laid his head affectionately on his shoulder: when, instead of patting the child as usual on the cheek, he had given him a box on the ear, which caused the blood to flow from his mouth. At that moment the Angel of Patience suddenly entered the bazaar.

Holding up her mirror before Bakrak, she desired him to look therein. He complied with a sulky carelessness, but was soon arrested by the sight which met his eyes. It was one of those beautiful vales which one can never see without supposing them to have been designed for the habitation of innocent and happy human beings. The full moon had risen over the centre of the vale, and was looking mildly down into it, as if it had been a divine thing created for the use of that valley alone, and which would remain to be admired and worshipped there for ever. But a band of lawless men had this evening entered the valley, and were now engaged in plundering the inhabitants. The picture delineated in the mirror more particularly displayed in the foreground a cottage in flames, while the family that lately occupied it sat bound with cords on the sward in front, surrounded by a small party of the depredators. Then the scene was slightly changed. The children five in number, were commanded to mount behind as many troopers, in order to be carried away from their native country, the girls to be sold, at prices proportioned to their beauty, in some distant slave-market, and the boys to be brought up as recruits for the army of the Sultan, and neither ever again to see their parents. Bakrak saw the struggles and tears of the father and mother, as their children were borne away, and, thinking of young Bakrak, he groaned aloud. "This," said the angel, "is a real scene, which is at this moment passing in a certain part of the world. What are all your troubles to the misery of this desolate pair? Behold, and be thou restored to equanimity." "I am restored," said Bakrak; and the angel left him.

An artisan had returned from his daily toil to the tranquil home, where, though no luxury ever appeared, there was at least a sufficiency of necessaries, and even of comforts. His wife smiled on him as he entered, and his children ran to embrace his knees, and offer the kiss which was as much homage as affection. But the heart of the artisan was heavy within him, and he looked round on his neat household, and the clean and healthful meal prepared for him, with dissatisfaction. He had been torturing himself all day with reflections on his incessant labors, and the apparently superior happiness of others, and he had at length arrived at the conclusion, that the class to which he belonged were treated by the wealthy only as slaves, born to minister to their pleasures. His wife and children shrunk from his cold eye and gloomy brow, and the evening passed in silence and sadness. At length, no longer able to bear the agony of his thoughts in the presence of his family, he walked out into his garden, which he paced for some time with hurried steps, as if seeking to escape from some demon which tormented him. At this moment, the Angel of Patience presented herself, and held up her mirror before his eyes.

He saw a man and woman, who, from their dress, seemed to belong to a country different from his own. They were poor wanderers, who sought a livelihood by selling little articles amongst the country people; and their attire bespoke a general condition little above that of common mendicants. It was Saturday evening, and they timidly approached a small farm-house, in order to ask shelter for the night, and during the ensuing day. [The vision of the mirror is, in this case, described from circumstances of actual occurrence.] The farmer beheld them with suspicion, but said they might, if they chose, take up their abode in an outhouse to which he pointed. The two foreigners thanked him humbly, and went to the shed which he had pointed out. They found it to have only part of a roof, and to contain no furniture of any kind, but they were forced to be content with it. The man, who wanted one of his arms, immediately proceeded to the neighboring field, and with his one hand cut as much dry grass and rushes as served to make up a bed in the only corner of the shed where there was a roof. They then partook of some wretched fragments of bread and meat which they carried with them, and lay down to rest, but not till they had, according to the forms of their country's religion, rendered thanks and praise to the Giver of all good for such share of his bounty as they enjoyed. The mirror further showed the life of this humble pair during the next day. Early in the morning, the man made arrangements in their little habitation for performing a religious ceremony, which in his own country he had been taught to regard as all-important, though, in that where he now was, it was considered as an abomination. At the proper time, he performed this rite with his wife as his sole fellow-worshipper, both taking care that no one else should be annoyed by what they did. "Behold," said the angel, "how two of the poorest and most wretched of human beings deport themselves towards God and man, while thou, who enjoyest so many more blessings, tormentest thyself with vain imaginings. Thou canst read the lesson: I ask if thou art corrected?" "I am," answered the artisan; and the angel left him.

An old man, who made a slender livelihood by the labors of himself and an aged horse, was one day passing along the road, leading that animal, which was loaded on this occasion with a burden much too heavy for its strength. The dress of the old man was ragged, bespeaking the utmost poverty; but his cheek showed still some red, and he set his foot to the ground in such a manner that no one could suppose him to be in a very feeble condition. To testify his vigor still farther, he thrashed his horse in a most unmerciful manner with a whip which he carried in his right hand, tugging the bridle at the same time with his left, as if he would have pulled the head of the poor animal away from its body. Occasionally, he kicked its stiff sides, which gave forth a sound such as a basket gives when kicked, and he was continually showering upon the animal opprobious nicknames and furious execrations. He was impatient to reach a particular place with his load, because he was to have no pay and no breakfast till his task was accomplished. It was partly his hunger which made him on this occasion use his horse so cruelly. Unexpectedly, the Angel of Patience came up and walked along by his side. "Pitiless man," said she, "how canst thou thus treat this very creature that is doing its best to serve thee? Hold still thy wicked hand, and take even from that animal a lesson of patience. You have loaded it beyond its strength, and yet it endeavors to do what you demand of it. You kick and lash it, and it bears all with submission. The misery of that poor animal is at this moment extreme; I know it to be so; but it betrays not the slightest symptom of a disposition to retaliate upon the author of its distresses. You are hungry now, and that, you will say, is your excuse; but you feed your horse in so poor a way that it is never otherwise than hungry, and yet, when it tries to snatch a mouthful of grass from the wayside, and you lash it to make it go on, does it not quietly yield to your wish? Observe the whole demeanor of the animal, and think of it well. It is patience in a living shape. Let its downcast look, its laboring muscles, its breaking yet submitting heart, at length pass beyond your mere sight, which is familiar with them, and enter the soul within, and let the consequence of the lesson be mercy and patience. Farewell." The angel then vanished, and the old man, before advancing another step, took the load from his horse, and allowed it to feed for ten minutes upon the thistles by the wayside; after which it prosecuted its journey with renewed spirit, and he he did not once lay his lash upon it during the remainder of the journey.

The Angel of Patience does not now come in a bodily form upon the earth; but the world abounds as much as ever with lessons resembling those which she used to read to mankind. The sentimental grievances of the great and rich may yet be assuaged, if the great and rich will only think upon the many severer evils which others are every moment bearing, and bearing, perhaps, with magnanimity and resignation. The evils which befall every station of life may be softened, if we only reflect on the worse afflictions of the next lower sphere. It is not that we can > ——"hold a fire in our hand,

> By thinking on the frosty Caucasus," but that an example of patience may be drawn from the well-borne sufferings of others. Nor is there any class of society so sunk to the bottom of wretchedness, but such an example may still be found even for them, for rightly considered, the miseries and sacrifices which animals are so largely called upon to endure on man's account, and which they generally endure with so perfect a patience, are calculated to soften and bring down to submission the most obdurate hearts.

THE CHOLERA TRACK IN EUROPE.—The following statement of the course of the cholera epidemic of 1865 is abridged from a leading article in the Times: It commenced apparently on the Arabian coast, then travelled to Alexandria, thence to Constantinople, and thence again to various ports on the Mediterranean. From the Mediterrancan it crept into the Black Sea, and afterwards through the Straits of Gibraltar and along the west coasts of Spain and Portugal. Yet it did not make the circuit of the Mediterranean, nor did it continuously ascend the Atlantic shores of the Peninsula. Its visits were capricious and irregular. To this day it has left not only Greece, but all the eastern coast of the Adriatic and the coasts of Barbary, untouched. One coast of Italy was severely visited, while the other, up to the close of last month, remained exempt. Sicily escaped, but Malta has suffered heavily. For a long time, too, it seemed as if the disease could not penetrate into the interior of a country, but that exception has now disappeared. After escaping from the Mediterranean, the pestilence first appeared at Seville. Then it was at Southampton, afterwards at Paris, and, later still, Madrid. From Odessa, where it established itself in the autumn, it advanced, and is still advancing, northwards to the Polish provinces of the Russian Empire. It is plain, upon the whole, that the plague is no longer confined to the basin of the Mediterranean, but has been hovering over Central and Western Europe. The effects of the visitation have been as uncertain as its course. At some places they have been comparatively light; at others, very severe. At Marseilles and Toulon the disease was obstinate as well as fatal, and was only dislodged after serious and prolonged mortality. In Madrid and Paris, on the other hand, though the virulence of the epidemic was considerable, its career was short, both capitals being now regarded as free. In this country it is now upwards of six weeks since the cholera showed itself at Southampton. Its appearance was unmistakable; its severity in one or two cases equally marked. The cases, too, though certainly not numerous, occurred so far in succession that the disease seemed established, and one or two attacks were reported from the banks of the Itchen. Yet this footing was not maintained, nor did the malady spread. The account published on Wednesday gave the place a clean bill of health, while the rest of the country is absolutely free. In London we have been without even the symptom of an outbreak, though it is noticeable that diarrhœa is somewhat more prevalent than is common at this particular time of the year.—London paper, Nov. 11.

WHAT IS AN INCH OF RAIN?—In a recent weekly return the Registrar-General gives the following interesting information in respect to rainfall: "Rain fell in London to the amount of 0·43 inches, which is equivalent to 43 tons of rain per acre. The rainfall during the week varied from 30 tons per acre in Edinburgh to 215 tons per acre in Glasgow. An English acre consists of 6,272,640 square inches; and an inch deep of rain on an acre yields 6,272,640 cubic inches of water, which, at 277,274 cubic inches to the gallon, makes 22,622.5 gallons; and, as a gallon of distilled water weighs 10 lbs., the rainfall on acre is 226,225 lbs. avoirdupois; but 2,240 lbs. are a ton and consequently an inch deep of rain weighs 100,993 tons, or, nearly 101 tons per acre. For every 100th of an inch a ton of water falls per acre."

REPRINTS ABROAD.

[Regarding the matter of English reprints of American publications "Llewellyn," dating from London, discourses at length. The following extract is taken from his letter. The first comment of the reflecting mind is upon the exceeding bad taste which the publishers abroad display in their piracies. Honesty is not to be expected perhaps, but one would certainly expect them to leave pewter spoons alone:]

A LONDON publisher has inserted in the principal papers of that city a plain notice that "Artemus Ward's book is printed without the author's leave, precisely as Mr. Beeton's (the publisher's) books, and Englishmen's generally, are reprinted in America without their leave," etc. Bold enough, that. Moreover, he spells poor A. Ward's origiual name without the e to "Browne," to hint, I suppose, that there'll be no ease for witty Americans over here.

The English eveu now talk of us as if the world was in the day of Winchester's New World press, Williams Brothers' Yankee and News of All Creation, and the Broker Jonathan. To be sure, then,-the "bungalow" presses of Ann street, New York, and Ann street, Boston, did use to "smash off" a whopping edition of Dickens', or Bulwer's, or James's last for 12½ cents, the London copy being several guiueas, only. There used to be some sweet bribing of pursers and stewards, in those days, to bring over new works and avoid delay at the Custom House. But, heaven preserve you, the English don't know that the earth has worn her axle-tree considerably since then. Poor Britannia! the "drum beat" that Daniel Webster set to music first (they think Burke said it, here) is all her idea, except one more, "keep as you were," while the globe turns topsy-turvy.

We do still use some of the English productions. But the boot is not all on our side. The mate must be here. Look! as the Freuch say. Ward aud Lock (representing Maxwell and Co.,) who don't like to publish any except "moral" volumes—i. e., Miss Braddon's Sunday-school readers: Lady Audley's Secret; or, All's Well that ends in Well, etc.—Ward and Lock, I repeat, have got out almost all the New York set kuown as the "Mercury Stories," suppressing the authors' names.

That latter is the rule. The consequeuce is, that Ned Buntline's Henry Morgan for one, has had a colnmn notice in Tom Hood's Fun as a British work.

The "Artemus Ward" Beeton, aforesáid, has republished the Orpheus C. Kerr Papers (and did not send a gilt-edged copy in a crimson velvet bag to Adah Isaacs Mazep—I mean Menken,) Jack Downing's Day Book scraps, Petroleum V. Nasby, Bigelow Papers, Holmes's Autocrat, (what will the Big Organ say?) John Phoenix (about as much understood in this latitude, especially all that about "Joe Bowers," Frisco knows who, as—as John E. Owens was,) Saxe's pieces out of the Ledger, etc. Also, Abbott's Napoleon (but that item is nearly enough to pardon him the rest! Who wouldn't forgive the purloiner that should walk off with a leaden elephant?) And we have reprinted just three of his publications.

There is hardly one in the trade here that has not republished several American books, (such as Poe's poems, etc.) The Family Herald runs a "Terrible Fright; or, The Household of the Impalpable Habitation" regularly as it comes out in the Ledger. Its facetiæ, one page, is mostly clippings from "American papers," credit but rarely given, no subject of the Queen being exempt from fits of such a string as Alta California, or Persimmonvilletonian Pennon, Penn., were to meet his eye. Reynolds' Miscellany culls the short stories from the New York Mercury and Frank Leslie's Ladies' Boudoir Bouquet, or whatever that illustratedious adopted citizen has in hand at present. The London Journal, ditto, as well as the jokes. The Penny Miscellany has a penchant for the New York Weekly, the Novelette, the Waverley Magazine, and, occasionally, the Ledger, of course suppressing the author's name and changing the title, when such a feat is not likely to strain the editor's mental powers too greatly. The Cottage Journal dipped into some Boston issne, I believe. It is either dead, or dying about this time. The Guide takes one-number stories.

An off-shoot of Routledge's hoase is at nearly all of Carleton's American novels, Nemesis among them! If it were poetry, I would try hard to ring in a joke on Par-nessus' shirt, but refrain. Public Opinion's best pages, the livest and liveliest are the extracts from transatlantic journals. The Daily Telegraph has added one-third to its circulation by acting on the hints that G. A. Sala picked up while sailing into the New York Herald columns, the time when he took the poor Museum balcony for Tammany Hall and that German with the French horn behind the alligator transparency, for ——, the Great Dead Rabbit himself. Moreover, the Daily Star calls said Sala Munchausen and Mendezacious, because the World, I think it was, used the same epithets at the first of the war.

Another of that remarkable family, the Adauuses of Massachusetts, has taken to public life. His name is John Quincy Adams, and he is a grandson of the "old man eloquent." He is represeuted as beiug possessed of much of the talent of his progenitors.

A FITTING FUNERAL.

TOM SAYERS, the pugilist, was buried on Wednesday, at Highgate Cemetery, under circumstances which can only be described by the word disgraceful. Soon after midday a vast crowd had assembled in High street, Camden town, where the ex-champion lived, and the maiu road and pavement from the Mother Red Cap, for several hundred yards towards Hampstead, was infested by what looked like an execution mob. The shops were nearly all closed, partly perhaps out of respect to the memory of Sayers, and partly, there can be no question, out of deference to the evidently predatory instincts of the crowd. Jesting, swearing, and rough chaff, wishes that the music would come, jostling and horse-play, were the occupations most in vogue. All the way from High street to the cemetery the same class of people, on foot, in carts, on the roof and inside of overladen cabs, were to be seen steadily making for the hero's grave.

At the cemetery itself the gates were guarded by what seemed a stroug body of policemen, who only admitted people who either "gave the number of their tomb," or otherwise justified their claim to enter. At two P. M. this crowd was easily kept in order, but half an hour later a successful rush was made, and some hundred sturdy vagabonds carried the gates by main force, amid the yells aud shouts of their companions. The police, who behaved splendidly throughout a most trying day, succeeded in reclosing the gates, and in again exercising discrimination as to whom they should admit. As it was, the tombs and crypts were crowded with people who turbulently jostled and laughed, trampled on the grass, and defiled the graves with as little reverence for the place they were in as if it had been an old prize-ring. The succeeding two hours were taken up in watching the hand to-hand contests betweeu the police outside and the rapidly increasing crowd of roughs, in the arrival and admission of tavern celebrities, each admission being the struggle on the part of those who wanted to force their way, and in securing vantage ground from which to see the procession.

Soon after four P. M. the sound of drums and trumpets was heard, and a brass band playing the Dead March; feathers, hearse, and mourning coaches, struggled through the surging, disorderly mob. Sayers's pony and dog-cart, with its magnificent dog, the sole occupant of the latter, followed immediately after the hearse. The police contrived to keep back the attendant mob a few moments, but as soon as the coffin was taken into the cemetery chapel, and before the carriages had filled in, the crowd of thieves and blackguards proved too strong for those opposed to them, and the gates were again stormed. The members of the band, while in the act of playing the Dead March, were scattered pell-mell, their instruments flying over-head, and themselves running for safety Hundreds of the foulest scum of the back courts and alleys of London, the creatures who only come to light in the aggregate at an execution, or racecourse, or an illegal betting ground, rushed in to hold saturnalia at the grave side. All this time the noble brute in the dog-cart looked on with stern composure, as if to prove his superiority to the degraded wretches around him. For a few minutes the police were completely overcome. They were a mere handful of men against the enemy, but they subsequently rallied, and once more succeeded in closing the cemetery gates. Many of the roughs were trodden down in the raid, and after it was over the gasping, speechless forms stretched at no unfrequent intervals on the grass, or reared by their luckier comrades against the tombs while neckcloths were torn open and animation restored, spoke to the severity of the conflict.

Such were the last obsequies of Thomas Sayers, and such the tributes of respect paid by a large section of his admirers—a good-tempered, uneducated man, whose stout heart and unbounded animal courage inspired the respectable classes with such admiration that they subscribed to keep him in idleness for life; who became the idol of pot-houses, and died of drinking, and whose funeral was a riot.—London paper, November 18.

When Lord Alvanley fought a duel with Morgan O'Connell, several shots were exchanged, after which the seconds interfered and stopped the proceedings. "O'Connell must be a very clumsy fellow," said Alvanley, on his way home, "or he never would have missed such a fat fellow as I am. He ought to practice at a haystack to get his hand in." He gave the hackney coachman a sovereign. "It's a great deal for only having taken your lordship to Wimbledon," said the coachman. "My good man," said Alvanley, "I give it you, not for taking me, but for bringing me back."

Soumet's tragedy of Joan of Arc has been produced with much splendor at the principal theatre of Rouen. It is mentioned as a singular coincidence that the last act of the play, representing the execution of the heroine, is performed on exactly the same spot where the event actually occurred. The theatre is built on that part of the public square where the scaffold was erected.

Most of the shadows that cross our pathway in life are caused by standing in our own light.

Social Salamanders.—Considering the amount of annoyance and misery which, in some shape or other, everybody has to go through in his passage through life, it would obviously be a great thing if we could discover the secret of those most remarkable people who seem to pass through the fiery furnace of mortification or disgrace without suffering a pang. The man of ordinary sensibility may endure his troubles, great and small, with fortitude or resignation, but still they affect him in a very perceptible fashion. To have his name and his private affairs dragged before the public, or to be humiliated in society by the bad conduct of his relations, or to fail in his business, fills him with a vexation which he scarcely cares to conceal. But there are plenty of people who appear thoroughly impervious to all feelings of the sort. Like Shadrach and Meshach, they are protected by a mysterious force against the usual effects of the heated furnace. When they come out we can plainly see that on their bodies the fire has no power, nor is a hair of their head singed, nor are their coats changed, nor has the smell of fire passed on them. Instead of courting retirement, they seek as much society as they can get. Instead of covering up their humiliations or misconduct, they treat it all as something quite in the ordinary course of things and ingeniously solace themselves by viewing their own deliberate folly or wickedness as naturally incidental to the common lot of mortal man. The advantages of possessing a temperament of this kind are too plain to need enumeration. Such a disposition is only one instance of the many beneficent provisions for tempering the wind to the shorn lamb.

The young lady, for instance, who finds too late that men betray, and thinks the only art to soothe her melancholy is to bring an action for breach of promise, would, one might suppose, be the most miserable of women but for this exceptional gift of resisting all uncomfortable influences. Most young ladies would endure any amount of horrible suffering in any other way rather than drag the faithless lover and their own lacerated feelings before a judge and jury. But, of course, we all know that there are beings in whose eyes scruples of this sort are only the mark of a very poor creature. They have not the slightest objection in the world to hear a middle-aged counsel read out the once-prized love-letters, amidst the roars of a crowded and convivially-minded court. They can sit by and—for form's sake shedding a sentimental tear or two under a veil—listen with complacency to evidence as to the number of kisses and squeezings of the hand which went on, and to prosaic narratives of the lover-like speeches which the defendant had been such a fool as to make, in the presence of a cloud of witnesses.

Tobacco Smoking.—The following amusing observations on this practice occur in Mr. Matthew's Emigration Fields:

"Sucking tobacco smoke has become so general, and is indulged in to such excess, as must have a powerful effect upon the destinies of the species. In the north and east of Europe it has increased to such a degree as to act as a considerable population-check. The disposition or desire to suck, is no doubt instinctive—a baby reminiscence—and increased in the north of Europe, by the practice of suckling their male children too long. It is pity that this disposition or instinct to suck were not made subservient to some good, and that so much combustion did not extend to the diffusion of heat and light as well as smoke—that it could not be made to warm their cold bosoms to freedom, or enable them to illuminate the 'dark side of nature,' instead of veiling it further by transcendental cloud. Our Eastern neighbors are no doubt indebted to the demon of the 'accursed weed,' set loose by the combustion, for their dreamy philosophy, and their philosophic submission to despotic government. At the present time the weed-demon is the engrossing god of their idolatry. Although tobacco-smoking has not so immediately obvious an effect upon the system as drinking intoxicating liquors, yet from its influence being in more general and constant operation, it has comprehensively, as regards the species, a more powerful impression to disorder the brain mechanism, and derange the flow of the galvanic nervous currents, on which depends the character of our intellectnal essence and organic frame. It is impossible to raise the veil from futurity; but notwithstanding the discovery of printing, instead of a progression to a superior nature, a condition of imbecility and degradation is yet in store for man—nay, even a sinking in the scale of being, unless means are taken to subvert the worship of the weed demon. It is rather surprising that our New Zealand missionaries have allowed themselves to be hoodwinked by the subtle fiend, and made subservient in spreading his abominable rites. In New South Wales, in the case of convict-slavery (the most pitiful condition of all,) where civilized man is subjected to the thrall of his fellow-man, and where the feeling of degradation is embittered by the sting of guilt, tobacco-smoking may be necessary. It is even said that great numbers of the convicts would commit suicide, or take to the bush, if they did not receive tobacco to drown conscience and thought. Tobacco-smoking is a means of soothing misery and repressing energy, by inducing a dreamy stupefaction."

Why is a married man like a candle? Because he sometimes goes out at night when he ought not to.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1866.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENTS.

BY a strict construction of the letter of a law not yet obsolete, Sunday amusements are forbidden in this State. The seventh day of the week is set apart from play as well as from labor; and, of late, this law has in some instances been rigorously enforced. In Sacramento and San Francisco, that meekest of all meek lovers of the good, Manager Maguire, has been enjoined from opening his gates of Sabbath evenings; and even the irrepressible Jack Wilson, whose polysyllabic shows for the past three years have been advertised over every dead wall in town, was at last obliged to yield to circumstances over which he had no control, fold up his tents, and discontentedly steal away to those fertile fields where the kangaroo disporteth himself, and the Sydney duck is found.

As to the right or wrong of the law referred to, we do not at this moment purpose to enter into a discussion. That the prohibition stands as a law upon the statut books is enough for the present. In Scotland whistling on Sunday was once punishable by whipping at a cart's tail, and were our present Legislature to borrow an idea from that canny land of oatmeal and snuff, we should submit without even a sneeze, for it would plainly be the duty of all good citizens to refrain from even a pucker of the mouth. But fair play is popularly said to be a jewel, and we maintain that in this matter of Sunday law justice should be measured out with an even hand to all. If one manager is forbidden to give entertainments on Sunday evenings, why not make the prohibition imperative upon others? Why admit German drama at the American theatre to a representation which is forbidden the American drama at the Opera House? Why allow the Buislays, at Hayes Park, to balloon it over steeples, and kick their heels in aerial derision above the heads of snoring congregations, if less ambitious actors may not strut upon the stage proper before legitimate audiences? And the same with the Willows, where the bear dances, and the moukey, stirred by the canes and umbrellas of curious clodhoppers, twists himself about on his pole, while strong men and tight-ropists vie with each other in a display of spangles and bow legs. And the Siegrist family at the Odeum—why not bring their grist to the same inexorable mill? Turn-Verein Hall, too—the profane sound of the viol is heard there of Sunday evenings, and the feet of dancers, in the execution of various pigeon wings, shuffle away until morning wanes. Why is this allowed?

At the American Theatre, last Sunday evening, the drama of Die Waise aus Lowood was given, followed by Rochester. Neither of these are pious pieces exactly. The advertisement was printed in the plainest of all languages. When Chief Burke arose in the morning and glanced at the notice of the church he is accustomed to attend, he saw by its side a long advertisement in the choicest Dutch, winding up with:

PREISE DER PLAETZE:

Logen	$10 und $5 00
Dreszcirkel und Orchester Sitze	1 Dollar
Parterre	50 cents
Gallerie	25 cents

Sitze koennen Sonnabend und Sontag von 10 bis 9 uhr unentgeltlich reservirt werden.

The Chief, who is a linguist of unapproachable excellence, knows perfectly well what "Dreszcirkel and Orchester sitze" means. He never for a moment supposed that cushioned pews or even sitz baths were referred to. And though the advertisement was cunningly headed the Chief is up to the requirements of his position. We even imagine that when he got down to ☞ Die Direction versichert dem geehrten Publikum, dass alle Anstalten getroffen und keine Kosten gescheut sind, damit diese Vorstellung sicher und brilliant am besagten Tage ueber die Buehne gehe, sowie ueberhaupt jedes angekuendigte Stueck nur einmal gegeben wird, he construed it all into English without once having recourse to his Ollendorff. He could hardly have translated "sind" into the confession peccavi, and we question if in the subsequent "damit" he fancied he detected anything appertaining to the service of the Dutch Reformed Church. It was clearly his duty to have mounted his pony and looked in at the performance that evening, even if it rained. A profane brass band might as well be playing "Pop goes the Weasel" as "In Louterbach hab ich mein Strumpf verloren," and by a parity of reasoning the "legitimate company" at the Opera House might as well be playing Jane Eyre as the other company Die waise aus Lowood at the American—for it is the same thing in Dutch. Give all their rights, good gentlemen of the badges and benches. If Jonathan cannot have his cakes and ale, why should Gambrinus have his pretzels und lager? Treat us all alike, please.

GROSZES SACRED ABEND—UNTERHALTUNG, AND SACRED CONCERT,

THE LOVE-LIFE OF DR. KANE.

IT is little wonder that the book before us, bearing the title which appears as the head of this article, should begin with an apology and end with an excuse. The only marvel is that, given a woman indelicate enough to expose the weaknesses of a great heart which trusted her, a publisher could be found mercenary enough to blazon them to the world.

The picture revealed is a curious but perhaps not an uncommon one. It is that of a strong intellect struggling in the meshes of the most mysterious of all passions, conscious of the disgracefulness of his bondage, aware of the inferiority of the object of his love, but unable to escape. Madly in love—if we may apply to a foolish infatuation so holy a term—seeking in vain to inspire a corresponding sentiment in a heart too shallow to comprehend and understand him—behold the man who pushed the prows of his adventurous vessels through the ice of the far northern seas—behold him caught like a rat in a trap. He who wrestled victoriously with the Polar Bear fell a victim to the back-hair, which we may call the brush, of a Fox.

The story is briefly told. Visiting Miss Margaret Fox—then in the first blush of table-tipping fame—the Doctor, upon whose heart the masked batteries of Philadelphian belles and the swivel eyes of Esquimaux beauties had played under the most favorable circumstances for assault without making any permanent impression, surrendered without discretion. There were notes, bouquets and bon-bons. Miss Fox—a very practical girl—made little response, and, while her illustrious admirer was enwrapped, industriously went on with her rappings. Not understanding what a great man was at her feet, she did not feel particularly flattered, and evinced no especial emotion over her conquest. It was more satisfaction to her to move a table half an inch than to stir Dr. Kane down to the depths of his being. Had she responded in kind it would probably all have ended very soon. But her strange coolness puzzled the Arctic explorer; he was familiar with icebergs, but this was a new experience. He could not understand how this girl was not overwhelmed with pride at finding that she had attracted the attention of one whom the great intellects of the day delighted to honor, whom the fairest hands of the city crowned with laurel wreaths and an admiration very much akin to love, attributing the phenomenon to the fact of her superiority to others. The simple truth was that she was not great enough to understand his greatness. A trip to the Arctic seas did not represent to her imagination much more than the trip of an agile table across the dining room, or at most an excursion on the Camden and Amboy railroad. Surprised and decidedly annoyed at this want of appreciation, the Doctor "set out" to make her understand him—it was his ambition to be the Polar star, so to speak, of her existence; and still he pressed his suit, writing very foolish letters. Thus: "For even if the drear old Polar winter should make me a perpetual exile, the memory of a dead affection would be better than a recollected coolness." To which Margaret replies: "Now, Doctor—be candid!—am I not correct when I say you are an enigma past finding out?" All through we have Thackeray's matter-of fact version of the story of Werther. And had the Doctor died of her more than Artic frigidity, it is quite probable that after the body had been brought into the parlor where she gave her séances and laid upon the centre table,

> Margaret having viewed the body
> Lying there all wrapped in sable,
> Would at once have formed a circle,
> And have tried to tip the table.

We see nothing in Margaret to excite our sympathy, for it was only on discovering what a prize chance had stranded at her feet that she began to call him "Ly" and "Lish," and other pet names.

"Poor, simple Child!" cries the biographer, whenever her name is mentioned and a favorable opportunity for an exclamation point occurs. Yes, verily, playing upon the credulity of the multitude, knowing her own unworthiness, and suspecting the great simple heart so unfortunately entangled of attempting to trifle with her in like manner, cracking her toes and knee-pans, and persuading her dupes that the disembodied spirits of their friends were knocking at their hearts—how our sympathy is evoked and nourished—how it gushes in behalf of this dear Simple Child.

Finally, after Dr. Kane's return from his last Arctic voyage, after a world of sentiment and tears, we have the "marriage." It was a very primitive affair, no clergyman spoke a blessing, no magistrate registered the vows and the names. The Doctor and Maggie were alone in a parlor. "At this moment," says the admiring historian, "Miss Katharine Fox came into the room. Dr. Kane desired her to call her mother, who came up stairs to the parlor; the servant and a young lady who was spending the evening there, being also present. Dr. Kane informed them he had sent for them to witness the solemn declaration that would follow. Then, standing up, and holding Margaret's hand while his left arm encircled her form, he said: 'Maggie is my wife, and I am her husband. Wherever we are, she is mine, and I am hers. Do you understand and consent to this, Maggie?' Margaret answered that she did."

In manner somewhat like—barring the presence of family witnesses—our first parents were married in the Garden of Eden. It is supposable that the boa-constrictor viewed the affair from a neighboring tree, and that the squirrel, cocking his tail over his back as he cracked an unusually hard nut, looked down and smiled upon the nuptials. We question, however, whether such a solemnization of the marriage ceremony would satisfy the scruples of a young lady not accustomed to view things from a spiritual stand-point, or receive the endorsement of any mother or sister—not particularly anxious to close what seemed a most desirable family bargain. The old custom of jumping over a broomstick might at least have been honored, and the formula of

> "If you loves me as I loves you,
> No knife can cut our loves in two,"

gone through with. But, if the maternal fox was satified, who had a right to complain? Having now achieved the dearest object of his life, the Doctor sailed for Havana. For his health was broken—as well it might be, between the Arctic Seas and "Maggie." Soon the news of his death was received. Now we have a picture of the disconsolate "widow." She felt convinced that "Ly" or "Lish" had left some "message" for her, and "as soon as she was able to hold a pen, she wrote to one of his brothers" about it. It is strange she did not call her flexile knee-pans to her aid and place herself en rap-port with the departed, but no mention is made of any singular commotion occurring among the tables and chairs, and now, as a corollary of all, we have this book.

Some excuse for its publication may be found in a woman's desire to show the passion which she stirred in the depths of the Great Explorer's heart—though, by so doing, she stamp upon her own brow her unworthiness in betraying secrets which should only be recorded before Heaven. But, for Carleton, the publisher, there is no excuse. For a few dollars he has consented to become instrumental in casting a blot upon a great man's memory, and linking his name with a folly of the heart which will dim its lustre in the eyes of those who know not how to make allowances for the mysterious workings of human passion, or to separate the memory of this one weakness from the record of his many heroisms. Miss Fox, in this attempt to write her wrongs, can fairly claim precedence of Miss Harris, for, though the latter shining illustration of a latter-day interpretation of woman's rights shot down her lover, it is at least to be recorded to her credit that she did not publish, with comments, the love-letters which he may have addressed to her.

A BALLOONING REMINISCENCE.

THE unintentional excursion which a balloonist made on Sunday last, landing in an element where a small boat is infinitely preferable to the largest balloon, has been told at length in the columns of our contemporaries. It is only fair to add that it has been told in most instances with all that fervor of imagination and poetic grace of diction which embellish the narrative of the wanderings of Ulysses. Consequently it is only necessary for us to chronicle the fact that one of the Buislays in making an ascension from Hayes Park last Sunday, was borne by his balloon into the bay, and only escaped drowning by the intervention of Providence in the guise of an Italian fisherman, who wore a red cap and smelt strongly of maccaroni and Parmesan cheese. After being rescued from the water, both Buislay and the balloon were hung up to dry—and this is the end of our Odyssey—or, coining a word, may we call it Buislyssey? But the adventure recalls a memory to one of our oldest inhabitants of a somewhat similar flyaway which occurred some years since—and this is the substance of the story:

Some ten years ago, come Michaelmas (we like the old familiar style of story telling,) a balloon ascension was announced to come off at Oakland. We regret to say that Sunday was set for the exhibition, but the Oaklanders were the quite as heathen as the San Franciscans now. The balloon was not of sufficient size to carry an adult, and no actual ascension was contemplated. To appease the clamors of the crowd however, a volunteer newsboy was seated astride of a six inch board suspended from the balloon in place of a car, and allowed to ascend a few feet—sufficiently to clear his legs of the ground—the balloon being held down from any further demonstration by a rope tied to a post in the ground. [illegible] denly, in some mysterious way—probably by a mischievous knife in the crowd—the rope was ent, and away sailed the newsboy to the clouds—not crying "'Ere's your this week's CALIFORNIAN!" for those semi-barbarous times did not enjoy the blessing which has been reserved for the ripe civilization of a later day. All supposed that the little fellow would for the future cry his news in some Oakland beyond the moon, for he seemed bound to certain death. The afternoon wind was fresh, and in a few minutes both balloon and boy, stereoscoped in the distance, looked a mere speck in the air. The crowd became excited, and the "Prolessor"—there were professors upon the earth even in those days—getting frightened at the turn things were taking, mounted a horse and rode away after the balloon which, when last seen, was heading for the Contra Costa mountains. Not having a hippogriff at hand, however, and the balloon being out of sight, it was shrewdly reckoned that he would not overtake it. In betting parlance, the odds were on the balloon against the field. Sunday night wore away, and Monday came, but no tidings of the missing boy beyond the fact that a ranchero, on Sunday afternoon, while crossing the mountains, saw something soaring over the mountain top, to the west of San Pablo, which he thought to be a cross between the foul fieud and a lowl of the air. Rushing to a priest he told his vision, and thus it became known that he had seen the balloon. The boy was, of course, given up for lost, and his fate was sagely canvassed by the press and the people. A few hours in the cold air, said they, and he will be numbed into insensibility; a single sway of the balloon, and he will fall from his frail seat, to be dashed to pieces among the lonely mountains, even the locality of his death probably remaining forever a mystery. But our little hero knew a trick worth two of that of falling, and though, according to the best and shrewdest of all human calculations, he should have fallen, he didn't. On the contrary, after getting a mile or two up in the air, and well over the mountains, he thought he had reached a sufficient eminence in the world, and gone about far enough: the next question was how to get down. In order to let oneself down gracefully it is sometimes necessary to take an additional step up. By the aid of the netting, he climbed until he reached the body of the monster that was bearing him away to destruction, and then and there, with a small pocket-knife, he gave his enemy such a sore thrust (see the combat between Christian and Apollyon in the Pilgrim's Progress) that the monster "weakened" and sank as one fainting towards the earth. A landing—or perhaps to be strictly correct one should say a treeing—was effected some twenty miles northwest of Benicia. Our hero found himself hanging by the seat of the pantaloons from the limb of a tree, and the balloon, released of its burden, darted away and was seen no more. There were no regrets exchanged on either side, both being glad to part company. The boy found shelter in a farmhouse that night, and was brought to Benicia next morning in the farmer's wagon. There he found the "Professor," who had been investing the proceeds of the exhibition in telescopes without being much the wiser as to the progress of affairs until the arrival of the farmer's wagon. Glad to find the boy, though rather inclined to blame him for the loss of his balloon, the professor took him in charge and brought him down to this city by the Sacramento boat of Monday night. And this is the end of the story of the boy and the balloon. Does it not remind the reader of the adventure of Sinbad the sailor with the Roc?

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ELECTION.—But two days more and the exciting contest for officers of the Mercantile Library Association will come off. As usual there are two tickets in the field, and in this instance the Opposition possesses decided elements of strength. It is headed by W. H. L. Barnes, who is renowned on the stump—we beg his pardon, the forum. R. B. Swain as Vice President, has a Mint of money to back him, besides an Insurance company. H. S. Homans being also in the insurance business, ought to do correspondingly well as Corresponding Secretary. R. P. Lewis being already "Secretary of the Board of Kearny street Commissioners," should be excellently well qualified to act as Recording Secretary. And who could be better for Treasurer than W. C. Ralston with the Bank of California, and no one knows how many other moneyed institutions at his heels. It is perfectly safe to put him down as a "responsible man." The trustees, too numerous to mention but all told by name in another column, are trustworthy men. We are the more inclined to believe the Opposition ticket a good one from the fact that Col. Harney says that they are all good men—and the Colonel knows. The Regular ticket is also a good one. probably, but not having been furnished with a copy, it is impossible to review the members in detail.

A BOSTON correspondent writes that Ticknor & Fields are about to commence the publication of a weekly paper of a character new to America, if not to the world. Its name will be Every Saturday, and Thomas Bailey Aldrich is to be the editor. It will be made up entirely of extracts from the English periodicals—somewhat after the fashion of Littell's Living Age, but of a lighter and more popular character.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE dramatic event of the week was Mr. Setchell's personation of "Sir John Falstaff" in The Merry Wives of Windsor, produced at Maguire's Opera House on Tuesday evening. There are few characters in the whole range of comedy more difficult to play to the satisfaction of a critical audience than the one of this same fat knight, and there are very few actors who have made reputations in it. It is maintained on some sides that "Falstaff" must be played as a gentleman, because he was the associate of Prince Hal and familiar with the Court; but it is indisputable from the text that he was a roysterer, a lecher and a liar, and do we not hear him acknowledge receiving his share of the proceeds of a stolen fan-handle?—fifteen pence! "Shakspeare's humor" is not of the kind that delights the masses. In the preface to the old acting edition of The Merry Wives, special stress is laid upon the rare humor of "Slender's" question; "Be there bears in the town?" but we never remember to have seen it get a smile, however well it was spoken. Briefly it may be said that the "Falstaff" which pleases one critic—and critics are but auditors after all—will very likely arouse the indignation of another, and cause him to leave the house. One will call it "over-done." Were it played to suit his taste another would call it "half-baked." Where so many differences of opinion exist, it is perhaps the better way for an actor to attempt to please no particular critic, but to study the character carefully, render his own conception of it, and trust to the general effect upon his audiences. "Ambition" may in some instances be "a grievous fault," but we do not esteem it so in an actor, and the young comedian who has already made an undoubted success in a line of characters peculiarly his own, deserves credit for his boldness in attempting a new and difficult role, inasmuch as he not only challenges criticism, but also invites comparison between the character he attempts and those in which his excellence is acknowledged. After this prelude, we may say that Mr. Setchell's personation of Falstaff was a decided success—the more so when it is taken into account that it was almost his first essay. There is more in an actor's "getting the hang" of a character than there was in the excuse of the boy who was reprimanded for a falling-off in spelling, that he "could n't get the hang of the new school-house." The mollnck and its shell grow together, with mutual adaptation. One excellence of Mr. Setchell's Falstaff is a certain gentlemanliness which was preserved throughout; coarseness and vulgarity were not made to stand forth in the knight's character with a prominence only equalled by the protruberance of his belly. There was a merry twinkle in the fat knight's eye, and a genuine humor underlying the set words of his speech, as given by Mr. Setchell, entirely wanting in Hackett's representation, which is essentially hard and mechanical—the result of forty years' study. It may also be said in Mr. Setchell's favor that the low comedy element obtruded itself very rarely, and that his make-up was capital. The chief faults were the occasional croppings out of Captain Cuttle's voice, and an attempt at times to express too much by the face when the text was in itself sufficiently effective. As a corollary to all this, we venture the prediction that, if Mr. Setchell studies the character as written by the Master, and is patient with it, he will yet make one of the best Falstaffs of the modern stage. The piece was well put upon the stage, and in the main the other characters were well maintained. Mr. Thompson's "Doctor Caius" was a very good piece of acting—the chief fault being that it was a trifle too prononcée. Mr. Pauncefort's "Ford" had scarcely sufficient relief, not lightening up sufficiently when all his jealous doubts were removed. Barry as "Slender" was tolerable; Franks as "Page" was fair; Leman, Woodhull, Mmes. Saunders, Edwin, and Gass were good. But we cannot leave "Falstaff" without wondering what the Bulletin means in asking, after giving Mr. Setchell's personation great praise, "But why could he not content himself with the text without lugging in stupid witticisms, which were as un-Shakspearian as they were pointless?" If Shakspeare's "witticisms" are indeed "pointless," we advise Mr. Setchell to cut them all out and introduce some of his own—which always make people laugh. But "gagging" Shakspeare is not commonly sanctioned, and the actor who attempted the innovation would make up his mind in the beginning to be pelted from the stage. Nor do we know that any manager has yet ventured to produce any one of Shakspeare's plays with a local adaptation. It would indeed be a brilliant idea for "Hamlet" in his soliloquy to allude to the current politics of the day, or for "Macbeth" to introduce the name of some popular restaurant in connection with the witches' broth—telling them where they could get a better. But our word for it, "Falstaff's" lines were spoken on Tuesday evening according to the text, without any interpolation, and we trust that the Bulletin critic, if he doubt this statement, will overhaul his Shakspeare and when found, make a note of it—as "Captain Cuttle" might say. In justice to an actor it should not make so serious a charge without substantiating it by facts.

Dombey and Son was given at the Opera House on Thursday evening, to a very full dress circle and a good parquette and gallery, notwithstanding the unpropitious weather. The audience was responsive as well as large, and we question whether Mr. Setchell ever before played "Captain Cuttle" so well. It was a perfect carnival of humor, the mirth of the audience only receiving a check when "Little Wally's" loss in "the deep blue sea" was announced, and then, yielding to the pathos with which the barnacle-faced old tar mourned the untimely end of his favorite, the transition was to tears. The "Captain Cuttle" of last Thursday evening is something for Mr. Setchell to date from. As the precise and formal "Dombey," Mr. Leman was excellent. Mr. Thompson's "Major Bagstock" was good, but the make-up lacked portliness, and, as a whole, the rendition of the character was not what we expected when we saw that he was cast for it. As "Toots," Mr. Pauncefort neither looked the character nor acted it. The simple, bashful, awkward young man is not at all in his line. Franks evidently has not much idea of the "Carker" of the story, who was always smiling and showing his white teeth. And strangely enough, Mrs. Saunders—one of the best actresses upon the coast—seems to have an entire misconception of "Mrs. Skewton." She plays the part as a toddling, stooping old woman, with no affectation of youth or beauty, but the Mrs. Skewton with whom all readers of Dickens are familiar, was a finiky lady, standing as straight as stays could clamp her, and possessed of a profusion of fair curls, which she was always shaking in a girlish way. The interpretation given to the character by Mrs. Saunders would be less objectionable, if it did not interfere materially with the development of the story. It is upon "Mrs. Skewton's" assumed girlishness that many of the laughable situations turn. When Dombey, on being told that there is an excellent match for him, asks, "Which, the mother or the daughter?" he is seriously in earnest, he does not mean a joke, for Dombey is not a humorist. And in the scene with "Toots," the effect is very much impaired by the old woman that is made up. Mrs. Hughes, with her flaxen curls, rouged cheeks, pencilled eyebrows, and corsetted bust, contributed greatly to the success of the piece in Chambers street. We wonder the more at Mrs. Saunders in this instance, because she is generally so correct as to have become almost a standard in matters of dress and acting. Woodhull looked the young sailor lad, but eccentric business is his best line. As a burlesque actor he has very few equals on this coast. Barry's "Jack Bunsby," we apprehend, will not become a model to the profession. As "Edith," Mrs. Edwin had an excellent opportunity to launch the invective of wronged womanhood, a point in which she particularly excels. Miss Gass' "Susan Nipper" won great applause—especially when she was pounding "the Grinder."

The Hibernicon has rotated to the admiration of very good audiences during the week, Mr. Warwick the while chanting forth his descriptive lays, the picturesquely costumed troupe striking their sweet bells harmoniously in tune during the interludes. The entertainment has further been varied and enlivened by instrumentation upon the harp, swept by the blithesome fairy fingers of Madame Blaisdell. And Madamoiselle Clara, we are rejoiced to see, has increased her vocal repertoire. So, "By St. George! the work goes bravely on!" There is no performance this afternoon or evening, the Academy being given over to the masquerading of the Alemannians. Next week is the last of the Hibernicon, and consequently all who wish to save themselves a veritable trip to Ireland should see it.

The announcements at the Opera House are April Fool and Toodles for the matinée—Setchell in both pieces—and The Merry Wives of Windsor in the evening. Mr. Setchell's engagement has been extended through the coming week, and on Friday evening, January 19th, he will be the recipient of a farewell benefit. At the Metropolitan the Buislays are playing good gymnastics and poor pantomimes to very indifferent houses. There is an operatic on dit, that Morelli, the baritone who recently went East, will soon return with a troupe to bring out L'Africaine. Brambilli's season at the American having come to a very sudden close—there is rumor that the troupe will open at the Academy of Music on Monday week—it is reported that Vestvali will open it on Monday evening with Neighbor Jockwood—our old favorite, Mrs. Judah, the new favorite Mrs. Sedley Brown, the ever sprightly and popular Alicia Mandeville Thorne, and that good actor and gentleman, Stephen Leach, forming prominent members of the company. In Sacramento Emily Thorne still continues the reigning favorite. Harry Jackson has not made what may be called a hit; Mrs. Jackson is praised and Charley Thorne scored by the Union—the two latter verdicts we imagine must have become transposed in the printer's hands. And this closes our amusement budget of the week.

NEW MUSIC.—We are indebted to M. Gray, music dealer, for a copy of "Five O'clock in the Morning," a ballad, recently published by him. "By Claribel" is the only clue we have to the authorship. The rhythm is perfect, the words rippling along as simply and pleasingly as a brooklet. The words are pleasant and simple, and the air which accompanies them is charmingly in keeping.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 5, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House ,8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Monntain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railrond and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 32, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

☞ AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impurities, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect ROBUST HEALTH. The preparation is called "ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER," and is for sale at wholesale at the

UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco,
AND BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
ja6 1m

THE MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3,500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - -	6,500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14 3m

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

POSTPONEMENT.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON SATURDAY, - - - - JANUARY 13, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

se23-16 tf JOHN BENSLEY, President pro tem.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING

Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 100 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION

CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!

W. D. FARRAND.

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

☞ No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN,

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO

PIANO SCHOOL,

ON THE EUROPEAN PLAN,

At the South Park Institute.

MISS FLORENCE JAMES, PRINCIPAL.

IN CONNECTION with this popular and excellent Young Ladies' Seminary there will open, about January 31, 1866, a Piano School, on the European Plan—for first beginners as well as for advanced players. The great advantage on this plan will be a reduction of about one-half the usual price, and a thorough training, both theoretical and practical. The Musical Department will be under the directorship of Mr. GUSTAVE A. SCOTT, Organist of Cavalry Church, whose long experience in Teaching, both in private and in classes, will secure to pupils a rapid advancement in the study of Music.

The Music Rooms are comfortable and convenient, and the Pianos used from the best manufacturers.

For particulars, call at the Institute, Nos. 55 and 56 South Park. de30 1m

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optioonl.

OVERSTOCKED!

AND MUST SELL

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steam ships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

sc23-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,

dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,

Market-street, San José.

A FIRST CLASS HOTEL

In every respect where the personal supervision of the proprietor guarantees prompt and civil attention to all the requirements of his guests.

Stages on all the Routes Leading out of San Jose

Take their departure from the "Continental." House open all night.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, Proprietor.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO

No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.

In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.)

First and Highest Premium

TO THE

FLORENCE

STATE FAIR, OREGON.

In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilxcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.

First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,

AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,

111 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

no4 10t

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD,

AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets,

San Francisco.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & C

my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use

For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents.

e10-6 Corner of Pine and Sansome street.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,

my6 3m Proprietor.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. H. WARD & SON,

NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca

je30-3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent

au19-3m

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S

STEAM

PRINTING HOUSE,

533

CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store.

At No. 133 Montgomery street,

OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

I do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1886. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTABLISHMENT at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

THE NEW WARM SWIMMING BATH,

THIRD STREET, OPPOSITE SOUTH PARK,

IS NOW OPEN!

ja6-1m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

sc30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery; Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,

oc29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

[For the Californian.]

THE RELIGION OF FLOWERS.

THE study of Nature is beginning to be more appreciated than formerly, and the Naturalist is no longer taunted with Cui bono? because the spread of general information has more extended itself into these subjects.

Ignorance and indifference are intimately blended together. Before a person has some knowledge of the wonders of Nature, he has no taste for the study; but, as soon as he philosophically inquires into these subjects, he begins to attain a correct sense of this noble and elevating study. By the light of science everything gradually changes its appearance, and Nature seems to inspire his heart with new feelings. The simplest flower, which he before viewed with indifference, as merely the covering of a clod, he now finds to be a world of wonders, wherein he can find employment for his reasoning faculties of a more valuable and refined nature than on the most sublime productions of art. It is a study which, more than any other, serves to raise his conceptions of the wisdom, power and goodness of that Great Being who is the author of Nature. Who, unmoved, can look upon the beauty and grandeur of Nature, when > —— "Lo! the morn,

> In clouds of crimson radiance borne,
> Hath risen from the couch of night,
> And fills the air with fresh delight,
> While hues—like harmonies, that range
> The world of sound with heavenly change—
> In varied lustre o'er the sky,
> Awaken, mingle, melt, and die,
> Till, full orb'd, on his flaming throne,
> The sun-king is beheld alone;
> And blue as Baltic waves sleep,
> Before him lies a dazzling sweep
> Of azure in its deep excess,
> Of morn-created loveliness." [Montgomery.

Whether we view Nature as one harmonious whole or examine her minutest parts; whether we mount the observatory with the astronomer, and view the starry heavens; descend into the mines, caverns and deepest recesses of the earth with the geologist, and investigate its crust, and observe the nature of its strata; the laboratory of the chemist, and examine its constituent parts; the menagerie with the zoologist, and study animated nature; or whether we penetrate into the shades of the forest, scale the mountain tops, or perambulate the fields with the botanist, we find evidence of the same truth at every step, that "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

In the Flora Domestica there is a beautiful quotation from Cowley, in proof that the Emperor Dioclesian preferred his garden to a throne:

> "Methinks I see great Dioclesian walk
> In the Salonian garden's noble shade,
> Which by his own imperial hands was made.
> I see him smile, methinks, as he does talk
> With the ambassadors, who come in vain
> T' entice him to a throne again.
> 'If I, my friends,' said he, 'should to you show
> All the delights which in these gardens grow,
> 'Tis likelier far that you with me would stay,
> Than 'tis that you should carry me away;
> And trust me not, my friends, if every day
> I walk not here with more delight
> Than ever, after the most happy fight,
> In triumph to the capital I rode,
> To thank the gods and to be thought myself almost a god.'"

The monks, or the observers of monkish rules, have compiled a catalogue of flowers for each day in the year, and dedicated each flower to a particular saint on account of its flowering about the time of the Saint's festival. The following are a list from the first of the present month:

1st. St. Faine, Laurustine, (Virburnum Tinus.)
2d. St. Macarius, Groundsel, (Senecio Vulgaris.)
3d. St. Genevieve, Fleur-de lis, (Iris Persica.)
4th. St. Titus, Hazel, (Corylus Avellana)
5th. St. Simeon Styllites, Bearsfoot, (Helleborus Fœtidus.)
6th. St. Nilammon, Screw Moss, (Tortula Rigida.)
7th. St. Kentingern, Portugal Laurel, (Prunus Lusitanicus.)
8th. St. Marciana, Yellow Tremella, (Tremella Deliquescence.)
9th. St. Gudula, Common Laurel, (Prunus Laurocerasus.)
10th. St. William, Gorse, (Ulex Europeaus.)
11th. St. Theodosius, Early Moss, (Brynum Horeum.)
12th. St. Arcadius, Hygrometric Moss, (Funaria Hygrometica.)
13th. St. Veronica, Yewtree, (Taxus Baccata.)

The psychological influences of plants and flowers are continually figured forth in writings sacred and profane; the earliest poetry, as the latest song, bears evidence of the effects produced by them on the human mind. By the Greek, every tree was invested with a divinity—a spirit held possession of every grove, thus giving poetical expression to their dim consciousness of that vitality which a modern philosophy—with somewhat too much haste—refers to certain physical forces or powers.

Again in the wilder mythologies of the Scandinavian races, the creation of more northern and less luxuriant climes, we have a similar expression of the human dream, in the sylph which nestled amid the petals of the rose, or our own fairy, sporting in the shadows of the lovely fern. In Italy we shall find lilies and violets, the narcissus, and flowers of the sweet-smelling anise, with cassia, and other fragrant herbs, the soft hyacinth and the saffron marigold, with their legend and language. And in Spain we may > —— "Rest awhile in the bower,

> O'er which the white-leaved orange flower
> Breathes its ambrosial sweets." [Melendez.

What a wide field for the imagination is displayed in the succeeding quotation from Coleridge. We might fancy ourselves luxuriating in a garden of roses where "every flower that blows" would add to our felicity, when the most agreeable and delightful companions were assembled to pass the hours in heedless pleasure:

> "Shall I sing of happy hours
> Numbered by opening and closing flowers?
> Of smiles and sighs that give no pain,
> And seem as they were heard in vain."
>
> IRIS.

CAUGHT AT LAST.

LADY CATHCART was one of the four daughters of Mr. Malyn, of Southwark and Battersea, in Surrey. She married four times, but never had any issue. Her first husband was James Fleet, Esq., of the city of London, lord of the manor of Tewing; her second, Captain Sabine, younger brother of General Joseph Sabine, of Quino Hall; her third, Charles, eighth Lord Cathcart, of Scotland, commander-in-chief of the forces in the West Indies; and her fourth, Hugh Maguire, an officer in the Hungarian service, for whom she bought a lieutenant colonel's commission in the British army, and whom she also survived. She was not encouraged, however, by his treatment, to verify the resolution which she inscribed as a posy on her wedding-ring:

> "If I survive
> I will have five."

Her avowed motives for these several engagements were, for the first, obedience to her parents; for the second, money: for the third, title; and for the fourth, submission to the fact that "the devil owed her a grudge, and would punish her for her sins."

In the last union she met with her match. The Hibernian fortune-hunter only wanted her money. Soon after their marriage she discovered her grievous mistake, and became alarmed lest the colonel, who was desperately in love, not with the widow, but the "widow's jointured land," designed to carry her off, and to get absolute power over all her property; to prepare for the worst, her ladyship plaited some of her jewels in her hair, and quilted others in her petticoat. Meanwhile the mistress of the colonel so far insinuated herself into his wife's confidence that she learned where her will was deposited; and Macguire getting sight of it insisted on an alteration in his favor, under a threat of instant death. Lady Cathcart's apprehensions of the loss of her personal freedom proved to be not without foundation.

One morning, when she and her husband went out from Tewing to take an airing, she proposed, after a time, to return, but he desired to go a little further.

The coachman drove on; she remonstrated, "they should not be back by dinner-time."

"Be not the least uneasy on that account," rejoined Macguire; "we do not dine to-day at Tewing, but at Chester, whither we are journeying."

Vain were all the lady's efforts and expostulations. Her sudden disappearance excited the alarm of her friends, and an attorney was sent in pursuit, with a writ of habeas corpus, or ne exeat regno. He overtook the travelers at an inn at Chester, and upon obtaining an interview with the husband, demanded a sight of Lady Cathcart.

The colonel, skilled in expedients, and aware that his wife's person was unknown, assured the attorney that he should see her ladyship immediately, and that he would find she was going to Ireland with her own free consent. Thereupon Macguire persuaded a woman, whom he had properly tutored, to personate his wife.

The attorney asked the supposed captive if she accompanied Colonel Macguire to Ireland of her own free will.

"Perfectly so," said the woman.

Astonished at such an answer, he begged pardon, made a low bow, and set out again for London

Macguire thought that possibly Mr. Attorney might recover his senses, find how he had been deceived, and yet stop his progress: and in order to make all safe, he sent two or three fellows after him, with directions to plunder him of all he had, particularly of his papers.

They faithfully executed their commission, and when the colonel had the writ in his possession he knew that he was safe.

He then took my lady over to Ireland, and kept her there a prisoner, locked up in his own house at Tempo, Fermanagh, for many years, during which period he was visited by the neighboring gentry, and it was his regular custom at dinner to send his compliments to Lady Cathcart, informing her that the company had the honor to drink her ladyship's health, and begging to know whether there was anything at the table that she would like to eat?

The answer was always—"Lady Cathcart's compliments, and she has everything she wants."

An instance of honesty in a poor Irishwoman deserves to be recorded.

"Lady Cathcart had some remarkably fine diamonds, which she had concealed from her husband, and which she was anxious to get out of the house lest he should discover them. She had neither servant nor friend to whom she could trust them, but she had observed a beggar who used to come to the house; she spoke to her from the window of the room in which she was confined; the woman promised to do what she desired, and Lady Cathcart threw a parcel containing the jewels to her.

The poor woman carried them to the person to whom they were directed, and several years afterward, when Lady Cathcart recovered her liberty, she received her diamonds safely.

At Colonel Macguire's death, which occurred in 1764, her ladyship was released. When she was first informed of the fact she imagined that the news could not be true, and that it was told only with the intention of deceiving her.

At the time of her deliverance she had scarcely clothes sufficient to cover her; she wore a red wig, looked scared, and her understanding seemed stupefied; she said that she scarcely knew one creature from another; her imprisonment had lasted nearly twenty years.

The moment she regained her freedom she hastened to England, to her house at Tewing, but the tenant, a Mr. Joseph Steele, refusing to render up possession, Lady Cathcart had to bring an action of ejectment, attended the assizes in person, and gained her cause.

At Tewing she continued to reside for the remainder of her life.

The only subsequent notice we find of her is, that, at the age of eighty, she took part in the gaieties of the Welwyn Assembly, and danced with the spirit of a girl.

She did not die until 1789, when she was in her ninety-eighth year.

In the mansion-house of Tempo, now the property of Sir John Emerson Tennent, the room is still shown in which Lady Cathcart was imprisoned.

THE MERCANTILE GAZETTE.—The proprietors of the Mercantile Gazette and Prices Current, furnish a most valuable paper in their issue of Jan. 9th, 1866—being the first number of the fifteenth volume. A supplement is added, making six large pages brimming with statistical information and summaries of the business of the port during the year. No branch of business is unattended to, and the attention even of the desultory reader will be attracted by an exhaustive article entitled "The Viniculture of California, its Progress and Prospects." We venture to say that a more valuable number of a commercial journal than the one to which we refer was never published upon this coast, and we had almost ventured upon a wider sweep for compliment. The Gazette is ably edited by H. C. Beals and T. F. Cronise.

THANKSGIVING SERMON.—We are indebted to the Rev. Henry Martyn Scudder for a copy of his sermon delivered in the Howard Presbyterian Church, of which he is pastor, on Thanksgiving Day. It is good and strong, bold and logical, and touches current questions and vital issues. We like it none the worse for its dealing with the politics of the day. There be those who deem that politics are out of place in the pulpit, but we think otherwise. The pulpit is the prow of the world, and should lead in politics as well as in things that pertain only to the spiritual kingdom. We rather admire Towne & Bacon's strategy, for they print the book—and the name of at least one of the firm appears in the call upon the Reverend Doctor for a publication of his sermon. But who shall blame men for always having an eye to business?

MRS. LINCOLN has ordered in Zwickau, Germany, a monument for the grave of her husband, the lamented President. It is cut out of serpentine stone, of an obscure green color, in the form of a large die, and bears the simple inscription, "Abraham Lincoln." In the middle of October it was to be forwarded by rail to Bremen, where it will be shipped to our country. The quarries of Zwickau are celebrated for their stones.

IF your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

NEVER DESPOND.—A trial of Newell's Pulmonary Syrup will convince the most sceptical that it is unequalled by any known preparation, as a remedy for Asthma, Bronchitis, Colds, Coughs, Croup, Pain in the Chest, Spitting of Blood, and other affections of the chest, which, if left to run their course, end in consumption. Use this valuable remedy, and be relieved.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco.

Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality.

They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland.

Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldtmah & Co., 207 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for best the card pictures, and large photographs.

TO POOR WRITERS.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent pensman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babbittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use.

J. C. PELTON,
Superintendent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.

JOHN SWETT, Supt. Pub. Instruction.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—MRS. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and militar at the shortest notice: also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

THE RUSS HOUSE BOWLING SALOON, corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, has reopened under the management of Ferdinand Shrader. There are Eight Alleys—six for Americans and two for Germans. The finest Wines and Liquors can be had at the bar. All lovers of the health-invigorating game of ten pins are invited to pay a visit to the saloon.—Dramatic Chronicle.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds, purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known, then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing amyl or fusel oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, antibilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS,
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.
401 Battery cor. Clay,
ja25-tf San Francisco.

RAVEN GOLD AND SILVER MINING COMPANY,
Reese River Mining District, State of Nevada.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in accordance with the laws of the State of California, and in pursuance of an order of the Board of Trustees of the above-named company, there will be sold at public auction at the office of the Secretary of said company, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, on Saturday, the 17th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, so many shares of the capital stock of said company standing in the names of the following parties as may be necessary to pay the assessments thereon levied on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1863, and on the 14th day of March, A. D. 1864, now due and unpaid, together with costs of advertisements and sale, unless previously paid, as follows:

	Certificate.	Shares.	Bal. due.
A. P. Cox,	1 to 7 inclusive,	150	$75
N. H. Cooper,	15, 16, 18,	34	17
B. Chamberlin,	19, 20, 22, 24, 29,	84	42
H. P. Perry,	30 to 35 inclusive,	93	93
J. N. N. Williams,	40,	10	5

GEORGE B. MERRILL, Secretary.
Office, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
ja13 4w

WE ARE NOT GIVING AWAY!

AT 506 MARKET STREET,

Extending Through to No. 7 Sutter street,

HOGS' SPARE RIBS, 5 cents per pound;
Hogs' Kidneys, 6 cents per pound;
Pigs' Feet, 5 cents per pound;
Lean Meat for Sausages, 7 cents per pound;
Rib Roast, 12½ cents per pound;
Pork Chops, 15 cents per pound;
Pigs' Tenderloins, 15 cents per pound.

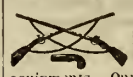
The above are cut from fat grain-fed hogs, killed at our pork-house every day, and are better and cheaper than at any other place in this city.

Mutton! Mutton! Mutton!

From 4 to 7 cents per pound—KILLED EVERY DAY, from sheep fed on our own ranches in the country, and, for that reason, we are enabled to sell the best Mutton for about HALF THE PRICE charged by any other butchers in San Francisco.

WILSON & STEVENS,
se30-§ No. 506 Market St., and No. 7 Sutter St.

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style.

WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY

Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Building Fund.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOAD OF TRUSTEES of the Mercantile Library Association, held October 10th, 1865, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the Trustees form themselves into a Committee of the Whole, to obtain Life Memberships and Donations, with a view of purchasing a lot and erecting a building thereon for the use of the Association.

The payment of one hundred dollars in gold coin secures a Life Membership, and it is hoped that the sum of twenty thousand dollars may be subscribed in this way alone. No subscriptions are binding unless the above sum shall be raised by Life Memberships and Donations before February 1, 1866. Subscription books may be found at the Library, or with any of the following members of the

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:

G. W. Bell.....President
*C. Wolcott Brooks.....Vice President
H. S. Homans.....Corresponding Secretary
David Wilder.....Recording Secretary
John G. Clark.....Treasurer

J. H. Wildes,	A. M. Ebbetts,
J. W. Cox,	F. D. Kellogg,
A. T. Green,	Chas. R. Boud,
Geo. Hewston, M. D.,	*Daniel Rogers,
F. L. Castle.

*On leave of absence. oc21-tf

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled.

H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 823 Merchant street.

no11 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. F. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

☞ No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press in Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN,

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO

PIANO SCHOOL,
ON THE EUROPEAN PLAN,
At the South Park Institute.

MISS FLORENCE JAMES, PRINCIPAL.

IN CONNECTION with this popular and excellent Young Ladies' Seminary there will open, about January 3d, 1866, a Piano School, on the European Plan—for first beginners as well as for advanced players. The great advantage on this plan will be a reduction of about one-half the usual price, and a thorough training, both theoretical and practical. The Musical Department will be under the directorship of Mr. GUSTAVE A. SCOTT, Organist of Cavalry Church, whose long experience in Teaching, both in private and in classes, will secure to pupils a rapid advancement in the study of Music.

The Music Rooms are comfortable and convenient, and the Pianos used from the best manufacturers.

For particulars, call at the Institute, Nos 55 an South Park. de30

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
no18-3m

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,
Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14 3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY, HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

CALIFORNIA
COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,
For Boarding and Day Pupils,
Nos. 64, 66, 68 and 70 Silver street.

THE NEXT TERM of this Institute will commence Wednesday, Jan. 3d. Catalogues may be obtained by addressing (dc30) MISS M. LAMMOND, Principal.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,
54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. de30

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE
COMPANY OF NEW YORK.
Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.
Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, corner of California
ju25-tf

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.
In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.
The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.
For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to
REV. P. I GREY, President
jy1

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life
INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,
AGENTS,
Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.
no26-1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S
California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half-way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiselessness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

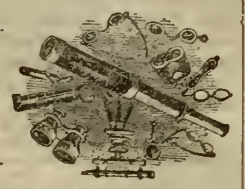
SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

ELEGANT HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

USEFUL, ORNAMENTAL, AND INSTRUCTIVE.



FINE GOLD SPECTACLES and EYE GLASSES,

SETS OF IVORY

TABLE CUTLERY,

Stereoscopic Views of California;
(OVER ONE THOUSAND NEW VIEWS.)

Richly Mounted Opera Glasses

For sale by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
317 and 319 Montgomery street.
CATALOGUES with Price List, FREE. dc9-1m

CLOTHING MADE FROM CALIFORNIA CLOTH,

For Wholesale and Retail Trade,

ALSO, MADE TO ORDER,

AT QUINCY HALL,

NOS. 545, 547, 549,

Washington Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

J. PEIRCE,

415, 417, and 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the
FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM
FOR
Furniture,
AND THE
FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM
FOR THE
BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST: Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers'. Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale
DRUGGISTS,
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO,
AND
SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND
SAN FRANCISCO.
IMPORTERS OF

Dental AND Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

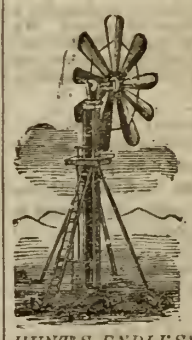
We have constantly on hand all the
STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.



THIS WIND MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN
HORSE-POWER
FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

For further Particulars see small circulars

E. O. HUNT,
No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,
oc29-3m San Francisco.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,
CONGRESS HALL,
ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M.; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11-3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled.

H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.) Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.

no11 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or, judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred; and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAMES V. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

de30 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate, particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal of Court. Int. rev. stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney.
de23-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

GREAT AMERICAN
PRIZE CONCERT!
AT
CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,
Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800
PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

10,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Sheriff street, San Francisco.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S
Medical and Surgical Institute,
COMMERCIAL STREET,
A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,
C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,
No. 641 Commercial street,
A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and compossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriero of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mb25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3-3m

---

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have purchased the Eating House known as "Richards'" Restaurant, situate on Clay street, one door below Montgomery. The restaurant has been repaired and refitted throughout, and is now open to the public.

C. H. BRICKWEDEL,
de23 H. F. HEGELER.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 141 Broadway, New York,
FOR INSURING AGAINST
Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500	$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000	15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000	30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation	12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation	25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation	50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.

The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days	$1
Eight Days	2
Twelve Days	3
Twenty Days	1
Thirty Days	5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, Agents,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16 3m San Francisco.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15*TH OF EVERY MONTH.*

☞ MONDAY, JANUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship
AMERICA.

ON MONDAY, - - - - JANUARY 15TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets
Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JAN. 10TH, - - - - - GOLDEN CITY
Captain F. R. Baby.

JAN. 19TH, - - - - - COLORADO,
Captain Watkins.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock.

Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent
jy24 Cor. Sacramento and Leidesd

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, JAN. 13TH,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE:
DAN. SETCHELL,
IN APRIL FOOL, AND TOODLES!

THIS EVENING, JANUARY 13TH,
DAN SETCHELL,
As - - SIR JOHN FALSTAFF,
In the Merry Wives of Windsor!

SUPPORTED BY THE FULL STRENGTH OF THE COMPANY.

MR. SETCHELL'S engagement will continue throughout the coming week.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on

Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS FOR THE
Approaching Holidays!

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children

GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.

TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,
LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
de19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

EXTRA ANNOUNCEMENT.

Setchell's Farewell Benefit!

FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 19TH.
And Positively the Last Night but Two.
DUTCH GOVERNOR,
AND
BREACH OF PROMISE

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

POSITIVELY THE LAST WEEK
— OF —
BLAISDELL'S
CELEBRATED PAINTING,

THE HIBERNICON!
OR,
A TOUR THROUGH IRELAND!

THERE will be no performance this (Saturday) afternoon or evening, the Academy being engaged by the Alemannians for their Masquerade Ball this evening.

Performances every night next week, and on WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at 2 o'clock, for Families and Children.

A CARD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 5th, 1866.

W. H BLAISDELL, Esq.—Dear Sir: Having visited your beautiful PANORAMA OF IRELAND, it affords us sincere pleasure to bear testimony to the correctness and excellence of its views, whether representing its Ruined Abbies, its Beautiful Rivers, its Mountains or its Lakes—so close is the resemblance to nature that one might almost imagine himself on the spot. To those who have never visited Ireland, we most cheerfully recommend it as a correct representation of our lovely but unhappy country; while to every Irish heart it will awaken sensations and remembrances which no language of ours can describe. Trusting that your enterprise may be as successful as it deserves, we are, sir, Yours truly,

Dr. I. Rowell,	Thomas N. Cazneau,
Joseph K. Handy, Cusbier Hibernian S. & L. Soc'y;	T. J. Broderick, John Kolly, Jr.,
Daniel O'Callaghan,	C. Desmond,
John O'Brien,	James R. Kelly,
Thomas Mooney, President Cal. Build & Loan Soc'y;	Thomas Mulrein, John Mann,
Thomas R. Dundas,	Philip A. Roach,
J. J. Rogers,	R. F. Ryan,
M. Flood.

MADAME JULIA BLAISDELL,
SOLO HARPIST;
MISS CLARA,
The interesting IRISH BALLADIST, and the
SWISS BELL-RINGERS,
Will appear in conjunction with the Painting, each evening, with an ELABORATE DESCRIPTIVE LECTURE,
BY J. H. WARWICK, ESQ.

GRAND MATINEE ON SATURDAY NEXT, JAN. 20TH, at 2 o'clock, for Schools and Family Parties.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....75 cents.
Family Circle.....50 cents.
No extra charge for reserved seats. ja13 tf

MERCANTILE Library Association

INDEPENDENT OPPOSITION TICKET.

ELECTION, MONDAY, JAN. 15.

POLLS OPEN FROM 9 A. M. TO 5 P. M., AND FROM 6 TO 8 P. M.

For President,
Wm. H. L. Barnes.....Lawyer

For Vice President,
R. B. Swain.....Superintendent of the Mint

For Corresponding Secretary,
H. S. Homans.....Insurance Agent

For Recording Secretary,
R. P. Lewis.....Secretary of Street Commissioner

For Treasurer,
William C. Ralston.....Banker

For Trustees,
Wm. G. Badger.....of Badger & Lindenberger
Alex. B. Baldwin.....of A. R. Baldwin & Co
J. M. McNulty.....Physician
George C. Shreve.....of George C. Shreve & Co
Wm. Loewy.....County Clerk
George A. Low.....of C. Adolph Low & Co
Arthur M. Ebbets.....Merchant
Eugene E. Dewey.....of S. P. Dewey & Son
William E. Wood.....of J. G. Jackson & Co

The undersigned, a Committee of Members of the Mercantile Library Association to make Nominations for Officers for the ensuing year, beg to recommend the above Ticket as one in every respect worthy the support of every member of the Association.

ALBERT MILLER, WILLIAM HARNEY,
W. H. STEVENS, WILLIAM M. NOYES,
THEODORE A. MUDGE.
San Francisco, January 10, 1866. ja13

FIRE DEPARTMENT BALL.

POSTPONEMENT.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the Fire Department Ball, in accordance with the request of many friends, and in order to perfect every arrangement deemed necessary for the success of said Ball, have POSTPONED the same until
THURSDAY EVENING.....JAN. 18TH.
By order of the Executive Committee.

THE SECOND ANNUAL
Ball of the Fire Department,
Will be given at
UNION HALL,
ON THURSDAY EVENING, JAN. 18.

No care or expense will be spared to make it the grandest and most fashionable Ball of the season.

MANAGERS.

Governor F F Low,	Hon Ogden Hoffman,
Maj Gen H. W. Halleck,	" Milton S Latham,
" I McDowell,	" S H Dwinelle,
" J F Miller,	" Thos B Shannon,
Col R C Drum,	" Frank Soule,
Com Selim Woodworth,	" R F Perkins,
Maj-Gen L H Allen,	" Wm J Shaw
Chas de Cazotte,	R H Sinton,
Louis McLane,	Wm. Alvord,
Thos Tobin,	J H Baird,
I W Raymond,	Wm F Babcock,
Chas B Polhemus,	Henry Bigelow,
Eugene L Sullivan,	A Austin,
J Mora Moss,	S C Hastings,
R B Swain,	Camilo Martin,
E W Burr,	Maj A D Grimwood,
S P Dewey,	Abel Gay,
James Lick,	Wm B Johnston,
Nicholas Larco,	Geo W Gibbs,
Leland Stanford,	Hall McAllister,
Joseph P Hodge,	Henry B Platt,
B F Lowe,	M Livingston,
James Bowman,	Samuel M Wilson,
D O Mills,	Francisco Sanjurjo,
Lafayette Maynard,	Lewis Leland,
F L A Pioche,	Louis Scellier,
Jos G Eastland,	Alphens Bull,
Ira P Rankin,	John S Henning,
Henry Carlton, Jr,	A Seligman,
John B Felton,	Michael Skelly,
Samuel Brannan,	A Coleman,
R H Magill,	Wm H Tillinghast,
Geo C Boardman,	Joseph Austin,
David Scannell,	John H Gardiner,
R B Woodward,	Wm P Taaffe,
O Livermore,	W H L Barnes,
A L Tubbs,	Henry Voorman,
Marcus D Bornck,	Dr A J Bowie,
W Lane Booker,	Edward S Speur,
Eugene Casserly,	Wm. McKibben,
Oliver Eldridge,	Michael Castle,
H M Newhall,	John Parrott,
Joseph A Donohoe,	Wm C Talbot,
Wm C Ralston,	Erwin Davis,
James Ojis,	H H Haight,
R. J. Vanderwnter,	Maj John Stratman,
Caleb T Fay,	James H Cutter,
Martin R Roberts,	Henry Barriolhet,
James R Bolton,	John A. McGlynn,
W E Barron,	W W Haney,
S R Harris,	John J Kelly,
Morris Spyer,	Chas. R Peters,
Alfred Barstow,	Claus Spreckles,
R C Ferguson,	David Stern,
Geo H Howard,	G J Byrne,
Elie Lazard,	F W Macondray,
Edward J. Pringle,	John O Earl,
John H Saunders,	Emanuel Berri,
Jos W Winans,	Fred'k Billings,
James Bell,	E T Pease,
E W Leonard,	Louis Cohn,
Geo B Gammans,	H Heyneman,
S H Parker,	Horace W. Carpenter,
Col Wm Harney,	M M Henston,
A H Titcomb,	Wm G Badger,
M C Hillyer,	Louis Schloss,
Frank McCoppin,	Henry G Langley,
John Hewston, Jr,	A J Houghtaling,
J C L Wadsworth,	W W Stow,
Joseph Pierce,	W B Farwell,
C F Mebius,	John T Doyle,
Chas Walcott Brooks,	Warren R Payne,
Albert Miller,	Dr Joseph Haine,
J G Kittie,	Robert Cushing,
Jonathan Hunt,	Peter Donahue,
John Middleton,	James L Fink,
C Adolphe Low,	T McCarthy.

☞ The number of Tickets to be sold is limited; they are not transferable, and none will be sold at the door. Ladies' invitations can be procured, free of charge, on application.

TICKETS (including Supper) TEN DOLLARS.

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

Pine street, near Montgomery.

Grand Masquerade Ball!

BY THE

ALEMANNIA,

AT MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

SATURDAY EVENING, JAN. 13, 1866.

On which occasion the parquette will be floored over level with the stage, and the whole covered with canvas. Prizes will be given to the best Lady and Gentlemen Masks, to be awarded by a committee selected from the audience.

A splendid band of music has been engaged, and no expense will be spared to make this the most brilliant affair of the season. Tickets to be had of the committee:

L. Hecht, Jr., 417 Sacramento street.
L. Schwarzschild, 320 Battery street.
A. Wangenheim, S.E. cor. California and Sansome
C. Coluan, S.W. corner Washington & Montgomery. S. H. Stern. de23-4t

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.
J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.
George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
F. Schrader, cor. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery, near Clay.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansomo, cor. Pine

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FURNITURE.
N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.
Slossen & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimberg, 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent. 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.

SALOONS.
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

HOLT'S MAP OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
ja13 tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 8. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 20, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- The Religion of Flowers.—No. 2. By "Iris."
- Legislative Safety-Valves.
- Outcroppings Come Again.
- The New Game Law.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:
- The Tenement-House — A Legend of New York.—By C. H. Webb.

NEW BOOKS:
- A Review of Recent Publications.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events and Announcements.

SELECTED:
- Eastern Assays of California Outcroppings.
- Field Sports of Old.
- Frozen to Death—Alone on the Arctic Sea.
- The Step on the Stair.
- The Etiquette of Smoking.
- The Prince and the Jeweler.
- A Queer Funeral Sermon—Probable Origin of the "Harp of a Thousand Strings."
- A Javanese Seraglio.
- Hope Deferred.
- The Bull that Saw the Elephant.
- U. S. Internal Revenue Duties, as amended.

POETRY:
- The Fisher.—By Goethe.
- Leisure.—By Jean Ingelow.

HOPE DEFERRED.

"ROLAND," the Boston correspondent of the Sacramento Union—his real name being J. R. Osgood—tells the following anecdote of Judge Collamer: "I heard recently an anecdote of Jacob Collamer, of Vermont, who died a few weeks since, that sounded very funny, but perhaps its chief charm was in the mode of telling, rather than in the intrinsic merit of the story. At the beginning of Taylor's (or Fillmore's—I won't be sure which) administration, Judge Collamer was appointed Postmaster General. On the very day of his taking office there was shown to him, among other visitors, a French Creole from Louisiana. 'Good morning, Monsieur Collamere. My name is Jean Jacques Trousec, of Plaquemines Parish, and I come for the Post Office at New Orleans.' The Judge listened to him with dignificd attention, and then remarked that, as he must be aware, affairs of the Department were as yet in confusion, and nothing could then be done in the way of appointments. He advised Trousec to write an application for the desired office, forward in the regular channel, and call again in a week. Trousec retired, somewhat chagrined that the announcement of his identity had not secured him a more cordial reception. In precisely a week he again entered the Postmaster General's office. That official greeted him as a stranger, whereupon—'Ah, you not know me, Monsieur. I am Jean Jacques Trousec, from Plaquemines, and I want the Post Office at New Orleans. I see you one week ago and you tell me to make my application and call in one week; I have make my application and I come again.' Judge Collamer repeated his previous remarks and urged him to come again in a fortnight. At the end of that time he made his third call, again unrecognized by the Judge, and again announced his name and his object. The Judge reminded him of the unavoidable delays in the bestowal of offices, hinted at the expense of staying in Washington, and told Trousec he had better go home and await the result of his application. But the office-seeker objected, preferring to see the thing out, so the Judge told him to call again in two weeks. At the appointed time Trousec appeared again, and again had to make himself known, this time with ill-concealed wrath. When the Judge discovered who his visitor was, he said he was sorry to inform Monsieur Trousec that the New Orleans Post Office had been disposed of just two weeks ago. When he had finished this communication, the other began: 'Monsieur Collamere, I had a nice little girl at New Orleans; her name was Mademoiselle Josephine. I loved her very much. But one evening I went to see her, and when I came away Mademoiselle Josephine say to me—My dear Jean Jacques, I love you very much, but Antoine Brissot he has more money than you: so you must not come here any more. Now, Monsieur Collamere, what you 'spose I say to Mademoiselle Josephine—eh? I turn round and say to Mademoiselle Josephine—Go to haile, Mademoiselle Josephine; go to haile! And so, Monsieur Collamere, I say to you—Go to haile, Monsieur Collamere; go to haile, Monsieur!' And Jean Jacques Trousec shook off the dust from his feet and departed."

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, January 20th, 1866.

SOME one remarks that every man has a mission. I think I have one. The only trouble for some time back has been to ascertain what that mission is. It is now clear to me.

Nature clearly intended me for a Professor in some Young Ladies' College. I know of no other position in life that I am so well calculated to fill.

Bowman, I am told, was for some time a professor in one of the most comprehensive seminarics ever established upon this coast. And it is said that he acquitted himself with eminent credit. There were no pianists allowed in those classical grounds—no piping of pastoral notes. Oatmeal and steady study made up the regime, and consequently I am not surprised that Bowman did not hold the situation longer.

I am told he resigned it in favor of the popular proprietor of the News Letter, who only occupied it long enough to ask what the emoluments of the office were, and then left it in a fit of distaste, pitching into the institution in the next issue of his very widely spread and influential journal.

My attention has been called to something which is published up in the sage-brush, where the sage-hen and "Jo Goodman" prowl and howl, and have their nest—the latter occasionally his non est.

The leading idea of the writer seems to be that talent is always born in the country. Certainly, I do not dispute him. The most stalwart men are born in the cradle, but it is not on record that they stay there long.

There is a certain law of intellectual gravitation, as well as of physical.

The brightest spring that bubbles up in the mountains hastens to blend its waters with some river, and, though that river may tarry a while in the arms of a lake, it eventually forces its way to the sea.

And not to "a sea of inland domesticity," if we may be allowed to use a piece of word, or rather water painting, which the Sacramento Union has made peculiarly its own.

The assertion that great men have been born in the country I will not dispute. But, to the inference that they remained there long, I take decided exception.

Stephen Douglas was born and brought up in a small Vermont village, but he very soon expressed the opinion that a better place to emigrate from could not be found on the face of the known world.

An oak germinates in the earth, but it very soon finds the upper air, and waves its branches in more unconfined space.

The Rothschilds are of country origin, but at the present moment they are not clerks in country stores... nor would it exactly fit their ambition, perhaps, to be proprietors of them.

We do not know that "every poet, orator, historian, statesman, and warrior of distinction" have caught "inspiration" and things from a "provincial home." But, for argument's sake, we will assume that Julius Cæsar, General Grant, Cicero, Webster, Josephus, Bancroft, James Brannan, and Samuel Linen, were all country born and bred, but did they not speedily find their way to Rome, Washington, and San Francisco?

Verily, do not the sages of the sage-brush occasionally come down from the mountains, to wash the alkali from their throats, purge themselves of bile, and for a brief period live cleanlily?

The geniuses of that up country plume themselves on the way they are inspired and the yeast-like fashion in which their souls rise amid their surroundings.

With so much saleratus under their feet, they ought to rise occasionally, but, from all accounts that come to me, I think their natural tendency is to fall.

And when I hear sneering mention made of poor literary devils, who earn precarious subsistence and occasional dollars by plying quills in the service of some metropolitan journal, whose office is located in the cheap streets of the city... I sometimes look with a feeling of pleasurable pride at my seedy apparel and ink-stained fingers, as I turn my hollow eyes for an introspective glance, and ask of my soul: Is not this better than lolling in a sage brush bower, and living in luxurious ease as the proprietor of a one-horse newspaper which is only enabled to keep its head above water by doubling its ads... by its double, in fact.

Rain! Rain!! Rain!!! has been the cry of the farmers for some weeks past.

Now, they've got it, and I hope it will do them good. They want it for their crops... I've had quite enough for my crop during the past week, and should be perfectly content to see it let up for a while.

But, notwithstanding the weather, it has been an excellent time for balls... snow-balls, one might say, from the extreme coolness.

The "Alemannia" gave an excellent bal masqué on Saturday evening last at the Academy of Music. A great many guests were present en costume, but not so many as to crowd the floor, and the masks were good almost without exception.

The chief exception I feel inclined to take is with regard to "Time," who appeared very appropriately dressed, but bearing an immense real scythe upon his shouldor, which might have been productive of serious accident had he tripped or been jostled over by the dancers.

It seems to me that, had I been one of the managers on that occasion, I should have taken Time by the forelock and led him to the nearest barn, where I should have bade him unburden himself.

Then, there was another young gentleman who thought he made a point by allowing that portion of linen which is generally concealed, to protrude—and not from his vest front. It may have been funny, but, to my thinking, it was a rather dismal—not to say dirty—joke.

Prettier faces and prettier feet are seldom seen on any ballroom floor, and I have half a mind to forego my old ambition of being an angel, and become at once an Alemannian.

Among so many excellent masks it would be invidious to particularize... but "Topsy" and a huge "Bouquet-holder" got the prize. The latter was called the best disguise, but it did not begin with that of a friend of mine, who went there sober and kept himself so respectably sober throughout the evening that no one recognized him

"Joan of Arc" was amazingly—should I say Amazoningly—pretty. If the Ark of Noah was of that style, it is little wonder that it suggested the idea of pairing to the inhabitants of the earth. A sensible dove would never have left such an Arc to go looking for an Ararat.

The Firemen's ball, on Thursday evening, was also a great success. But are these things called Firemen's balls because no firemen are present?

I looked vainly around for the illustrious "Bonebreaker," the reserved Riley, and several others of my acquaintance, but not a red-shirt did I see.

Where were the Knickerbocker Fives, the Monumental Sixes, the Howard Threes? And where were those pretty little spanners and things with which they are accustomed to tap each other over the head in moments of relaxation?

The only fireman whom I saw and recognized was that tall son of Cork, Dave Scannel, as his graceful form glided among the dancers. Some persons may not like David's step, but I'm betting on the way he carries his head.

I would like to say more of the ball, but have only room to add that it was a perfect success, and that a singularly bad feeling towards France was shown in the universal desire to punish or annihilate Napoleon's Cabinet—that being the only wine called for, and in calling for it Canavan was in the van.

The whole work of noticing balls, and so-forth, is thrown on me this week, the excuse being that there is no room in any other part of the paper. So I must also answer correspondents.

"Little Johnnie," who writes "simply for information," is informed that the antithesis of waves and surges in a poem in last week's CALIFORNIAN is perfectly correct, and that he need give himself no further trouble about it. He may not understand it in his present sophomoric state, but he will when he reaches his junior year. And, as for "mountains of prey," the phrase will be found in the Seventy-sixth Psalm. If anxious to know what it means, address David through some spiritual medium.

INIGO.

THE TENEMENT-HOUSE.

AND SOME ACCOUNT OF ITS BUILDER, POPHAM POPHAMMER, ESQ.

A LEGEND OF NEW YORK.

POPHAM at forty was rich,
As the yearly assessments would show;
Lodged in an opulent niche;
Builder of Tenement Row.

In youth he had said to his soul:
"It is good to be honest and true;
But rather than poverty's dole,
We'll be rich and dispense with the two."
As he walked through the byeways and streets,
He had said to himself in his greed:
"Gaunt famine one everywhere meets,
And gold may be gathered from need."
So he put out his hand, and its touch
Was a rival to Midas' of old,
For blood changed to coin in his clutch,
And tears he transmuted to gold.

Thus it was that old Popham got rich,
Though I've heard him impress on his child,
That he reached this desirable niche
Because a kind Providence smiled.
When he told how he 'scaped Wall street rocks,
You'd have thought, by the story he made,
That Providence dabbled in stocks,
And had been his copartner in trade!

Now Popham conversed with his wife:
He said: "We have money in store,
Enough for a front seat in life;
Let us knock at 'Society's door!'"
So he built him a mansion up town—
It fronted on Madison Square—
He furnished it, up stairs and down,
With all that was dainty and rare;
And Fifth-avenoodledum's crown
Was the meed of the millionaire.

Next, Popham dove down in his pelf—
This dive all the papers record—
And he said: "Having built for myself,
I will now build a house for the Lord!"
Thus designing, he looked up designs,
And an architect, famed for good taste,
Drew a maze of bewildering lines—
All said the conception was "chaste."
Then the masons and carpenters came,
And the church like a gossip's tale grew;
Its steeple put shot-towers to shame,
And the nave—a wag said it had two—
Was blazoned with Pophammer's name,
And his was the principal pew.
This pew was a marvel; they spread
Soft cushions for Pophammer's seat,
A pillowed recess for his head;
A velveted rest for his feet,
Rich Brussels to carpet his tread—
And the mansion of God was complete!

Dedication of course followed next,
By the Reverend Richman Rejoyce!
I do not remember his text—
Though I mind me his beautiful voice:
But one of those sinners who carp
At display which they cannot afford,
Said he played on a thousand-stringed harp,
And that this was its principal chord:
"When you rob from the poor, if you're sharp,
You will give—say a tenth—to the Lord."
And I sat, quite a convert the while,
To the truth—perhaps novel to you—
That the Savior died not for the vile,
But for just the respectable few;
That Sin had a stool in the aisle,
And Piety always a pew.
He ended—I thought rather late—
With a brief and appropriate prayer
For a blessing on Church and on State,
And on Popham the millionaire!

Then Popham looked over the board,
Devising a move that was sure
To fill this last breach in his hoard,
While he said to his soul, as a lure:
"I have built for myself and the Lord—
I will now build a house for the Poor;
And since mansions and manses don't pay,
But rather decrease one's per cents,
I will build in a very cheap way,
And I'll gather large quarterly rents!"

Thus the moneyed still reap what the penniless sow—
May the Harvest at last bring atoning:
Thus two palaces' glow begat Tenement Row,
And the widows' and orphans' late moaning—
For churches must grow, through bitter tears flow,
And the Poor in their need be groaning.

He advertised next for designs;
The architect came with his plan,
And they traced out the meshes and lines
Of the net they were spreading for man.

If the carpenter chose he could tell,
As he drove in the finishing nail,
How the blow, as it echoing fell,
Rang through the low hall like a wail;
The mason could tell, if he chose,
Of the blood accidentally spilt,
Which spattered the walls as they rose,
And reddened the mortar with guilt;
But they hurried the work to its close,
And the Tenement-house was built!

In a narrow and dim-lighted street,
Where the light of God's sun never beams,
Where the tenement-lodger is blest
If haply he see it in dreams;
Where the pavements are reeking with filth,
And the sewers pour their pestilent breath;
Where Fever and Famine link hands,
And Disease holds a revel with Death:
In the midst of this rottening reek,
Where a prayer would have taint like a curse,
The millionaire built for the Poor,
That dollars might come to his purse;
That servants might wait on his chair,
That a preacher might purr in his face;
That his wife might rustle in silk,
And his daughters float lightly in lace.

Oh, think of this, daughters and wives,
As your carriage through fair Broadway rolls—
That your splendor is purchased by lives:
That your horses' feet trample on souls!

Shall I tell of the Tenement-house?
Of the human forms packed in its walls
With scarcely the space for their lungs
Allotted to beasts in their stalls?
Shall I tell of the rottening beams,
Of the stairway which rocked with your tread,
Of the floor which was crumbling below,
And the slime-dripping wall overhead?
Shall I tell that the foulness without
Was pure to the foulness within?
Of the harvest that Death's sickle reaps
Where Poverty crouches with Sin?

But little the millionaire recked
Of the lives or the souls that were lost;
For Rotten Row paid like a mine,
And the yearly rent doubled its cost.

In the hush of a still Sabbath night,
While thousands were kneeling in prayer,
The Fire-Fiend escaped from his thrall
And waved his red torches in air;
The churches and mansions up-town
Were lit by the horrible glare.

The brazen-lipped bell cried "Alarm!"
Till it shook a grave, dignified spire,
And rudely broke Pophammer's nap—
The Tenement House was on fire!
Lithe flames climbed the kindle-wood stair,
And danced in their glee on the roof—
Pophammer had furnished a loom,
And now Hell wove the warp and the woof!
There were mothers with babes at the breast,
There were mothers with babes in their arms,
And their shrieks reached the planets above—
What need of all other alarms?
The wife called on husband to save,
And stretched out her arms for his aid.
Poor souls! as well call from the grave—
So deftly the trap had been laid—
Yet their cries drowned the clanging bells' din,
Till the greedy flames licked up their till,
And the smouldering rafters fell in—
Then all of the shriekings were still.

Unsightly remains of charred flesh
Were found in the rubbish below;
Chaotic in mass and in name,
You would scarce their humanity know;
But the Coroner rendered their death
As: "Tenants of Tenement row!"

I dreamt, on that horrible night,
I had seen a Druidical feast,
That I'd stood in the burning pyre's light,
And Popham had been the High Priest!

Oh, Popham, and millionaires all
Who dwell in your mansions up-town,
Say, how will you answer for this
When the lightnings of God come down?
Will ye hide in your soft-cushioned pews
When the flame through your palace-hall rolls,
When the spires 'neath whose shadow ye pray
Shall fall like God's hand on your souls?
When the patience of Heaven shall tire,
And the sun shall be loosed from his path
To kindle this Tenement World,
Will a just God spare ye in his wrath?

C. H. WEBB.

PAT O'FLAHERTY said that his wife was very ungrateful, for "when I married her she hadn't a rag to her back, but now she is covered with 'em."

LUCY STONE says: "The cradle is a woman's ballot-box." Then we've known some unlawful voting, where two ballots were deposited at a time.

WHY do the recriminations of married people resemble the sound of waves on the shore? Because they are murmurs of the tied.

A GOOD BANK to have stock in—a bank where early falls the due.

THE STEP ON THE STAIR.

"THE incident I have to speak of occurred to myself," said Mr. Macalpine, bowing gravely, but still keeping his eyes fixed before him, "and that within the last twenty-four hours. It is a strange matter to speak of here, and may perhaps lay me open to the charge of egotism, but my mind is full of it, and indeed I can think of nothing else. It is, doubtless, generally known that the Macalpine family—to which I have the honor to belong—is one of the oldest in the West of Scotland; but there is a certain peculiarity about it which is not so well known, and, indeed, which we have always endeavored to keep secret even from our immediate descendants. I, however, am wifeless, childless—the last of my race, and the knowledge of the matter in question can affect no one any more for ill."

The Scotchman's voice, which was generally somewhat rough, here sank and thinned; and that northern accent, which, upon ordinary occasions, is so often made the subject of ridicule, gave an exquisite pathos to his speech, as always happens under circumstances of deep feeling.

"As far back as any records go of our ancient race, this curious faculty has belonged, or has been said to belong, to us—we always see ourselves before we die. No matter in what profession we are engaged—and some of us, through clinging to a good cause in evil times, have been compelled to embrace very humble callings—a warning of our end is always sent in this strange guise: the soldier by the camp-fire, on the eve of the day of battle which is doomed to be his last, has seen a comrade more than should be extended by his side, the fac simile of himself; the sailor, in mid-ocean, beholds his solitary cabin occupied by another self, and straightway knows that the turf of his native land will never cover his bones, but that they will be soon laid in that "vast and wandering grave"—the sea; the pastor, when his last day's work is near, sees another, who is yet himself, kneel down at his own bedside as if in prayer, and thereby learns that his days on earth are numbered. The merchant, when he finds that shadowy partner at his elbow, delays not to set his affairs in order for those whom he must leave behind him; and the poorer son of Commerce, beholding this unlooked for fellow-clerk, does the like in his humble way. A creditor awaits them both, they feel, of whom it is useless to ask for time, but who has eternity to offer in its place. Nay, even the females of our race are not exempt from this strange visitant; the mother knows when she must kiss her children, and bid them keep her memory dear, for that is all of her which will soon be left for them; and the daughter, as she contemplates her own features in the glass, and sees the reflex of a second face, as young and fair, gives over all such thoughts as Youth and Beauty harbor, and makes herself ready for the grisly bridegroom Death."

It was impossible for the most volatile in that great company to resist the solemn tones in which the Scotchman spoke: a hush came over all, and on the ladies a certain 'creepiness,' which caused them to hitch their chairs a little nearer to their male companions, and to cast furtive glances over their bare shoulders, as though some icy hand was hovering nigh.

"I am myself no coward," pursued Mr. Macalpine, turning for an instant his gray face towards his audience, as though to show them how calm and still it was; "but I am not in love with Death. An old lame man, without a relative in the world—for the Macalpines have all seen themselves, and gone—and almost without a friend, it may be thought that I should have no regrets at leaving a life emptied of its joys; but this is not the case. I had looked forward to a few more harmless years of study, and even of travel; and besides"—here he strove in vain to repress a shudder—"the grave, which some look forward to with such tranquility, has—But let me tell my tale. Last night, I sat up late as usual, in my chambers in the Temple, reading. The subject of my study was engrossing, and I was ignorant of all that was occurring without until aroused by a sharp rap upon the wooden floor at the bottom of the staircase. It was three flights below, but I heard it as plainly as though it had been in my own room, and it brought out upon my brow thick drops of terror at once. In order to explain why it did so, I should tell you that I am not only lame, but have lost a portion of one leg. You see me now with an artificial limb; but on ordinary occasions I find it less fatiguing and more convenient to wear a wooden leg. Now, it was the peculiar thud of a wooden leg which I had heard, and there was nobody in the chambers upon the same staircase save myself who had any necessity for wearing one. On the instant I heard it, the thought flashed through me like a knife: 'The warning of my race is coming this night to me.' I put down my book, and listened. Step by step, the lame man, whoever he was, drew nearer to my door; so loudly did the wooden leg beat upon the oak planks that I could scarcely hear the other foot at all, and with every beat there was an answering pulsation, such as I never before felt in my heart and in my brain. Then, for the first time, too, I understood the passionate prayer of Hezekiah for the prolongation of his life. How I prayed with my cold voiceless lips that a little more might be vouchsafed to me; and yet so certain did I feel of the nature of this visitant, and so persuaded of its inexorable purpose, that what I asked for was only that it should come no nearer, that it should stop at the first floor, or the second, and that for that once, at all events, it should not stand within my room. But on it came, nevertheless; past the first floor, past the second floor, and then up the flight that led to my own door. There was still a hope that it might after all be bound for the opposite chamber; but I did not venture to entertain it. The mysterious visitor stopped at my own door, and as it turned the handle, I confess I buried my face in the cushions of the sofa, in order to shut out the too familiar vision which I knew awaited me. Nerving myself for the ordeal, I arose, and drew myself up to meet my fate. Standing opposite to me was the fac simile and double of myself; attired in the self-same garments; but wearing a look upon its features inexpressibly grave and sad. It gazed upon me for a few seconds, and then, without speaking, vanished suddenly. Since that moment, solitude, which I have long preferred to society, has become distateful to me; with the early dawn, I was out in the busy market, and all day long I have been in the teeming streets: I have come hither to-night to escape from my gloom, but, as you see, I have not succeeded. The shadow of Death is upon me whithersoever I move; and I know that I am a doomed man."

A solemn silence, broken only by the solemn waiters, with their "Maintenong cutlets, ma'am?" or their "'Ock or Sortain, sir?" succeeded this depressing harration.

"I'm in such a twitter that I can scarcely hold my knife and fork," whispered Miss Penelope; "and oh, I do so wish that I wasn't sitting next to him!"

Even Sir Joshua was impressed.

"Did you see this—ahem—extraordinary spectacle, Mr. Macalpine, in its—in point of fact was it fully attired?" inquired the City knight.

I knew what he was thinking of; he was wondering, in case the Bence family should ever be honored with a similar visitation, whether his own double would appear as Nature made him, or with all the latest improvements of the tailor, the hairdresser, and the dentist.

"I beheld myself, sir, exactly as I really was," returned Mr. Macalpine gloomily.

"Dear me, how exceedingly unpleasant!" ejaculated Sir Joshua.

"May I ask, Mr. Macalpine, whether your Temple chambers are in Pump Court?" inquired Captain Traverse, helping himself to Kromeskis.

"They are, sir."

"And on the third story, I think you said. Now, does not a gentleman of the name of Sidney rent the opposite room to yours?"

"I believe that name is over the door," answered the Scotchman mechanically. "But I know nothing of him."

"Well, I do," responded the captain drily. "He is a friend of mine, and not being in town, he is so good as to let me have the use of his apartment. I slept there last night, and shall continue to do so for some nights to come."

"Indeed!" returned Mr. Macalpine with animation. "I am not ashamed to say I am sincerely glad that I shall have for my neighbor one who is not at least a total stranger to me; and although, if I had been aware that such was the case, I should certainly have been more reticent, yet——"

"Of course it's a comfort when a fellow's down in the mouth to know he's got a friend close by him," interrupted the captain kindly. "But it so happens that I am in a position to—Still Hock, if you please—to calm your apprehensions with respect to this untimely visitor of yours altogether."

The Scotchman smiled gravely at the captain's confident manner, but shook his head, and sighed.

"Mr. Macalpine No. 2 began ascending your staircase at twenty minutes to one last night, did he not, sir?"

"How came you to know that?" ejaculated the Scotchman with agitation. "Such certainly was the exact time, for I had looked at my watch the instant before."

"I know it because that was the hour at which I arrived in Pump Court myself," pursued the captain. "I have not a wooden leg, but I have a foolish habit, when alone, of striking my walking-stick upon the ground with every step I take, and especially when going up stairs. I have no doubt that I did so last night, for I was so wrapped up in my own thoughts that I turned the handle of your door instead of unlocking that of Mr. Sidney's, which of course was closed. Directly I found out my mistake—as I did the moment I set eyes upon your apartment, which is differently furnished from that of your neighbor—I withdrew."

"You are very kind, sir, to do your best to dispel my melancholy," returned Mr. Macalpine; "but all this does not explain how I beheld myself, which I did, when I raised my head from the sofa-cushions, as surely as I now behold this company."

"If I am not mistaken," continued the captain quietly, "and my eyesight rarely deceives me in taking in details at a glance, there is a large mirror opposite your sofa, Mr. Macalpine——"

A universal exclamation of relief and surprise cut short the captain's explanation, amid which the lame Scotchman arose, and stumping round to his new friend and neighbor, exchanged a hearty gripe of the hand.

"Champagne to everybody!" roared Admiral Roller. "Mr. Macalpine, your good health, and long life to you!"

We all insisted upon taking wine with the Doppelganger; for who of us but does not rejoice when the shadow of Death is removed for a little space from a fellow-mortal? The recluse of the Temple found himself the toast of the evening; and unless he had a head of the same material as one of his other extremities, must have seen, I reckon, more than one duplicate of the Macalpine in the mirror when he reached home that night.

THE "PRINCE" AND THE JEWELER.

A JEWELER of Paris one day saw a splendid equipage drive up to his door, and a tall, important-looking gentleman alight from it. He wanted a set of lady's diamond ornaments, a complete wedding outfit. The price was fixed at two hundred thousand francs. He made choice of one, said he could grant but little time for executing the order, and insisted on leaving with the jeweler a deposit of four thousand francs in billets de banque. He also selected a ring worth a hundred and twenty francs, and ordered it to be sent home the next day; and five days after the whole set of diamonds were to be completed. Accordingly, on the following morning, a confidential messenger of the jeweler repaired to the hotel D——, in the Rue de la Paix, and inquired for Prince Gargarin. He was shown into an apartment on the first story. Five or six lackeys were in the ante-chamber. The prince took the ring, paid for it, and gave a present of ten francs to the messenger, who joyfully returned home, and congratulated his master on having so wealthy and liberal a customer.

The jeweler, with the utmost punctuality, carried home the diamonds on the day appointed. The prince was in his study, sitting before a cylindrical secretaire, which was open. The jeweler handed the casket to him, and his highness minutely inspected the jewels; suddenly one of the valets entered the room and announced "Prince Dolgoroki."

"Ah! my brother-in-law," exclaimed his highness.

"I do not wish him to see the present which I destine for his sister. Request him to stay in the drawing-room, and I will come to him immediately." He touched the table, the cylinder moved, and the secretaire closed; but on the table there lay an open box filled with leather bags, and numerous rouleaux of louis huddled together in confusion. The jeweler had observed all this on his arrival; but his attention was particularly attracted by a large Russian leather portfolio, well lined with billets du banque, the edges of which were visible.

His highness left the room, saying he would return very shortly. About twenty minutes elapsed, and a sort of vague apprehension assailed the jeweler. At length the door opened. Oh! here is highness, thought he. But no, it was the master of the hotel, who, stepping up to the jeweler, said:

"Are you waiting for anybody, sir?"

"I am waiting for the return of Prince Gargarin, to whom I have just sold a set of diamonds for two hundred thousand francs. Are you his secretary?"

"I am his dupe, and so I presume are you?"

"What do you mean? His dupe! Impossible? The jewels are shut up in his secretaire. Besides, look at this money."

He seized one of the leather bags, and, opening it, discovered to his horror that it was filled with nails; the rouleaux contained nothing, and the portfolio scraps of paper. However, the jeweler consoled himself—the diamonds were safe. a locksmith was sent for; the secretaire was opened, and, oh, horror! it was empty. It stood on one side of the room, against a wall in which a hole had been made, and there being a corresponding hole in the secretaire, the jewels had with the most perfect ease been conveyed into an adjoining apartment.

The despair of the unfortunate jeweler may easily be conceived. The master of the hotel, too, who had let his apartment to the pretended Prince Gargarin, had been extensively swindled. The servants all belonged to the hotel, with the exception of the valet de chambre, who was the companion and the confederate of the prince.

It was ascertained that they had decamped in a coach from the door of the hotel. Every exertion was made to trace them out, but several years elapsed before they were discovered. The jeweler, who was nearly ruined by his robbery, removed to another quarter of Paris, and established himself under a new name. One day a messenger called on him from M. T——, a gentleman holding an official situation, who was very ill and wished to purchase some rings. The poor jeweler had naturally become suspicious ever since his fatal adventure with Prince Gargarin, and, instead of sending his shopman, he took the rings himself. He was shown into a bedchamber, which was partially lighted: owing to the situation of the windows, the room was all in shade, except in that part where the bed stood. What was the surprise of the jeweler when he discovered in the invalid M. T—— the swindler who had some years previously defrauded him in the assumed character of the Russian Prince Gargarin! For a few moments he was struck dumb with amazement. However, he soon recovered himself, and, deeming it prudent not to betray the discovery he had made, he displayed the rings, several were selected, and their price amounted to about six thousand francs.

"It is a large sum of money for a poor ruined man," said M. T——. "I have not ready cash sufficient to settle the whole amount, and I shall feel obliged if you will take in payment this curious old snuff-box, which is of great value."

He asked for his dressing case, and, opening it, took out an octogon-shaped china snuff box, set in gold and rubies. It was perfectly unique and of inestimable value. On beholding it the jeweler well nigh betrayed himself. The snuff-box which M. T—— presented to him was the one which had been stolen from him a few days before the robbery of his diamonds. The box was too remarkable to admit of the possibility of mistake. Besides, it had a secret spring, by means of which all the miniatures could be taken out of their settings. On the reverses were painted similar subjects, but treated in the style of indelicacy peculiar to the age of Louis XV. This circumstance was important in proof of his claim to the possession of the box. When M. T—— asked him to set a value on it, he said without hesitation:

"I consider it worth more than fifty thousand francs."

"Fifty thousand francs!" exclaimed M. T——. "I thought it valuable, but this far exceeds my estimation of it."

"Sir," resumed the jeweler, "I will not retract what I have said. I am an expert dealer, and to me it may possibly be worth far more than the sum I have mentioned. I will make this proposition to you: you shall take the rings you have selected, and you shall put the box under an envelope, stating it to be my property; and if it does not bring more than fifty thousand francs you shall have my rings for nothing."

M. T—— was completely blinded by this scheme. He was a good connoisseur of objects of virtu, and he was not a little gratified to find his box so much overvalued, and to be enabled to obtain the rings without opening his purse. The most exaggerated valuation of the snuff-box would scarcely have exceeded seven or eight thousand francs. He sent for two of his neighbors, one of whom was a notary, and the matter was arranged conformably with the jeweler's proposition. This being done, the invalid said:

"Who will fix the price of the box?"

"You, sir," coolly replied the jeweler.

"Me!—are you jesting?"

"I assure you, sir, I am quite serious. I would willingly lay a good wager that you will value the box at five hundred thousand francs."

M. T—— directed at the two witnesses a look which seemed to say, the man is mad; but the jeweler added:

"You will value it at that price. I am certain that you will. But, first of all, I have to acquaint you with a little circumstance connected with this box, which will enable you to perceive its real value."

M. T——, full of curiosity and anxiety, consented to hear the jeweler's communication in private. The two neighbors, taking the box with them, adjourned to the drawing-room; M. T—— and the jeweler being left alone, the jeweler said:

"Sir: it is now about sixteen years ago since that snuff-box was stolen from me, and a short time afterwards you robbed me of fifty thousand crowns worth of diamonds under the assumed name of Prince Gargarin. I have now discovered you. My evidence relative to the robbery is on record. You have declared the snuff box to be yours, and I can prove having purchased it at public sale. I know a secret which will place the truth of my assertion beyond a doubt. Now, sir, tell me whether you are inclined to defend yourself in the criminal suit which I intend forthwith to institute against you?"

Every word uttered by the jeweler fell like a thunderbolt on the ears of M. T——. Overwhelmed with the consciousness of his guilt, his imagination pictured all the horrors of imprisonment, trial, sentence and the scaffold. He reflected, and the jeweler said:

"Sir, I give you five minutes to form your determination."

At the expiration of that interval, M. T—— in a faltering voice, directed the jeweler to open a drawer in which he would find billets de banque for five hundred thousand francs, payable at his banker's that same day. This being done, the jeweler then called in the witnesses.

"Gentlemen," said he, "I have at length convinced M. T—— of the real value of the snuff-box. You see the price at which he has purchased it back from me."

"I have given five hundred thousand francs," said M. T——.

"Here is your box," said the jeweler, restoring it, "and I will let you have the rings into the bargain."

The notary, who was no less surprised than the other witness, said:

"There is some mystery in all this."

"Probably there is," replied the jeweler. "M. T—— may explain if he pleases; for my part, I promise him eternal secrecy."

With these words, he took his departure, leaving the witnesses bewildered in a maze of conjectures. M. T——, though immensely rich, never recovered from the mortification attendant on this unexpected discovery.

THE FISHER.

[In order only to appreciate this ballad, you must fancy yourself (if you cannot realize it) stretched on the grass, by the margin of a mighty river of the south, rushing from or through an Italian lake, whose opposite shore you cannot descry for the thick purple haze of heat that hangs over its glassy surface. If you lie there for an hour or so, gazing into the depths of the blue unfathomable sky, till the fanning of the warm wind and the murmur of the water combine to throw you into a trance, you will be able to enjoy "The Fisher:"]

THE water rush'd and bubbled by—
An angler near it lay,
And watch'd his quill, with tranquil eye,
Upon the current play.
And as he sits in wasteful dream,
He sees the flood unclose,
And from the middle of the stream
A river-maiden rose.

She sang to him with witching wile,
"My brood why wilt thou snare.
With human craft and human guile,
To die in scorching air?
Ah! didst thou know how happy we
Who dwell in waters clear,
Thou wouldst come down at once to me,
And rest forever here.

The sun and ladye-moon they lave
Their tresses in the main,
And breathing freshness from the wave,
Come doubly bright again.
The deep blue sky, so moist and clear,
Hath it for thee no lure?
Does thine own face not woo thee down
Unto our waters pure?

The water rush'd and bubbled by—
It lapped his naked feet;
He thrill'd as though he felt the touch
Of maiden kisses sweet.
She spoke to him, she sang to him—
Resistless was her strain—
Half-drawn he sank beneath the wave,
And ne'er was seen again.

From the German of Gœthe.

FIELD SPORTS OF OLD.

[The Greeks and Romans seem to have been quite as fond of field sports as moderns are, though "pot hunting" did not very extensively prevail in the severely classic times. Aristotle, Plato, and Cicero were in favor of "manly games," and indeed the voice of classical antiquity is almost unanimous upon this point. Xenophon, after ascribing the invention of the art of hunting to the gods, advises the young "that they should not despise hunting nor any other training, for by such means men become good soldiers, and excel in other accomplishments by which they are of necessity led to think, speak, and act rightly." A few uncongenial spirits dissented, however—Euripides and Xenophanes—reading long homilies to the masses upon the uselessness of athletic sports. These latter authors may be regarded as representing the old-fogy element in antiquity. Hares were coursed by the ancients, deer stalked, and leopards, lynxes, panthers, were hunted with dogs. "But of all kinds of hunting" says our authority, "the chase of the wild boar is perhaps the most celebrated. So fierce an animal could not help kindling the sportsman's ardor; the danger that accompanied his capture enhanced the pleasure of the hunter, so that not all the earnest entreaties of the Goddess of Love could turn Adonis from his favorite sport:"]

WILD boars were hunted with large and strong dogs. Xenophon recommends Indian, Locrian, Cretan, and Spartan breeds; the two former being more especially celebrated for their courage and strength, the latter for their excellent scenting powers. Very strong nets were also necessary, besides javelins and spears furnished with guards at the juncture of the iron and wooden parts, in order to prevent the stricken animal from pushing along the handle till he reached the hunter; foot-traps also, similar to the podostrabæ we have already spoken of, were used. The hunters were to go in company, for the sake of mutual protection in so hazardous a chase. But let us have Xenophon's own words on boar-hunting: "In the first place, when the hunters have come to the place where they suppose that there is a boar, they must bring up the dogs quietly, letting one of the Spartan dogs loose, and keeping the others tied, and go round about the place with the loose dog. When this dog has found traces of the boar, they must continue their course along the track which is to guide the whole train. There will be also many indications of the boar to guide the huntsmen—marks of his footsteps on soft ground, pieces of the shrubs broken off in the woody parts, and where there are large trees, scratches of his tusks upon them. The dog pursuing the track will generally come to some woody spot, for the animal commonly lies in such places, as they are warm in winter and cool in summer. When the dog comes to the beast's lair it begins to bark, yet the boar will seldom rise on that account." Xenophon then adds, that the nets were to be spread widely around this spot, and the ropes of the nets to be attached to some strong tree. The open places near the nets were to be stopped up. These preparations being completed, the dogs were to be let loose, and the men to advance cautiously with their spears in their hands; the huntsman was to lead the way, cheering on the dogs; the rest of the party were to follow at some intervals of space between them. When the dogs come near the lair of the boar, they will start forward and drive him out, the wild animal occasionally killing one or two of the dogs. Now the exciting sport begins. The hunters were to throw their javelins at him, and pelt him with stones. Should the boar press forward into the net, so as to pull the net-rope to the utmost stretch, the most expert hunter was to advance, spear in hand, and pierce the boar in the front part of the body; if he would not stretch the rope, but turned back upon his enemies, one of the party was to advance to meet him with left foot and left hand in advance, watching every movement of the animal's head, and looking into his very eye. and endeavor to thrust his spear into the throat just above the shoulder blade. This was a most hazardous matter, for a strong and sudden movement of the head would turn the hunter's spear aside, and prevent his dealing a thrust, or might wrest it out of his hand, in which case the hunter is recommended to throw himself down flat upon the ground, for "if the boar fall upon him in this position he will be unable to seize his body, on account of his tusks being turned up, but if he attack him standing erect, he must necessarily be wounded.' We are then told 'that the boar will try to raise the man up, and that if he cannot do this he will trample upon him with his feet.' Few modern sportsmen, we suspect, would be inclined to adopt the method of avoiding the animal's tusks which Xenophon here recommends. When the man is on the ground, one of his companions must come to the rescue, and endeavor to draw the boar's attention off the prostrate hunter on to himself, when the former is to jump up with spear in hand and rush to the attack again, and to the help of his brother sportsman. Xenophon then treats us to a little bit of the fabulous: 'The boar's tusks are so hot when he is just dead, that hairs when laid upon them actually shrivel up, and when he is alive they are absolutely on fire when he is irritated, because, if this were not so, he would not singe the tips of the dogs' hair when they come near him.'

Ovid gives us an admirable picture of a wild boar in his animated description of the Calydonian hunt, and sings graphically of all the preparations for and incidents of that celebrated chase. The mighty forest, rising from the plain, its trees growing for ages, never thinned by man—

'Silva frequens trabibus quam nulla ecciderat ætas,'—

among whose tangled brushwood the great wild boar had his lair; the neighboring valley, with its rivulets of water and pool surrounded by willows, sedges, rushes, and talls reeds. to which place Meleagar and his comrades ('lecta manus juvenum') tracked the monster; the placing of the nets, the unleashing of the dogs, the search for foot-tracks, the ardor which filled the hearts of the hunters, the sudden rush of the wild boar from the marshy places of the pool, the breaking and crashing of the trees of the wood by the animal's impulse, the shout or 'view hollo' of the party as he started off, the casting of javelins, the dispersion of the dogs, are all most charmingly described by the prince of Latin poets. Echion was the first to hurl his javelin at the beast, but he only grazed the bark of a tree; the next was Jason, and he aimed well, but his javelin, though it looked as if it would surely strike the wild boar's back, overshot the mark. Ampycides breathed a sacred prayer to Phœbus that he would guide his weapon aright; the javelin flew true, and struck the animal, but, alas! the spear head broke as it was being hurled through the air; the hog, now rendered more furious than ever, suddenly attacks his pursuers, and knocks over Eupalamon and Pelagon, who are at once taken away from the hunting-field. Poor Enæsimus was more unfortunate still, for his courage forsook him, and as he turned to flight, he received a mortal wound on the thigh. And the terror of Calydon whets his tusks upon the trunk of an oak tree and wounds another hunter. The twin brethren, Castor and Pollux ('nondum cælestia sidera') are conspicuous in the hunt, mounted on their snow-white steeds, and their unerring javelins would certainly have given the deathstroke to the beast had he not rushed into the thickest part of the covert, impervious to darts and riders. Telamon, too impetuous, stumbles over the root of a tree, and falls to the ground. Atalanta, most swift-footed of mortals, is conspicuous in the chase; she bends her bow, and is the first to draw blood. Meleager, the fair maiden's lover, rejoices more than herself at her success, and is the first to see and point out the blood to his comrades. The rest of the sportsmen blush for shame to see a woman give the first wound, and being very angry—ungallant gentlemen—now throw their javelins promiscously and without effect. One of them, an Arcadian youth, more jealous and boastful, and less pious than the rest, bids his fellow hunters see how man's skill shall prove superior to a woman's, and with his two-edged axe attacks the furious beast. Alas for the ill-fated youth! his blow merely falls upon the foot of the boar, which immediately seizes him and inflicts a mortal wound, and the ground is covered with his blood. Enraged on account of the death of Ancæus, Pirithous madly rushes to attack the beast, brandishing in his right hand his hunting spears; but he is stopped by the remonstrances of Theseus, who bids him remember the rashness of the slain Arcadian. So Pirithous hurls a javelin from a distance, well poised and well directed, but it is stopped by a branch of a Tuscan oak; Jason is more unlucky still, for his weapon pierces the sides of an unfortunate hound and pins him to the ground. And now the great Meleager, the director of the hunt, steps forth and hurls one after the other a couple of lances; the first strikes the ground, the second is better aimed, and pierces the boar right in the middle of the back. Without waiting a moment, Meleager rushes upon the wounded animal as he turns his body round in a circle and pours from his mouth foam mixed with blood; and engages him in close fight. By a well directed thrust with his boar-spear he buries the head deep into his shoulder, and the scourge of the fields of Calydon lies prostrate on the ground. Shouts of triumph rend the air, and hearty congratulations greet the successful hunter, while the carcase of the huge wild boar lies extended upon the ground; but even yet he is scarcely considered safe, and each man buries his own spear deep into the warm body of the creature.

Lions, leopards, and bears entered into the list of animals hunted by the ancient Greeks and Romans. Lions have long since disappeared from Europe, and we have no historical evidence to show that they were ever common over Greece; but there can be no doubt whatever that they were found in one district of Thrace, within the tract lying between the rivers Nestus and Achelous, as Herodotus and other ancient writers have told us. In Asia Minor they were more common, as the frequent allusions to them in Homer would seem to indicate. Lions and such like large beasts of prey were sometimes destroyed by armed men, who watched for their nocturnal visits to the plains and then attacked them. Pitfalls were frequently made for their capture. A large, round, and deep hole was dug in the ground, having a pillar of earth in the middle, upon the top of which an unhappy goat was fastened as a bait. The whole was surrounded by a high hedge, to prevent the wild beasts seeing over it. The lions hearing the bleating of the goat during the night, would run round this fence, and, seeing no opening in it, would leap over it and be caught. They were also hunted by men on horseback armed with spears, and were sometimes taken in strong nets. Illustrations of this mode of hunting them may be seen in Montfaucon's Antiquities, in which work may be especially mentioned one very curious plate representing a lion standing with his fore-feet upon a large circular shield, under which crouches a fallen hunter. Several men, with spears and shields as tall as themselves, stand in a row close together, each with his head appearing over the top of the shield. Another hunter is kneeling, guarded by his shield, expecting the lion to attack him next; another runs away with shield on back. The lion is evidently puzzled and much disappointed that he cannot get at the hunter, who is completely protected by his immense shield, which he has contrived to throw over his body as he fell.

EASTERN ASSAYS OF CALIFORNIA OUTCROPPINGS.

[Below we publish all the notices of Outcroppings that we find in our Eastern exchanges. We have no excuse to offer, for we do not know that any more interesting matter could be laid before our readers. Certainly, few books in the present century have been honored with an equal amount of notice. Bishop Colenso's work on the Pentateuch created some commotion, but the result, we fancy, proves that it is safer to meddle with Patriarchs than with Poets. To some extent, The Californian feels an interest in the discussion. More than half the poems which the little volume contained cropped out originally in these columns, and The Californian is prepared to back its contributors. If any literary journal can be shown upon this coast—yes, we will go further, and include this whole continent (of course, ruling out the magazines)—which has published as much original poetry—not verse merely, but poetry—as The Californian has since its first number was issued, we are very willing to exhibit files and pay forfeit, if the event proves that we are mistaken.]

CALIFORNIA POETRY.

A POETICAL claim on behalf of California is put forward in a little book bearing the imprint of A. Roman & Co., of San Francisco, and W. J. Widdleton of this city. It consists of a collection of stanzas from contributions by local poets to the California newspapers, and from material collected by a lady some years since for a similar volume. Some twenty new writers, most of them quite unknown in the Atlantic States, are here introduced to the public, and the ability shown in their selected stanzas is by no means inconsiderable. Scarcely any living poet need feel ashamed of having written Edward Pollock's descriptive lines, "The Chandos Picture." The couplets entitled "Evening," and beginning—

The air is chill, and the day grows late,
And the clouds come in through the Golden Gate—

are also worthy of praise.

E. G. Paige, better known as "Dow, Jr.," contributes a semic comic, semi-serious poem on "The Approach of Autumn." Emilie Lawson shows a poetic taste, and her lines, "Two Comrades in Arms," have been extensively copied in the eastern papers. They begin thus:

"Comrade! I hear the beating of a drum;
Have reinforcements come?"
"There is no sound, save a lost whippowil, Crying from yonder hill."

C. H. Webb is one of the best of the California poets. Among his verses we find this vivid little picture:

MY RIVAL.

Soft music swells out on the night,
The air is a-throb with perfume;
And the feet of the dancers fall light—
Yet Death crouches low in the room.

One stands him, all smiling and bland,
Just there where the tapestries fall;
The wine-cup he holds in his hand
Throws a dahlia of red on the wall.

His fool-face hot flushes with love,
And he whispers a name in his wine—
The white moon that looked from above,
And the stars know the woman is mine.

It were better he said him a prayer;
Were the man not a fool, he would feel
A shudder of death in the air,
And the sharp, sudden tingle of steel

See! he smiles to himself as he sips
Of his wine in the alcove apart;
Will he smile when my dagger's thin lips
Shall drink the red wine of his heart?

"Waiting for the Rain," by Annie A. Fitzgerald, and "Tom Darling," a humorous poem full of puns, by L. F. Wells, are worthy of notice; and the same may be said of Charles Warren Stoddard's lines entitled MARS.

Now Mars steals over the water:
He is marching down from the sky—
Great Mars, with his golden helmet,
And the golden flame in his eye.

The sea is still, for the ripples
Are hushed at the god's slow tread,
And a line of light is trailing
The wave, like a burning thread.

Sad Mars! he is wearied with marching,
And wandering off is he,
While he nods his yellow helmet,
And thrusts his lance in the sea.

Faltering Mars! with his marching
Wearied he seems to be;
While he tips his helmet and merges
His golden lance in the sea.

It is a singular fact that the poetry in this volume contains scarcely anything characteristic of California. Most of the stanzas could just as well have been written in New York, or Massachusetts, or England. The compiler, in this connection, remarks in the preface: "It might be expected that a country whose scenery is remarkable for sublimity and grandeur would have inspired some suitable expression here. But the attempts at descriptive and pastoral poetry have not been generally successful. Perhaps a monotonous climate lacking those vicissitudes of seasons which elsewhere inspire the imagination has obliged the poet to look oftener in his own heart for that spring and autumn from which so much imagery is supposed to flow, or in the fortunes of his fellow men, which are usually exempt from this climatic influence." We would add that Mrs. A. M. Shultz is the only poet represented in this book who seems to be awakened to enthusiasm by the scenery of California. Her lines, "The Song of the Flume," are so spirited that we cannot deprive our readers of their dashing melody and rhythm.

THE SONG OF THE FLUME.

Awake, awake! for the flaming east
Is red with the coming day:
My struggling breast disdains its rest,
And I haste o'er the hills away.
Up from the valley!—up from the plain!
Up from the river's side!
For I come with a gush, and a torrent's rush,
And there's wealth in my swelling tide.

I am fed by the melting rills that start
Where the sparkling snow-peaks gleam;
My course is free, and with greatest glee
I leap in the sun's broad beam.
Though torn from the channels deep and old
I have worn through the craggy hill,
Yet I flow in pride as my waters glide,
And there's mirth in my music still.

I sought the shore of the sounding sea
From the far Sierra's height,
With a starry breast and a snow-capped crest,
I foamed in a path of light;
But they bore me thence in a winding way—
They fettered me like a slave,
And as serfs of old were sold for gold,
So they bartered my soil-stained wave.

Through the dim tunnel, down the dark shaft,
Search for the shining ore;
Hoist it away to the light of day
Which it never has seen before!
Spade and shovel, mattock and pick—
Ply them with eager haste;
For my golden shower is sold by the hour,
And the drops are too dear to waste.

Lift me aloft to the mountain brow!
Fathom the deep blue vein!
And I'll sift the soil for the shining spoil,
As I sink to the valley again;
The swell of my swarthy breast shall bear
Pebble and rock away,
Though they brave my strength, they shall yield at length,
But the glittering gold shall stay.

Mine is no stern and warrior march,
Nor stormy trump and drum;
No banners gleam in my darkened stream,
As with conquering step I come;
But I touch the tributary earth
Till it owns a monarch's sway,
And with eager hand, from a conquered land,
I bear its wealth away.

Awake! awake!—there are loving hearts
In the land you left afar;
There are tearful eyes in the homes you prize,
As they gaze on the western star.
Then up from the valley!—up from the hill—
Then up from the river's side!
For I come with a gush, and a torrent's rush,
And there's wealth in my swelling tide!

[New York Evening Post.

—

OUTCROPPINGS.

We have read (somewhat to our own surprise, we confess,) nearly all there is in this little book, which came to us so pleasantly printed, with such a quaint outside of German quarto, and with each poem in it so dantily set with engraver's caprices of flower and fruit that we could not help giving it a friendly attention, and should now be glad to have found it much worthier perusal than we did. There are four or five genuine poems in the volume, and the remaining selections are rhymes which might interest the observer of this age's fatal facility of making verses. A great and unerring genius has winnowed the poetical vocabulary of base diction, and has enriched it with such opulence of expression, that any contemporary lady or gentleman of ordinary education and warmth of feeling may sit down after the perusal of Tennyson, and make much better verses than Dr. Johnson did, with all the lumber of antiquity at hand to supply him the material for his wooden effusions. If these facile geniuses lived long, we should find poetry worse than the plagues of Egypt, and the poets would infest all the dough-troughs (except their own empty ones) in the land. Happily, however, these myriad immortals are usually carried off by business, by marriage, and by subsidence of the spring-tide of youth, before they have time to pipe more than half-a-dozen songs, and then their immortality lies folded away in old newspapers till some one comes to make a collection of it.

As California has been peopled by the average culture and talent of the older States, and has yet had no time to develop a peculiar character of life and thought, there is no reason why the present collection of California verse should be different from a collection of Ohio verse or New England verse. At any rate, it is not; and these California poets rarely make mention of her climate and scenery; but sing, with an exile's fondness, of the seasons and landscapes known to us of the eastern shore of the continent. The fervor of California suns is palpable only in the erotic nature of some of the verse, which is often sweet and tender, and at times almost original. "Cupid Kissed Me" and "In the Pouts," by Ina D. Coolbrith, have a slight pathos and saucy charm quite their own; while "The Mother's Grief," by the same poet, is veritable and fine. One day the baby plays at the door, and tries to clutch the sunbeam on the threshold; and the next day the mother weeps as the sunbeam falls on the baby's bed:

"I weep to see its shining band
Reach, with a fond endeavor,
To where the little restless hands
Are crossed in rest for ever."

Miss Coolbrith is one of the real poets among the many poetic masqueraders in the volume; Emilie Lawson is another; and Mr. C. H. Webb is, say, half another. "Das Meermadchen" is a genuine ballad, and is marred by none of the prosaic lapses not to be noted without smiles and sadness in his other poems. "The Omen," by C. H. B., is also the fair expression of a true feeling. J. F. Bowman has three poems in the selection, one of which is a translation. The other two are both good; one, indeed, is so good that we must copy it:

THE WHOLE STORY.

When Jones was sixteen, he was bent
On one day being President.

At twenty-five, Jones thought that he Content as District Judge would be.

At thirty, he was much elated
When Mayor of Frogtown nominated.

But bootless all the nomination—
His rival Tompkins graced the station.

At forty-five his dreams had fled;
Hope and Ambition both were dead.

When from his toils he found release,
He died—a Justice of the Peace.

O youthful heart, so high and bold,
Thus is thy brief, sad story told!

[The Nation.

—

Mr. W. J. Widdleton has lately published a handsome little quarto, entitled "Outcroppings: Being selections of California Verse." It contains between forty and fifty pieces, the work of nineteen different writers, five of whom are ladies; and while they cannot be said to rise to the heights of poetry, they are certainly very creditable specimens of verse. We recognize two or three names, as C. H. Webb, who, we believe, was at one time on the staff of the New York Times, Edward Pollock, E. C. Paige ("Dow, Jr.,") Charles W. Stoddard, and James Linen, the latter a Scottish poet who published a volume of songs in this city some ten or fifteen years since; the rest are unknown to us. Mr. Webb comes the nearest to being a poet of any one in the volume; "The June Month," a poetic trifle of his, five stanzas long, is naive and pretty. There are also good comic points in "Tom Darling," by L. F. Wells.—Round Table.

—

This little volume is a genuine and unexceptionable witness to the spread and diffusion of intellectual cultivation in a region that might well claim a lenient judgment in matters of taste and literature, were any indulgence necessary. So far different is the case, that few miscellaneous collections of poetry rise to a higher average degree of merit than the present elegantly printed little volume. Many of the pieces it contains have gone the rounds of the newspapers in utter unconsciousness of the sources from whence they emanated. A little more "local color" might be desirable in the poems, but it must be recollected that scarcely any of the writers can have been born in California, and they undoubtedly carried with them to the land of their adoption the tastes and habits derived from the region of their birth. We hope that Messrs. Roman & Co. may find encouragement sufficient to bring out an annual volume of Outcroppings.—New York Times.

—

California Poets.—We have received from E. P. Dutton & Co. a charming little volume printed by Alford, and published by A. Roman & Co., of San Francisco, and W. J. Widdleton of New York, entitled Outcroppings, being Selections of California Verse. The volume does credit to the enterprising State from which it proceeds, and proves that the Muses are worshipped in the land where everybody was supposed to be digging into the veins of Mammon. There is a fervor, heartiness, and sincerity in the poems which will attract the reader from the first, while their literary workmanship is generally as good as their spirit is vigorous and inspiring. Few States could produce a better book of the kind, and it is deserving of a wide circulation on both sides of the Rocky Mountains.—Boston Transcript.

—

Outcroppings.—This little volume is a string of gems. Many of the poems will be easily recognized at once as old friends, and it will be enough for the lovers of poetry to be told that within the covers of this beautiful book are contained the choice productions of pens such as those of Edward Pollock, Lyman R. Goodman (whose "In the Swing" is so admired,) E. G. Paige, Emilie Lawson, Ina D. Coolbrith, C. H. Webb, Chas. W. Stoddard, W. A. Kendall, J. F. Bowman, Carrie Carleton, H. C. B., Annie A. Fitzgerald, B. P. Avery, L. F. Wells, Mrs. A. M. Shultz, and J. R. Ridge and many others. These productions, appearing first in the California papers, are reproduced under the above title, and will have a large sale from the Atlantic to the Pacific—Boston Evening Courier, Nov. 24.

—

A. Roman & Co., San Francisco, have published a beautiful little volume of the California poets, called Outcroppings. The volume contains selections from the effusions of a score of the songsters of the Golden State, most of which have appeared in fugitive forms during the last ten years. With two or three exceptions, the poems are of an excellent grade of merit, rising, in some instances, to a very high degree of poetic beauty. The volume is so beautifully printed, (we presume in New York,) that we are surprised at detecting occasional grave typographical errors.—Philadelphia Daily Evening Bulletin, Nov. 28.

—

The neat volume which Lee & Shepard receive from a California press, Outcroppings, being Selections of California Verse, is a collection of short pieces by various authors, representing the culture and poetic fancy of our countrymen and women in El Dorado. Some of the poems are very pleasing, some have ease and grace and much sweetness; and as a whole they are welcome and worthy of something more than that faint praise which damns.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"Bon, Harry Smith has one of the greatest curiosities you ever saw." "Don't say so! what is it?" "A tree that never sprouts, and becomes smaller the older it grows." "Well, that is a curiosity. Where did he get it?" "From California." "What is the name of it?" "Axletree—it once belonged to a California omnibus."

Two sons of Erin were standing by a hydraulic press, when one called out to the other: "Jim, I'd like to put yez under and squaze the divil out o' yez." "Would ye, indade, my boy?" was the answer—"squaze the divil out o' yez, an' there'd be nothing left!"

FROZEN TO DEATH!

ALONE ON THE ARCTIC SEA.

WERE I to chronicle the events of the day or indeed to write down the story of each week, in this my first voyage, I don't know when I should finish my story. I must tell it therefore as briefly as I can.

We soon left San Mayon and sailed northward to prosecute our search for Sir John Franklin. Our men were as anxious as the captain, and under his direction Bobus fitted up a cask, which, stuffed with wool and straw, was hoisted up to the masthead and there fixed. It was called "a crow's nest," and there a man, relieved every half hour, stood with his glass in hand, looking out for a sail, for land, or for any present danger.

I had myself mounted one day, watching with Bobus the progress of a fine iceberg which floated down towards us, with a slightly rotatory motion. We had not been watching long, when a sight was presented which we had not before seen.

"Look, Bobus!" cried I in amazement; "look there, there's a man!"

"As sure as my name's Jack Co—!" He did not finish the sentence because he was so surprised, for there, seated on the berg, in a cavity which formed round him like a natural arm-chair, with his head leaning on the hand, and his arm on his knee, was an English sailor. His hair blew wildly about, and his hat was off, and his garments, loose and covered with hoar frost, blew towards us, so that I thought he beckoned us.

"Yo, ho! shipmate. Yo, ho!" cried Bobus, frantically. "Yo, ho! What cheer?"

The figure never stirred nor answered. The wind blew out his hair and ragged garments as before.

The men were all astir on deck, for they saw the figure, and presently the captain came aloft with his glass and looked at him earnestly.

Slowly the berg bore down upon us; the helm was altered, so that the ship wore round and passed the berg at some seventy feet distance, as nearly as we could with safety to ourselves. Bobus, the most hopeful of us all, continued to shout as our countryman came near.

"An English jib," cried Bobus. "One of Sir John's men, as I make out; yo ho! shipmate, yo ho!"

"It's no use shouting, Bobus," cried the captain. "He's been dead for weeks, if not for years. He never will speak more."

The words had hardly left the captain's mouth, than a cold wind blew from the iceberg, and the atmosphere, as it does always near those immense masses of ice, grew colder. The ship wore off from the berg; but at the same time, as we neared it, the very face of the man was presented to us, and we could see the sunken cheeks, the pale lips, and the eyes. They were open.

"Cap'en Seth Smith," said Bobus, solemnly; "that man's alive."

"As dead as last year, or as Pontius Pilate," returned Captain Seth. "Yo ho! there on deck; run out a gun, and, when I give the word, fire."

We had a long gun on deck, with which our doctor, a learned man, had been endeavoring to calculate distances by the reverberations and echoes. Under his orders it was quickly charged with powder only, and made ready, and as the berg floated by, the gunner applied the portfire, and an explosion followed, the smoke of which had no sooner cleared away, than he saw the figure rock slightly backwards and then topple forwards and slide down swiftly the steep sides of the iceberg into the sea. All looked with horror into the deep ocean, but the waves closed over the dead man's head, and he did not rise again to the surface.

"Ah!" said the captain, "I knew how it was, he was frozen to death upon that berg."

"How did he get there?" said the doctor.

"Heaven only knows. It might have been that the turning of the iceberg overwhelmed his ship, and he being upon the mast jumped off to the berg, only to see his vessel and all hands go down."

Bobus had told me that one of the chief dangers of a vessel, in this northern ocean, was the danger of being crushed by a turning berg. They are often prodigiously high, but whatever their height above water, they have six times the depth below. That is, when a mountain of ice floats, six sevenths of its bulk are submerged, so that if it be only fifty feet high it is three hundred feet deep. The temperature of the water also being higher than that of the air, the water being in fact warmer, the ice in the water gradually melts till the bottom becoming lighter than the top, it turns over. Of course, if any ship be near it, the ship is crushed and borne down.

"No," cried the doctor, "he is not the last of the band; he may be one of Sir John's men. He may have come from that mysterious spot where icebergs are formed, and where Sir John has penetrated the Arctic Ocean Sea."

All started at the words. Each hoped that they might prove true. Every one in the ship had long ago discussed the doctor's theory, that beyond the zone of ice which bound in those frozen regions like an iron wall, there is a vast and probably a fresh water ocean on the banks of which the icebergs were massed together; for we knew that, except at the entrance of immense rivers, no large quantity of fresh water, such as is contained in a berg, could exist.

"Ah," cried old Bobus, turning to the doctor, "I bean't a book-learned man, I bean't; but what you says about the open sea is feasible. About ship, Cap'en Seth, about ship then, and let us away to find out Sir John."

Cap'en Seth pointed to the iceberg and smiled sadly. "Ah, Bobus," said he, "'tis easy to talk; but how are we to 'bout ship and pierce through eternal ice? Why the great Parry when he got to latitude 81, abandoned his ship, got up sledges, and went north; but the drift of the ice carried him further south than he could go, and taking his bearings after a long journey, he found himself four miles further south than when he started."

"Disappointing enough," said the doctor.

"Ay, ay, but what was he to do. Nature is a great giantess, and conquers the most bold of us."

"But she will be subdued in the long run," continued the doctor. "Who knows but we may some day find out something which will mitigate these perpetual snows and icy cold?"

"Ay, who knows?" said the captain, with a shiver. "Meantime, Bobus, jump into the boat and get aboard the berg. Let us see if that poor Jack Tar has left any memorial of himself."

We were all willing to be of the party, and I regarded it as a great favor that Bobus took me with him in the boat. The iceberg had floated a little way past to the stern: but we soon pulled to it. The narrowest part only of it had been towards us, for it had many sides, some broad and narrow. We easily made out the place where the poor fellow, numbed with cold, sat down to die; but we could not reach it from that place, for the ice rose in a perpendicular wall about thirty feet high. We therefore rowed round the berg, which we found to be nearly a mile and a half in circumference. On the opposite side to where we first saw our countryman, irregular steps formed by the ice gave us a foothold, and some of the stoutest of our party going first were soon on the berg.

We traversed it as well as we could; but found no traces of our companion, as some had presumed we should, till we came to his resting place; there we found only three things. A pipe, empty indeed, but blackened with smoke; a jack-knife, tied with lanyard, such as sailors use, and an empty meat-can—one, indeed, such as had been sent out by the Government, and by those who fitted out these Northern expeditions. We seized these eagerly, and looked around for more relics of the poor fellow, but found none.

"He ain't left no scrap of writing, Ned," said Bobus, "to tell who he was, and how he died, or to send his last love to his sweetheart."

"How could he, old spooney?" cried Pilbeam, "he couldn't call for a pen an' ink, could he?"

Pilbeam had not forgotten the rattan, and was the only one in our ship who was discontented and ill-natured. Bobus looked at him with some contempt, but did not answer.

"Let's scrape away the ice," said one of the sailors, "maybe the Jack Tar's left some notion o' who he was." We did so, but found no memorial; the meat-can had been carefully wedged in a fissure, and the knife and pipe were laid on the top of it. We were looking forlorn at the place, when a gun from the ship gave us the signal to return. When we looked in the direction of the shot, we could hardly make our vessel out.

"Let us make haste back, Bobus," said I, "or else we shall undergo the same fate as our poor friend"

"Ay, ay," cried Bobus, and away we scampered over the block to the place where our boat was moored, and where one of our men was in charge. We found the descent much harder than the ascent, and were indeed so long before we all got down into the boat and round the angle of the berg, that the thick mist and fog parted us from our ship. The effect of being alone in the Arctic regions, or at any rate seeming so far away from our companions and hidden from their sight, hardly knowing where we might drift, or whether some of the immense masses of loose ice might not overwhelm us, was by no means pleasant. Under the influence of Bobus, however, none of us despaired, and as the others rowed and he steered according to the direction of a man at the head, who looked out for the masses of ice, I was employed in firing a pistol off which I held, so that we should give notice to the ship where we were.

We soon had the relief of hearing them reply, and so pulled straight through the fog to the Lively Bessey.

They were very glad when we got on board, for accidents in those seas are frequent enough, and our good captain was anxious to bring his men home all safe. "Well," said he, "Bobus, what trace have you found of our countryman?"

"None, Cap'en Seth," said Bobus; "none 'cept these," and he produced the clasp-knife, the tobacco pipe, and the meat-can.

"We didn't find no scrap of writin'," said Bobus in a melancholy tone.

"Eh!" returned the doctor, who had taken the meat-can. "How do you know? Have you looked here?"

He unscrewed the lid of the can as he spoke with a strong wrench, for it had rusted together, and opening it, turned it to the light at the binnacle. There, sure enough, were letters in rude capitals, worked on the inside of the lid with the point of the seaman's knife: "John Trueman, Ship Sarah, September, 1838. Left alone on the ice. May the Lord have mercy!"

"Poor fellow! poor fellow! What ship was that, captain?"

"The ship Sarah," said Captain Seth. "I don't remember her name among any of the Arctic searches. Maybe she was some whaler, driven out far north, and then overwhelmed as we guessed before."

All this time poor Bobus was displaying very lively emotion; now clasping his hands, now his forehead. "Give me the box, doctor," said he, "and let me look at the handwritin'; I know summat of that ship."

"Yes," he continued, as he took the tin, "that good ship was a North Sea whaler, and as good and tight a ship as ever sailed; and this here John Trueman," he struck the box with his great fist as he said it, "was my brother-in-law," and married my only sister, whose name likewise was Sarah, long years ago. The good ship and good John never came back again, no, never, never, and John's parents and wife, who never mistrusted him, thought as how she had foundered in deep water and no hands had come to land. She, poor girl, lived on a little while, and then died; but John's parents live yet, and John I seed to-day, a sitting with his head resting, and thinking of his poor young wife and his friends at home, afore the iceberg came and touched him, and turned him into death."

The good old sailor rubbed the back of his sealskin glove across his eyes. His companions were silent. "Yes," he continued, "not that I am sorry for John, I've no doubt he had a hard struggle; but, thank God, he is at peace. Peace and calm rest upon and with him. If he could rise up from yonder wave, he wouldn't see his true love again; but his spirit knows and loves her now. And if so be as I do get home, I shall tell the old people how John Trueman died sitting at his post, and waiting quietly for the summons to go aloft."

The old seaman rubbed his moist eyes as he spoke, and took off his fur cap and pointed upwards. His gray hair streamed upon the cold night wind by the light of the binnacle, and made him look not unlike John Trueman himself. "Give me the articles, cap'en," said he; "I think I may constitoot myself residooary legatee." He smiled faintly when he took them.

"I am not sorry, Cap'en Seth," he said, "that I went on this voyage with you; I kinder thought as I should meet with John, and now I have, and now my mind is at ease."

He looked down to the tin as he spoke, and re-read the words on the lid. "All alone on the ice," he said. "Poor fellow, all alone! Well, well, there may be others as are not quite all alone. There may be others as have lost all their boats, but have not lost heart, and are now abandoned on the shores o' that there open sea the doctor speaks of. Bout ship, cap'en, bout ship, and let us find 'em; steer away for the open Arctic Sea!"

THE ETIQUETTE OF SMOKING.

IT is not our intention to enter into any discussion of the utilities or the inutilities, the pleasures or the mischiefs of tobacco. We accept its use as a fixed fact, something which may, possibly, be improved away by the time we have abolished all our custom-houses, cleaned the streets of New York, and the relations of labor and capital are satisfactorily settled, but to the present existence of which we can neither shut our eyes nor our noses. We propose to concern ourselves merely with its bounds and regulations.

The great difference between smoking and various practices about the morality or propriety of which men differ is its continual and unavoidable obtrusion upon non-smokers. If Deacon Coldstream has forsworn fermented beverages, nothing in the world obliges him to set foot in the fashionable dining-room, the country bar-room, or any other place where what lecturers delight to miscall the "wine-cup" is wont to circulate. If Brother Maw-worm regards all actors and actresses as necessarily children of the evil one, he has no possible reason or excuse for venturing inside a playhouse, and if he does not go to see the players he may be pretty sure they will not come to see him. The Puritan who anathematizes the memory of St. Vitus need never hear a fiddle or see a caper; and if the vegetarian is sometimes exposed to the smell of roast beef, at least the savor does not sicken him. But the ordinary course of his business or pleasure is continually bringing Tom, who does not smoke, into contact with Dick and Harry, who do. Smith, whose cigar is more necessary to him than his dinner, and whose every garment reminds you of the tobacconist, meets habitually not only Jones and Brown, but Mesdames Jones and Brown, to whom the odor of the weed is positively nauseating. Drinking and dancing and many dear delights may be carried on with a certain amount of secrecy and seclusion; but a man cannot smoke a cigar under a bed.

The mere police of the thing, the saying by law that men shall not smoke in this or that public building or place or conveyance, is comparatively easy, though even here there are some inconsistencies and difficulties. How absurd, for instance, that a man may carry his pipe through Central Park, and a lady may not carry her nosegay! London regulations allow you to buy a cigar in an arcade (answering to the French "passage,") but not to smoke it there.

But the great trouble is when you come to the extra legal relations of the subject. Between the smokers and the non-smokers there must be a continual self-sacrifice on one or the other side. There is a pleasant club, large or small. As men go, probably three-fourths of the members smoke, half the other fourth don't mind it, and the remaining eighth are not merely annoyed by the customary cloud, but actually unable to sit in it for any length of time. This eighth may comprise some of the very best men in the club, but as they cannot give the law to the majority, the practical result is that they are banished from the fullest and pleasantest meetings. A gentleman and lady are walking or travelling together; he suspects that a cigar would annoy her, she more than suspects that the want of one annoys him, and thus the pleasure of their intercourse is considerably impaired, and so in fifty cases of everyday occurrence. Under these circumstances a review of the unwritten usages of society in different countries, with regard to this habit, may not prove altogether uninteresting or uninstructive.

To begin with the Old World, we find that European custom in this, as in many other social matters, may be broadly divided into two codes, the English and the Continental. The English rules in theory, and, to a great extent, in practice, are very strict. Smoking is presumed to be a vice, and regarded much as wine-drinking is, by public opinion, in most parts of New England. Youths of eighteen or nineteen, whom we should call young men, and the English call boys, are forbidden to smoke at the public schools, under pain of corporal punishment; at the military academies (some of them, at least,) under pain of expulsion. For a gentleman to be seen in a fashionable street of London, by day, with a cigar, is almost as compromising as if he were to be seen there intoxicated, and no professional man would dare to sport his "weed" in Regent street. No respectable hotel will allow a guest to smoke in his own parlor; and at very few hotels (those frequented by foreigners form the chief exception) is there any accommodation for smokers. The dining-room of a private house is a temple never to be profaned by the odor of tobacco, even should there be no ladies within a quarter of a mile. At some country-seats it is a regulation, actually printed and stuck up, hotel-fashion, that no smoking is allowed anywhere in the house; consequently, most of the gentlemen betake themselves after breakfast to the stables—about the last place, for obvious reasons, where smoking should be carried on. In short, your English gentleman, or business man of the old school, regards a cigar or pipe in much the same light as some other indulgences abstractly vicious, but which, nevertheless, a great many will have.

Such is John Bull's etiquette of smoking, a queer social fiction, and a striking example of the peculiar kind of hypocricy which pervades English society. Perhaps we ought rather to speak of it in the past tense, for the cloud-compelling propensities of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales may have modified it within a few years. Shortly after Queen Victoria's accession, when her love of riding had given an additional impulse to the already well-developed equestrian taste of her fair subjects, an enthusiastic cigar-merchant exclaimed: "Oh, if Her Majesty would only take to smoking, like the Queen of Spain, what a lift it would give our trade!" If that vender of weeds still lives, how he must bless the Prince!

On crossing over to the Continent we find a great change. In the first place, it is nearly a matter of course that, as a general rule (some exceptions will come up a little further on,) no man objects to smoking where only men are present, even when he has the law on his side, as in the compartment of a railway-carriage. His consent will be asked out of courtesy, but it is taken for granted that he will not refuse it. Not only does no gentleman hesitate to smoke in the street, but in public dining-rooms the practice is generally allowed, except for an hour or two before dinner, and cigars are frequently lighted before dessert is finished or the ladies have left the table. As to the rule with ladies and families of your acquaintance, the hat and the cigar stand about on the same footing; and the former is a pretty good measure of the latter. Thus, you would not enter a house or apartment with your hat on unless you were on very familiar terms, indeed, with its inmates; neither would you with your cigar. You lift your hat on stopping to address a lady in a public promenade, you also throw away your cigar (a fortiori if you are going to be introduced to her,) and so on. The same correspondence of hat and cigar holds good in relation to personages of superior rank, and to entering offices for the transaction of business, public or private.

Lax as these rules are in theory, the Continental practice continually tends to loosen them. The infamous desire to appear to have more or less réussi avec every desirable woman of his acquaintance, will often tempt a Frenchman to violate his own code of manners purposely; and in some other countries the use of tobacco is so nearly universal as to overcome all ordinary rules of ceremony. A German prince or general may, by some extraordinary dispensation of Providence not smoke, himself, but his friends and officers will smoke under his very nose. True, he might stop them by a word, but it would be at the cost of such unpopularity as even a German potentate does not like to encounter. Besides, wherever the ladies have, in any appreciable number, adopted the practice, the men are, of course, relieved from most of their scruples in that direction. Now female smoking (to the extent of cigarettes) is very general in Russian society, tolerably so in Italian, and we suspect more common in French and German than most French and German ladies would allow before strangers.

Recrossing the ocean in a southerly direction, we come upon, to use a pet newspaper phrase, the carnival of tobacco, at its original headquarters. All the Spanish-American nations smoke, literally without distinction of place.

The first gentlemen of Havana light up between the acts at their opera. The first ladies of Mexico and Peru join their guests in a cigar (not a cigarette) after dinner.

Our own practice in this as in many other things is a compromise between the insular and continental European, with rather more tendency to the latter. Our public etiquette is nearly that of the Continent, though much laxer in regard to business offices, and much stricter as concerns public dining-rooms. Where ladies are more especially concerned, the English element of our civilization is apt to predominate, and so it does in this particular. A general impression of fastness, joined to the popular delusion that drinking and smoking go together, makes us regard a lady smoker with something very like abhorrence. Seriously, and without wishing to advance a paradox, we think a very good case might be made out for ladies who smoke; but to develop the argument would be foreign to our purpose. We are only dealing with facts, and must accept as our theory, because it is mainly true in fact, that North American ladies do not smoke, and that the smell of tobacco is more or less disagreeable to the majority of them. And this admission involves more than is apparent on the face of it. The old maxim that the effect ceases with the cause does not apply to tobacco, the after-odor of which is often more disagreeable to non smokers than the immediate result of its consumption. Hence a gentleman should purify himself thoroughly after smoking before venturing into ladies' society, and a room where gentlemen are accustomed to smoke should be carefully ventilated and pastilled before it is used by ladies.—The Nation.

A JAVANESE SERAGLIO.

As no man except the Sultan is, upon any pretence permitted within the precincts of the seraglio, I here insert a description from the pen of a lady, who saw and conversed with these Javanese houries. In a low kind of bungalow, some distance from the main building, not, however, so far off but that we could distinctly hear the sounds of music and mirth from the joyous scene we had just left, were assembled several women, mostly very young, and all dressed in a costly native fashion. Some of the party were playing a Chinese game of cards. All looked up at our entrance, but soon resumed their occupation, alternately playing, chewing tobacco, betel and seri leef, and using their spittoons, one of which was placed by the side of each person. Most of them were good-looking, with magnificent dark eyes, drooping lids, and long, curling lashes. They make use of an immense quantity of powder, which, though very glaring, most probably tends to heighten their charms. Their hair was generally dressed with care, being all drawn back from the face and arranged in two loops behind, in which champaka and molor flowers were inserted by some, while others wore diamond pins. The ear was made unnaturally large by immense ear-rings, in shape exactly like a small cotton reel, the centre of each end being studded with brilliants. The large holes through which these singular ornaments were thrust, are bored at a very tender age, and the apertures are filled from time to time with gradually larger and heavier ear-rings, until the lobes finally become so unnaturally elongated.

Unfortunately, the beauty of the Javanese in general is spoiled by a prevalence of bad noses. It is very rarely one comes across a good nose, but when that feature is perfect, the face is usually pretty, provided always the mouth is kept closed, for, from the constant use of serigambier tobacco, etc., their teeth are very black. This unfortunately is considered a beauty. In children of thirteen or fourteen you see frequently beautiful teeth, like rows of pearls, either undergoing, or about to undergo, this disfiguring process. Amidst the group before us, I was mostly struck by a very young girl, whose age, I thought, could not exceed twelve or thirteen, and from whose face, though she appeared thoughtful, silent and sad, the childish look had not yet disappeared. Who knew but that the instinct of her heart already told her a better destiny might have been hers than that to which she was probably devoted? She was doubtless intended to be the new toy of a middle-aged monarch, and although she might revolt against her lot, she could do nothing to change it. She was her master's property until he tired of her, and sought new charms. Most of them, however, looked cheerful and happy, and I was told, by one who knew many of them personally, that they are generally content with their lot, being allowed no end of finery and silly amusements. Turning to look at the numerous birds which hung in cages around, I could not help thinking how true was the comparison which likened these captive minstrels to the poor prisoners who attended to and petted them.

THE BULL THAT SAW THE ELEPHANT; OR, A TUSSLE FOR THE ROAD.—In Columbiana County, Ohio, resides an old fellow renowned for his belligerent disposition, who is known as Friend Shavey. Born and bred a Quaker, he was long since read out of meeting on account of his quarrelsome propensities, but he still pertinaciously clings to the plain clothes and the plain language of his earlier days, possibly as a protection against the wrath he was continually provoking by his overbearing and irritating demeanor. He is always the owner of the crossest dog in the neighborhood, the most troublesome, breachy steers, etc., and is continually in hot water with some of his neighbors in consequence of the depredations committed by his unruly live stock. A short time since Van Amburgh's Menagerie, travelling through Columbiana, was obliged to pass his residence. A little before daylight, Nash, the keeper of the elephant Tippoo Saib, as he was passing over the road with his elephant, discovered this pseudo Quaker seated upon the roadside, watching a bull which he had turned upon the road, and which was pawing, bellowing, and throwing up a tremendous dust generally. In fact, from the fury of the animal's demonstrations, one would readily have taken him for one of the identical breed that butted a locomotive off a bridge.

"Take that bull out of the way!" shouted Nash, as he approached.

"Proceed with thy elephant," was the reply.

"If you don't take that bull away, he will get hurt," continued Nash, approaching, while the bull redoubled his belligerent demonstrations.

"Don't trouble thyself about the bull, but proceed with thy elephant," retorted Friend Shavey, rubbing his hands with delight at the prospect of an approaching scrimmage, the old fellow having great confidence in the invincibility of his bull, which was really the terror of the whole country around.

Tippoo Saib came on with his uncouth, shambling gait; the bull lowered his head and made a charge directly upon the elephant. Old Tippoo, without even pausing in his march, gave his cow-catcher a sweep, catching the bull on the side, crushing in his ribs with his enormous tusks, and then raised him about thirty feet in the air, the bull striking upon his head as he came down, breaking his neck and killing him instantly.

"I'm afraid your bull has bent his neck a little," shouted Nash, as he passed on.

"Bent the devil," cried old Shavey, with a troubled look at his defunct bull; "thy elephant is too hefty for my beast, but thee will not make so much out of the operation as thee supposes. I was going to take my family to thy show, but I'll see thee and thy show blowed to blazes before I go one step, and now thee may proceed with thy elephant, and be d--d, please;" the "please" being added as Shavey took a second look at the proportions of the stalwart elephant-keeper."

SHALL AND WILL.—The incoherent use of will for shall in the future tense and first person, seems to be increasing among us. We mean, of course, its use to give a simple statement in the future, without any act of the will implied. It comes from the South. In this particular the native habit of New England has fortunately been right. Our public men have brought the evil northward, for the most part. They took it in Congress, or in the departments at Washington. It is likely that a few years ago it was thought to be fashionable, because so the Southerners did. The reports of Congressional proceedings used to be full of it. "If this motion is laid on the table we will be unable to take it up," etc. Some of our best generals write now in the same style. Indeed, most of our army men do. And, as we have said, the evil seems to be growing. There is hardly a single issue of a newspaper that does not contain some specimen of it. By an error of the same sort would is used for should. "I sent word that if he was not here by noon we would be beaten," and the like. It is a pity that the bad habit should spread all over the country. Here among us, fortunately, the only rule one needs to follow as to these words is to use them in the way that is most natural; for our habits, at least among the common people, are all right. Let nobody, trying to be in the fashion, ape the false style he sees in some public man's letter, or hears from some great general's lips. If the bad usage is suffered to spread, the time will soon come when, to speak ourselves in that tongue, we will have nobody among us that knows how to talk.—Springfield Republican.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s, 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 20. 1866.

OUTCROPPINGS COME AGAIN.

ON another page we republish all the notices of Outcroppings which reach us through the columns of Eastern exchanges. The Bulletin, with that courtesy and generosity which have made it the favorite of its contemporaries and its proprietors so popular among men, has spared us the trouble of reproducing any of the vituperations which have been written on this coast, by giving up its own columns to their republication. This was scarcely, however, a work of love so much as of necessity, for the dead blank left where the telegraphic news was formerly found must be filled. Consequently no special obligations are expressed or implied on either side.

As a general thing it may be said of the criticisms thus embalmed in the amber of the Bulletin's columns, that their knowledge of poetry is about up to the standard of a schoolboy, and their grammar somewhat below. Any one wishing to know how criticisms should not be written had better read the compilation—it would also be advisable to peruse the criticism which that journal ventured on its own responsibility. The reflection of the reader will be that if too much learning has made people mad, a want of it makes them idiots, and that whatever nonsense the poets may have written, it is infinitely more valuable than such sense. He will find that the whole interior press was in a state of eruption with epithets. And all because the madrigals of a McDonald, the epithalamiums of a Goodman, and the lively chansonettes which have from time to time rippled from the pens of a McCarthy or a McMuggins, were omitted from a volume which could scarcely have printed the names of all these sucking bards—let alone a list of their works. Enough stones were thrown at the editor to build his monument, and enough mud was showered upon one of the contributors—erroneously conjectured to be concerned in the compilation of the volume—to cement that monument together. In nature these notices were essentially alike, the only variation being in length; and here the palm must be awarded to one which had origin in the sage brush and might have been written by a sage-femme—for it was filled in with the minutest details of a profession which is not commonly canvassed in public. These bulletins being written, almost without exception, by men who do not know an iambus from an omnibus, or a pentameter from a potato, their value as poetic criticisms and the reason of the omission of the epics of the authors from the volume will be at once appreciated and understood.

The notices which we reproduce from critical journals of the East are in the main good. There is an affectation of dilettanteism about some of them, an assumption of patronizing superiority, which amuses rather than provokes, for it is not ill-natured. For this we imagine the editor of the book is in great degree responsible, since it is from his preface that they take their cue. It was scarcely necessary, we think, for him to appear hat in hand in the attitude of an apology for those whom he introduced before an excuse was asked of him for their appearance. And we imagine that there are a number of the contributors who would have refrained from appearing at all had they known that the voice of Bret the Baptist would be heard crying in the wilderness before them, in an attempt to make the path straight. Why did he not throw in a leavening lump or two of his own verse, and so save the necessity for a deprecating preface? It would have added materially to the success, as well as to the interest of the book.

The critic of the Nation naively confesses his surprise on finding some of the verses "sweet and tender, and at times almost original." He traces the "erotic nature" of some of the verse to "the fervor of California suns," which indicates that his knowledge of the peculiarities of our climate is neither extended enough nor sufficiently accurate to enable him to judge very discriminatively of what Mr. Bret calls "climatic influences." We scarcely think the gentleman would find himself very erotically inspired, if he were caught out on one of our July afternoons, a fog rolling in from the sea, no overcoat on, and one of the peculiar zephyrs which prevail at that season of the year tearing out his hair by the roots. And he does Bowman great injustice in supposing that he has never written better verses than the little couplets copied. Our word for it, that lyric of Frogtown is not "Bowman's Best." The most extended notice which the book receives is from the Evening Post, and if, as the Morning Call plausibly supposes and positively asserts, it be written by the editor, William Cullen Bryant—the laudari a laudato viro is not wanting in this instance. The most fair and generous notice comes from the Times. A reason for the lack of "local color" in the verse is found, not in climatic influences, but in the simple and very palpable fact that the writers were not born in California, but adopted it as their home after their habits of thought, feeling, and expression were fixed. The critic very sensibly assumes that a bullfinch brought out here, after having learned its notes at home, would probably pipe about the same as before, though the native quail has a different whistle from that of the Eastern bird. And he recognizes the fact that very many of the pieces have been floating upon the waves of ultramontane journalism for a year or two past, without credit to either the author or the paper in which they originally appeared. From the fact that these pieces have been taken at second-hand so gladly, we think we have ample grounds for venturing the assertion that they would still more gladly have been accepted as original contributions. And when these same journals, which have leaned upon our poets' arms in their weekly walks, turn around and pat them upon the head, and remark that they are glad to see how well they are learning to toddle, we feel like entering a very emphatic protest. There is an outspoken candor and sincerity in the Times' criticism which we like. Without any weak preludes, qualifying phrases, regrets, or invidious comparisons, it says of the little volume what every unprejudiced mind must acknowledge "few miscellaneous collections of poetry rise to a higher degree of merit." Going a step farther we maintain that the book contains a number of poems—not pieces of verse—which would find admittance to the most exigeant magazines, and very few that would be refused by any literary journal if contributed to it, as they have been to California journals, gratuitously. Poetry, unfortunately, is not paid for in this country—let us at least give our bards that praise which is their due, and which the verdict of the press of older states, quite as entitled to critical pretensions as our own, is not slow to accord them.

LEGISLATIVE SAFETY-VALVES.

WE are very glad, indeed, to observe that boiler explosions have at last arrested the attention of those who make laws. The present Legislature has taken the matter in hand, and it may be considered as definitely settled. We rather regret that the representative wisdom of the cow counties had not turned its attention boiler-ways a little earlier—before the explosion of the Yosemite, for instance—for we have a vivid impression that, had this been done, that explosion would not—nay, could not—have happened. But better late than never. It is all right now. A Committee of Investigation has been appointed, and the fragments of the Yosemite's boiler will be handled by them as knowingly, and discussed as critically, as scattered turnips might be by an equal number of donkeys. We mean no reflections upon the Committee by the comparison—which, like the bo's whistling, did itself—but, on the contrary, a compliment, for donkeys are popularly supposed to be perfectly at home when turnips are before them. And we venture the prediction that our Committee will prove equally competent.

It is only necessary to pass a law that boilers can not, shall not, must not explode under any circumstances whatever, and the thing is done at once. It is as easy as rolling off a log—or what is equivalent—as log-rolling. Do not allow boilers to explode owing to "circumstances over which they have no control." Make the law severe, stringent, imperative, and we may slumber as safely over a high-pressure boiler as over a teakettle, with the lid off, and no fire in the stove.

Of course, it is fair to infer that steamboat companies are to blame. Clearly enough, it is for their interest to build magnificent boats, and lavish all the glories of the upholsterer's and gilder's art upon the saloons and staterooms, with a direct view to having them blown into the upper air, after a few months' service. A boiler constructed of rotten iron, with two or three holes in it—a sort of hair-trigger boiler, so to speak, ready to go off at a touch—and attended by an incompetent engineer, would be provided expressly for the purpose. And the captains—who are in most instances large stockholders in the companies—would take their stand directly over the boilers while on duty, and sleep above them while off, with the laudable ambition of being blown higher and further, and into smaller pieces, than any one else on board. A few accidents involving the loss of two or three boats would enhance the market value of the Company's stock; the loss of a few hundred passenger lives would add materially to its reputation; overland travel would become entirely extinct, and the travelling community would throng the offices, clamoring for season tickets up and down the river, and to the distant ports of the earth. Make it evident, by a few practical demonstrations, that a man's chance of getting safely from San Francisco to Sacramento, by steamboat, would about equal those of his arriving at the latter point, whole-skinned and his wig on, if shot in that direction from a huge cannon mounted on Broadway wharf, and very little else remains for a steam navigation company to do to establish its interests upon a permanent and paying basis. All this is as clear as a pikestaff—or as two pikestaffs, for that matter. Starting out with an idea that such a course of action is a company's policy, the Committee cannot possibly go wrong, and the result of their investigations cannot fail to prove eminently satisfactory to the public.

We respectfully recommend to the attention of the Legislature the suggestion of one of the most learned judges that ever did honor to any bench. In a discussion upon the best means of preventing such accidents, he counselled that the owners of steamboats be made responsible to the amount of $100,000 for every life lost by boiler explosions. This would evidently benefit the travelling public to an immense extent: rates of passage would be reduced to a merely nominal sum, new water routes to points of growing interest would be speedily opened: and, as persons having nothing particular to do, and large families to provide for, would take to steady going to and fro upon the face of the waters, in the hope of being blown up, travel would become immense. Thus every one would be benefitted. In such an affair as that of the Yosemite the steamboat owners would only have had to pay $10,000,000 to widows and orphans—which, besides assisting the charities of the world, would have encouraged them to build new boats with superior accommodations for the comfort of transient customers.

We are glad to see the course which newspapers generally adopt in event of an accident to a steamboat. Nothing can be fairer, in the light of all the reasons above enumerated, than to conclude that the owners are to blame, that they have acted throughout with malice prepense, and that it is the duty of independent journalism to pitch into them indiscriminately and unscrupulously, and without the slightest regard to facts—only moved by the benevolent intention of exciting the popular mind against the losel owners to the greatest possible degree.

But we suggest that, having legislated against boiler explosions, cannon be taken in hand. It is well known that during the war just ended very serious damages happened to our forces from the bursting of ordnance. An "engineer hoisted by his own petard" became a very common sight to see. In the turrets of our iron-clads, in the casemates of fortifications, the huge guns which latter day science has moulded were constantly splintering their sides and hurling death into the ranks they were intended to protect. Very likely Government, that ordered the guns, was in league with the contractors who furnished them, and the captains and lieutenants of the batteries were also in the plot. True, they had all passed inspection: had been subjected to severer tests than would ever be put to them in actual service, and it would not seem at first thought that Government had any special interest in bursting its own guns and killing its own men. But this conclusion cannot for a moment be adopted: some thing or some one must be made responsible, and the largest organization must be selected to bear the brunt. To suppose that, perhaps, the severe trial test to which the guns were subjected, so strained the metal that it gave way when a less amount of explosive power was generated, would pave the way for the acceptance of a just and rational explanation of the casualty—something which could not for a moment be thought of.

To argue that ever since the invention of gunpowder and the application of steam to mechanical purposes, accidents have occurred, and that they will continue to occur until the one agent is emasculated and the other bleached and shorn of its dangerous forces, does not weigh in the balance a moment. And, revenons a nos vapeurs, to conclude that steamboat owners are quite as much interested in putting safe boilers into their boats, and guarding in every possible way against explosions and losses of life, will not be accepted as an explanation if it be determined to create a number of emolumentary offices, despatching a number of tinkers around the country, to beat upon every teakettle and boiler that it contains, wearying the public ear with their din, and the pockets of proprietors with their extortions. Speed the good work.

WE learn by a private letter from Madrid, that Mme. Agatha States did not make a failure in her début there—the correspondence of a morning paper to the contrary notwithstanding. She met with an accident by being thrown from a carriage on the evening of her appearance, but sang her part through to the entire satisfaction of the public. And in her subsequent appearances she achieved a triumph nearly equal to that which greeted her in Italy. The many friends of Mme. States will be glad to receive this contradiction to a positively groundless rumor. At the date of the letter we refer to, the cholera was raging in Madrid, and the deaths were from one hundred to one thousand a day.

THE NEW GAME LAW.

WE rather like the bill which Mr. Dutton has introduced into the Legislature, and which he is determined to pass. It is natural to admire everything that is supreme of its kind, and this bill suggests itself at once as so eminently impracticable that we feel inclined to award it the palm. Next to the idea of legislating against boiler explosions, it is the most brilliant thing of the season—indeed we do not know that it should not take precedence of all. We question whether a more inoperative law could be framed and put upon the statute books. Make a man liable in a fine of a thousand dollars and six months' imprisonment for having a common pack of playing-cards in his possession, and place it in the power of a magistrate to order any house broken into upon the averment of any person of his belief that a game of jack-straws or chuck-luck was going on inside, and the first step would be taken in bringing about a revolution that would astonish foreigners as well as the natives.

The avoidance of extremes is a lesson which California has not yet learned. But a very few years ago monte-tables were maintained as openly as churches, and you could not travel a block without hearing the nasal voice of the dealer as he called the game; now it is proposed to put even a social game of cribbage or whist under about the same ban as burglary. It is possible sometimes to go too far in the right direction.

As for gambling it cannot be suppressed so long as fools are found on earth and knaves exist. Or, setting aside this great natural division of classes, it cannot be suppressed while human nature remains unchanged. There is a fascination to the multitude about chance which cannot be described and which they find it impossible to resist. What crowds the race-track? What fills Lombard street, the Bourse, Wall street, and Montgomery street with eager and excited men, virtually betting whether a stock will go up or down? Give cards the singular cut which is proposed, and you would see men tossing "heads or tails?" for twenties, or guessing how many beans were in a hat for money. It might as well be attempted to stop suicides by making it penal to own, sell, or manufacture pistols. For would not the dagger, poison, and the rope remain? If bent on self-destruction a man could butt his brains out against the wall, and the same with gambling. The devotee of Chance would never be at a loss for a means to gratify his favorite passion. Does not that most veracious of modern historians, Mark Twain, chronicle the idiosyncracy in Jim Smiley, of whom he says that: "If there was a dog-fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a cat-fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a chicken-fight, he'd bet on it; why, if there was two birds setting on a fence, he would bet you which one would fly first—or if there was a camp-meeting he would be there regular to bet on parson Walker, which he judged to be the best exhorter about there, and so he was too, and a good man; if he even see a straddle-bug start to go anywheres, he would bet you how long it would take him to get wherever he was going to, and if you took him up he would foller that straddle-bug to Mexico but what he would find out where he was bound for and how long he was on the road. Why, it never made no difference to him—he would bet on anything—the dangdest feller. Parson Walker's wife laid very sick, once, for a good while, and it seemed as if they warn't going to save her; but one morning he came in and Smiley asked him how she was, and he said she was considerable better—thank the Lord for his inf'nit mercy—and coming on so smart that with the blessing of Providence she'd get well yet—and Smiley, before he thought, says, "Well, I'll resk two and-a-half that she don't anyway." There are a great many Jim Smileys in all communities.

For what are called "the victims of gambling," we must confess to very little sympathy. They go wilfully and willingly to their ruin, led by the hope of getting money without working for it. It is useless to say that they only play for amusement, for if it be amusement to lose money. just as many dollars can be chucked from any of the wharves, and a decided saving of time effected. Very much the same with those who get into "dead-falls." Why don't they keep out of them? What sympathy would be felt for the fool who deliberately stuck his fingers in the fire with the flames staring him in the face and a hundred warning voices ringing in his ear?

Some time since, a young man embezzled money entrusted to his care, to lose at a gaming table. But the other day, a young man stole money from the public treasury, to lose in stocks. And how long is it since we heard of a young man's robbing a bank safe, to spend the money on a woman? What then? Do we strike at the root of the evil when we prohibit cards, annihilate all stock certificates and blot out the Board of Brokers, or abolish women? The young man who would steal to enable him to gratify one passion would also commit theft for the gratification of another.

When it becomes possible to change human nature by legislation, it will also become possible to put an effectual quietus upon gambling by the same means. But, until then, it will not. In the meanwhile, we do not know that it would not be a good plan to license a public game similar to that of Baden, under the direct surveillance of the police, and with every guarantee for fairness, closing all others. For, assuming for granted what very few will deny, that a ruling passion must find vent, the amateur gambler could then have the satisfaction of losing his money respectably, and under no suspicion of foul play. Another advantage would be that all would be public: the business man could not peril the money of his creditors without having it known, nor could the clerk lay down pillaged money upon the green cloth without its coming to his employer's ears. Out-of-the-way dens would be broken up, and the profession of the short-card sharp would be gone. Diseases are sometimes choked by giving them every facility and helping them along. But we question whether gambling can be more effectually suppressed by making it penal to deal in cards, than drunkenness was by a similar experiment called the Maine Liquor Law.

NEW BOOKS.

BEFORE us lie a pile of books which it must almost have depleted the shelves of A. Roman & Co. to furnish. Who is it that says "of making many books there is no end?" The art of book making, however, has now assumed æsthetic proportions which should reconcile us to the number printed, for whatever the value of the contents may be, it cannot be denied that they are well calculated as ornaments for centre-tables and library-shelves. The New York house of W. H. Appleton has done the most extraordinary thing of the age in the way of a series consisting of: The Mothers of the Bible, The Girls of the Bible, and The Boys of the Bible. Already familiar with the Fathers of the Church, there will be little left for the future theological student to learn. In the Mothers, we cannot forbear expressing the opinion that "Eve" is rather a bad lead off, for she disregarded very serious injunctions which were laid upon her, got her husband into quite a serious scrape, entailed very many annoyances upon the human race, and, generally, can scarcely be called a pattern woman. Sarah, who follows next, was given to scolding at times, and, indeed, as a whole, we cannot conscientiously say that we admire the maternal element of the antediluvian period. But the lustre of Mary's character shines out, and would redeem all others in the book, were they much worse than they are. Why Eve should also lead off as chief among the girls we are very much at a loss to see, for we never before knew that she enjoyed an extended period of youth. The more common supposition is that the poeta nascitur not fit idea was reversed in this instance, and that a wife was made for Adam—not born. But there are some vexed points upon which the best theologians very seldom agree, and we do not propose to come between millstones to settle differences. Delilah is a girl of the Bible whom we do not much admire, and the same remark will apply to Mademoiselle Jezebel; but Martha, Mary, and Dorcas win upon our sympathies. We cannot dismiss the volume without remarking that the picture of Eve, which heads the initial chapter, if exhibited in the window of a Montgomery street bookstore or saloon, would subject the proprietor to fine or imprisonment. The Boys of the Bible begins with Joseph and ends with Judas Maccabeus. Moses, Joshua, Gideon, Tobias, Hezekiah, and a number of other pre-Raphaelite cherubim fill in the middle. The story of Samson, as the representative boy, who capsized a cathedral upon the heads of his enemies, will attract the attention of young gymnasts of the present age... But right here, lest our motives be misconstrued, we wish to enter into an explanation. On the Bible itself, it is very far from our intention to reflect ridicule. But against these attempts to cheapen that holy volume we wish to enter a sincere and decided protest. In these Mothers, Girls, and Boys of the Bible, we have Eve, Ruth, Tabitha, Bathseba, Moses, David, Elisha, Daniel, and others, figuring as the heroines and heroes of popular literature—some of them in situations suggestive of that class commonly known as "yellow-covered." What need of this? Why degrade the Bible to suit the catch-penny purposes of some cheap publisher? Why attempt to popularize the story of Potiphar and his wife? to force an interpretation of the figure of the fig-leaf and all the facts which underlie the story of the original temptation upon the young mind? Were there any useful purpose to be subserved we would not for a moment object. But we are ignorant that there is any. The pages of the Bible in its pure and unmutilated state lie open to youth. Is there any necessity for cutting out the characters and weaving around the base of what is commonly accepted as eternal truth the picturesque wreaths and bewildering colors of romance? Why should the story of Ruth, delightful in its Bible simplicity, or of the woman who was "last at the cross and earliest at the grave," be made to read like one of Sylvanus Cobb, Jr.'s novels? In Paris, Biblical dramas are already the rage, and Le Deluge, with umbrellas for all in the front seats and no one allowed in the pit who cannot swim, is produced nightly to admiring audiences. Next we expect to see the whole book of Genesis dramatized by some ambitious author, and all the dead walls in town placarded with sensation posters and pictures. The tableau of the Crucifixion is becoming the most popular of exhibitions, and scarcely a night passes when you may not see in a puppet-show some strumpet of the ballet personating the Virgin Mother, while, with powdered face and red-paint-wounds, some disgrace to humanity who has been awakened from a drunken slumber in the nearest beer saloon to go upon the cross, outstretches his impious arms before you. All this to us savors of profanation... We had many other books to notice, but, beguiled by the novelty of these three, we have been betrayed into greater length than we intended, and the balance must lie over still another week.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE weather during the week has not smiled upon managers. Rain has been the rule, and fair weather the exception. At the Opera House, Mr. Setchell tried to effect an arrangement by which it would rain of mornings and clear away of afternoons, but he only succeeded in securing clear prospects for his own benefit. But, notwithstanding dripping skies and wet pavements, he has had some excellent houses, and never was an actor's repertoire better aired than his has been during the two weeks of his engagement. Last evening was announced for his benefit, and, if a full house can be augured from such indications as box-sheets and sales of tickets, it must have been a benefit worth having. The pieces of the occasion were The Dutch Governor, April Fool, and A Thousand Milliners Wanted. With the first and last pieces our people are familiar, for they constitute to a certain extent his pieces de resistance—that is, pieces in which he is irresistibly funny. The April Fool, however, is new, and was brought out for the first time in this city on Friday of last week. It is a capital farce in plot, dialogue, and situations. This afternoon Mr. Setchell appears in Dombey and Son for the last time; in the evening he plays in Turning the Tables, A Thousand Milliners, and The Census; and on Monday winds up his very successful engagement with The Live Indian, John Jones, and Toodles. Should no ship be up for Australia within a fortnight, it is possible that he may play a brief engagement at Sacramento—perhaps take another farewell benefit there—but he will sail for Australia on the first vessel which offers. It is needless to say that he will leave behind him hosts of friends who will always be glad to welcome his return.

The American Theatre opened on Thursday evening under the management of Mr. Tibbets, with Neighbor Jackwood. The American has not usually been a thriving theatre, but the present company are enlivening it, and we trust that they will succeed in making it a place of popular resort. First of the company is Mrs. Judah, who ought, if allowed to play the line of characters peculiarly her own, to make the fortune of any establishment—given, an appreciative public. Mme. Alicia Mandeville Thorne is an old time favorite, and has carried the banner of California talent far into the sealed empires of China and Japan. Mrs. Sedley Brown, though comparatively a stranger to our people, has won upon their likings and is taken more kindly to their arms than perhaps she would be were she "to the manor born," for very few prophets, or phrophetesses, have honor in their own country. Miss Chapman is crowned with a chaplet to which conservative criticism can hardly add a leaf. But we have not space to enumerate all the attractions. Let the reader turn to the advertisement in another column, and read for himself. Mr. Charles Wheatleigh's farewell engagement is announced to commence on Monday next—and if anything can draw, the farewell engagement of that generous gentleman and liberal manager certainly should.

The Hibernicon still continues to attract the wearers of the green. Thursday evening was devoted to a benefit for the Magdalen Society, and the result must have gratified the sisterhood. Half the town turned out to see the pictures, and in addition to the house being crowded, a great many outside tickets were taken. Those who wish to see this emerald in its present setting, must avail themselves of this afternoon and evening, since the panorama will next week be moved to Platt's Hall. This will afford the lovers of fine art an equal opportunity to gratify their tastes, but the acoustic properties of the hall being inferior to those of the Academy, the harp instrumentation, bell-ringing, and vocalism will scarcely be heard to equal advantage. The exhibition continues during the week.

Mr. Bandmann opened in Sacramento on Monday evening, playing his favorite round of characters during the week. He has drawn excellent houses according to all accounts, but has not won very warm eulogiums from the critical Union in his Shakspearean personations. Preparations are going on for the production of Arrah-na-Pogue on Tuesday next. Miss Thorne, after a flying visit to this city, returned to Sacramento on Thursday, to take the part of "Arrah." Harry Wall is cast for "Shaun the Post." "Col. O'Grady" will be played by Pauncefort, and "Michael Feeny" by Thompson. On Tuesday, Mr. Bandmann commences his farewell engagement at Maguire's Opera House, in this city.

Operatic matters seem to be in "much of a muddle." We are told that Signor Grossi has withdrawn, and that the initial representation is postponed until Wednesday evening, so that we must be pardoned for beginning to despair of having an opera at all.

MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Building Fund.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOAD OF TRUSTEES of the Mercantile Library Association, held October 10th, 1865, i was unanimously

Resolved, That the Trustees form themselves into a Committee of the Whole, to obtain Life Membership and Donations, with a view of purchasing a lot and erecting a building thereon for the use of the Association.

The payment of one hundred dollars in gold coin secures a Life Membership, and it is hoped that the sum of twenty thousand dollars may be subscribed in this way alone. No subscriptions are binding unless the above sum shall be raised by Life Memberships and Donations before February 1, 1866. Subscription books may be found at the Library, or with any of the following members of the

BOARD OF TRUSTEES:

G. W. Belt.....President
*C. Wolcott Brooks.....Vice President
H. S Homans.....Corresponding Secretary
David Wilder.....Recording Secretary
John G. Clark.....Treasurer

J. H Wildes, A. M. Ebbetts,
J. W. Cox, F. D. Kellogg,
A. T. Green, Chas. R. Bond,
Geo. Hewston, M. D., *Daniel Rogers,
F. L. Castle.

*On leave of absence. oc21-tf

CARRINGTON & CO'S GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,

No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY

Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear.

or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CET.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

WE ARE GIVING AWAY!

AT 506 MARKET STREET,

Extending Through to No. 7 Sutter street,

HOGS' SPARE RIBS, 5 cents per pound;
Hogs' Kidneys, 6 cents per pound;
Pigs' Feet, 5 cents per pound;
Lean Meat for Sausages, 7 cents per pound;
Rib Roast, 12½ cents per pound;
Pork Chops, 15 cents per pound;
Pigs' Tenderloins, 15 cents per pound.

The above are cut from fat grain-fed hogs, killed at our pork-house every day, and are better and cheaper than at any other place in this city.

Mutton! Mutton! Mutton!

From 4 to 7 cents per pound—KILLED EVERY DAY, from sheep fed on our own ranches in the country, and, for that reason, we are enabled to sell the best Mutton for about HALF THE PRICE charged by any other butchers in San Francisco.

WILSON & STEVENS,
se30-§ No. 506 Market St., and No. 7 Sutter St.

RAVEN GOLD AND SILVER MINING COMPANY.

Reese River Mining District, State of Nevada.

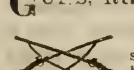
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in accordance with the laws of the State of California, and in pursuance of an order of the Board of Trustees of the above named company, there will be sold at public auction at the office of the Secretary of said company, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, on Saturday, the 17th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, so many shares of the capital stock of said company standing in the names of the following parties as may be necessary to pay the assessments thereon levied on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1863, and on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1864, now due and unpaid, together with costs of advertisements and sale, unless previously paid, as follows:

	Certificate.	Shares.	Bal. due
A P Cox,	1 to 7 inclusive,	150	$75
H. H. Cooper,	15, 16, 18,	34	$17
B Chamberlin,	19, 20, 22, 24, 29,	84	$42
H. P. Perry,	30 to 35 inclusive,	93	$93
J. H. H. Williams,	40,	10	$5

GEORGE B. MERRILL, Secretary.

Office, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
ja20-4w

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, ETC.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

Only authorized Agents of the celebrated Greener Guns, London. A certificate given with each Gun.

A full assortment of Henry's, Spencer's, Sharp's Wesson's and Ballard's Repeating Rifles always on hand.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street, San Francisco,

DR. C. W. MOORE'S Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

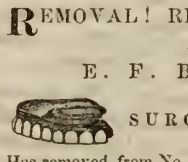
SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
se16 3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

RUPTURE.



RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and compossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3 3m

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have purchased the Eating House known as "Richards'" Restaurant, situate on Clay street, one door below Montgomery. The restaurant has been repaired and refitted throughout, and is now open to the public.

C. H. BRICKWEDEL,
de23 H. F. HLGELER.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE

Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. nol1-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE

Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAMES E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second Township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias
H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled. } Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.
no11 3m

E. CAMPIONI, COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. } By Jas. E. Ashcom, Deputy Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. } B. S. BROOKS,
de23 3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11 6m San Francisco

GREAT AMERICAN PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800

PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $100 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11 3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
a23 dorff street, San Francisco.

B. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale

DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line :

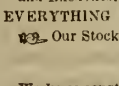
Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.



R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND
SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators ; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPidly taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person ; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars ☜

E. O. HUNT,
No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,
oc29 3m San Francisco.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M.; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66 ; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11-3m

PREMIUM FURNITURE!

AT THE LATE FAIR OF THE

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

J. PEIRCE,

415, 417, and 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO,

Was awarded the

FIRST AND ONLY PREMIUM

FOR

Furniture,

AND THE

FIRST AND HIGHEST PREMIUM

FOR THE

BEST UPHOLSTERY.

The attention of the public is respectfully called to this ; also to the FACT that we have the LARGEST and FINEST stock on the PACIFIC COAST : Comprising a full assortment of FURNITURE AND BEDDING ; all of which is offered at rates GUARANTEED to be less than those of any other house in the city.

☞ Nearly 15,000 cases of Goods packed suitable for home and distant markets, to which the

ATTENTION OF THE TRADE IS INVITED.

A full assortment of Cabinet Makers', Hardware, and Upholsterers' materials ALWAYS ON HAND.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
dc16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies : one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description ; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500	$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000	15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000	30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation	12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation	25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation	50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Cooking ; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.

The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)

ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days	$1
Eight Days	2
Twelve Days	3
Twenty Days	4
Thirty Days	5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16 3m San Francisco.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS

FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,

MERCHANDISE,

FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to
jy1 REV. P. I GREY, President

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the

BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life

INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26-1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down ; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints ; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK ;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
no18-3m

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE

AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,

FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

CALIFORNIA

Collegiate Institute,

For Boarding and Day Pupils,

Nos. 64, 66, 68 and 70 Silver street.

THE PRESENT TERM of this Institute commenced Wednesday, Jan. 3d. Catalogues may be obtained by addressing (de30) MISS M. LAMMOND, Principal.

LEISURE.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

GRAND is the leisure of the earth :
She gives her happy myriads birth,
And after harvest fears no dearth,
But goes to sleep in snow-wreaths dim.
Dread is the leisure up above,
The while He sits, whose name is Love,
And waits, as Noah did, the dove,
To wit if she would fly to him.

He waits for us, while, houseless things,
We beat about with bruised wings,
On the dark floods and water-springs,
The ruined world, the desolate sea :
With open windows from the prime,
All night, all day, he waits sublime,
Until the fulness of the time
Decreed from His eternity.

Where is our leisure ? Give us rest !
Where is the quiet we possessed ?
We must have had it once—were blest
With peace, whose phantoms yet entice.
Sorely the mother of mankind
Longed for the gardens left behind ;
For we still prove some yearnings blind,
Inherited from Paradise.

A QUEER FUNERAL SERMON.

PROBABLE ORIGIN OF "THE HARP OF A THOUSAND STRINGS."

[The following sermon was printed in the British Magazine for November, 1750, and is said to have been actually preached at the funeral of Mr. Proctor, Minister of Gissing, by Rev. Mr. Moore, in the parish church at Buxton, a small village near Diss, Norfolk. Most of the names mentioned may still be seen in the parish register. A manuscript copy of the sermon was also found in an old wall, pulled down at Wisback, in 1823 :]

"Fight the good fight."—I. Timothy : vi., 12.

BELOVED : We are met together to solemnize the funeral of Mr. Proctor. His father's name was Mr. Thomas Proctor, of the second family ; his brother's name was Mr. Thomas Proctor, also. He lived some time at Buxton Hall, in Norfolk, and was High Constable of Diss Hundred. This man's name was Mr. Robert Proctor, and his wife was Mrs. Buxton, late wife of Mr. Mathew Buxton. She came from Helsden Hall, beyond Norwich. He was a good husband, and she a good housewife ; and they have got money. She brought a thousand pounds with her for her portion.

But now, beloved, I shall make it clear by demonstrative arguments. First, he was a good man, and that in several respects ; he was a loving man to his neighbors ; a charitable man to the poor ; a favorable man in his tithes ; and a good landlord to his tenants. There sits one ! Mr. Spurgeon can tell you what a great sum of money he forgave him on his death bed. It was four score pounds. Now, beloved, was not this a good man, and a man of God ? and his wife a good woman ?—and she came from Helsden Hall, beyond Norwich. This is the first argument.

Secondly, to prove this man to be a good man and a man of God : In the time of his sickness, which was long and tedious, he sent for Mr. Cole, minister of Shimpling, to pray for him. He was not a self-ended man, to be prayed for himself only ; no, beloved, he desired him to pray for all his relatives and acquaintances, for Mr. Buxton's worship, for Mrs. Buxton's worship, and for all Mr. Buxton's children, against it should please God to send him any ; and to Mr. Cole's prayer he devoutly said, Amen. Amen, Amen. Was not this a good man, and a man of God, think you ? and his wife a good woman ?—and she came from Helsden Hall, beyond Norwich.

Then he sent for Mr. Gibbs to pray for him ; when he came and prayed for him, and all his friends, relatives and acquaintances ; for Mr. Buxton's worship, for Mrs. Buxton's worship, and for all Mr. Buxton's children, against it should please God to send him any ; and to Mr. Gibbs' prayer, he also devoutly said, Amen, Amen, Amen. Was not this a good man, and a man of God, think you ? and his wife a good woman ?—and she came from Helsden Hall, beyond Norwich.

Then he sent for me, and I came and prayed for this good man, Mr. Proctor ; for all his friends, relatives, and acquaintances ; for Mr. Buxton's worship, for Mrs. Buxton's worship, and for Mr. Buxton's children, against it should please God to send him any ; and to my prayer he devoutly said, Amen, Amen, Amen. Was not this a good man, and a man of God, think you ? and his wife a good woman ?—and she came from Helsden Hall, beyond Norwich.

Thirdly and lastly, beloved, I come to a clear, demonstrative argument to prove this man to be a man of God and a good man, and that is this : There was one Thomas Proctor, a very poor beggar boy. He came into this county upon the back of a dun cow. It was not a black cow, nor a brindle cow, nor a brown cow ; no, beloved, it was a dun cow. Well, beloved, this poor boy came a begging to this good man's door. He did not do as some would have done—give him a small alms and send him away, or chide him and make him a pass and send him into his own county ; no, beloved, he took him into his own house, and bound him as an apprentice to a gunsmith in Norwich. After his time was out, he took him home again and married him to a kinswoman of his wife, one Mrs. Christian Robertson—here present ; there she sits ! She was a very good fortune ; and to her this good man gave a considerable jointure. By her he had three daughters. This good man took home the eldest, brought her up to woman's estate, married her to a very honorable gentlemen, Mr. Buxton—here present ; there he sits ! gave him a vast portion with her ; and the remainder of his estate he gave to his two daughters. Now, was not this a good man, and a man of God, think you ? and his wife a good woman ?—and she came from Helsden Hall, beyond Norwich.

Beloved, you remember, some time since, I preached at the funeral of Mrs. Proctor, at which time I troubled you with many of her transcendent virtues ; but your memories, perhaps, may fail you, and therefore I shall now remind you of two or three of them. The first is, she was a good knitter as any in the county of Norfolk. When her husband and family were in bed and asleep, she would get a cushion, clap herself down by the fire, and sit and knit ; but, beloved, be assured she was no prodigal woman, but a sparing woman ; for she, to spare a candle, would stir up the coals with her knitting-pins, and by that light she would sit and knit, and make as good work as many other women would by daylight. Beloved, I have a pair of stockings on my legs that were knit by her in the same manner, and they are the best stockings I ever wore in my life.

Secondly, she was the best maker of toast and drink that I ever eat in my life. And they were brown, too. When I used to go in of a morning, she would ask me to eat a toast, which I was very willing to do, because she had such an artificial way of toasting it, in no way slack or burning it ; besides, she had such a pretty way of grating nutmeg in it, and dipping it in the beer, and such a piece of rare cheese, that I must needs say that they were the best toasts I ever eat in my life.

Well, beloved, the days are short, and many of you have a great way to go to your habitations, and therefore I hasten to a conclusion. I think I have sufficiently proved this man to be a good man, and his wife a good woman ; but, fearing your memories should fail you, I shall repeat the particulars, namely : first, his love to his neighbor ; second, his charity to the poor ; third, his favorableness in his tithes ; fourth, his goodness to his tenants ; fifth, his devotion in his prayers in saying, Amen, Amen, Amen, to the prayers of Mr. Cole, Mr. Gibbs, and myself.

[For the Californian.]

THE RELIGION OF FLOWERS.

NUMBER TWO.

WHO would wish to live without flowers ? Where would the poet find his images of beauty if they were to perish ? Are they not the emblems of loveliness and innocence, and the living types of all that is pleasing and graceful ? We compare young lips to the rose, and the white brow to the radiant lily ; the winning eye is blue as the violet, and the sweet voice like a breeze kissing its way through the flowers. We hang delicate blossoms on the silken ringlets of the young bride, and strew her path with fragrant flowers as she leaves the church. We place them around the marble face of the dead in the narrow coffin, and they become emblems of our affections—of pleasures remembered and hopes faded—wishes vanished and scenes cherished in memory, all the more because they can never return. We look to the far-off spring in other valleys—to the eternal summer beyond the grave—where flowers that never fade bloom in those starry fields over which no chilly winter ever breathed. They come upon us in spring like the remembrance of a pleasant dream—a vision that hovered above us in sleep, peopled with shadowy beauties and simple delights embroidered with the richest hues of fancy.

Sweet flowers !—that bring back the scenes of childhood—faces remembered in youth—the love that knew not that it was love ! Even in our rooms they conjure up images of the mossy bank by the wayside where we so often gazed upon the early primroses.

"The north wind whistles, and the hoar frost clothes the verdure-despoiled trees ; an uniform white carpet covers the earth ; the birds withhold their tuneful song, and the sealed waters cease to murmur as they roll along ; the rays of the sun enfeebled by the density of our atmosphere shed a gloomy light over our fields, and the heart of man is sad, while all nature reposes in torpid tranquility."

Thus Madame de la Tour describes the state of nature when suddenly a delicate flower pierces through the veil of snow which concealed it. It has been aptly termed by her countrymen Percé neige, from the peculiarity just mentioned, and is with equal propriety called Snowdrop in England. Wordsworth thus addresses it :

"Lone flower, hemmed in with snows, and white as they,
But hardier far, once more I see thee bend
Thy forehead, as if fearful to offend,
Like an unbidden guest."

The snowdrop has become the avowed favorite of modern poets, and numerous have been the efforts to do it honor. The rapid progress in mental cultivation which took place about the commencement of the present century, was in nothing more manifest than in the expansion of the female intellect, and at no period of the history of English literature—perhaps at no period of the world—were such undeniable proofs ever given of the ability of woman to portray with superior power all that concerns the affections, the sentiments, and the moral and religious duties of mankind. The names of Hamah Moore, Mrs. Barbauld, Madame Tighe, Felicia Hemans and other lamented writers, together with those who still survive to us, place this assertion beyond the pale of controversy.

Simultaneous with this new era in literature, is the snowdrops's best right to claim a poetical history—a right which it owes to the fair sex with whom it appears to have been a deserved favorite.

Mrs. Tighe describes it as ——"The wintry flower

That, whiter than the snow it blooms among,
Droops its fair head submissive to the power
Of every angry blast which sweeps along,
Sparing the lovely trembler, while the strong
Majestic tenants of the leafless wood,
It levels low."

Mrs. Barbauld inviting her friend to retire

"From idle barry and tumultuous noise,
From hollow friendships and from sickly joys,
To the pure pleasures rural scenes inspire," rightly desires her to come and see the first dawning of the year, and watch its unfolding beauties, even when no flower is blooming save

"The first pale blossom of the unripen'd year,
As Flora's breath by some transforming power,
Had changed an icicle into a flower ;
Its name and hue, the scentless plant retains,
And Winter lingers in its icy veins."

Wordsworth never ceases to pour out the overflowing treasures of his exhaustless mind upon his favorite flowers, he seems troubled with a plethora of thoughts all too good to be lost, and hence the daisy, the celandine, the primrose, and the snowdrop are all honored by three or four separate pieces, besides numerous allusions to them scattered through other works. He takes a hint from the Linnean name galanthus, i. e., helmet-flower, to speak of the snowdrop as ——"Frail snowdrops that together cling,

And nod their helmets, smitten by the wing
Of many a furious whirl-blast sweeping by."

He more than once considers its white wintry aspect as a fitting emblem of hoary-headed age, and promises that when spring has brought forth more gaudy flowers he will not

"Then thy modest grace forget,
Chaste snowdrop, venturous harbinger of Spring,
And pensive monitor of fleeting years !"

Professor Schleiden writes : "There is a face which the world of plants may turn toward us, without question the noblest and the most exalted. It is like all nature, the symbol of the Eternal ; behind this play of dead natural forces and their products we adore a Holy Author and Sustainer. The vegetable creation is the rich altar-cloth of the temple of God, in which the recognition of beauty and sublimity of form constitutes the worship."

FLORAL DIRECTORY FOR THE WEEK.

14th. St. Hilary, Barren Strawberry, (Fragaria sterilis.)
15th. St. Paul the Hermit, Ivy, (Hedera helix.)
16th. St. Marcellus, common Dead Nettle, (Larnium purpureum.)
17th. St. Anthony, Garden Anemone, (Anemone hortensis.)
18th. St. Prisca, Four-toothed Moss, (Bryum pellucidum.)
19th. St. Martha, white Dead Nettle, (Larnium Album.)
20th. St. Fabian, large Dead Nettle, (Larnium garganicum.)

"Flowers ! for each one of earth,
Under and above the sod,
That the dead may seem to sleep,
And the living think of God."

IRIS.

If your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain : You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

An Acknowledged Fact.—"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again ;" not so the thousands of worthless compounds thrust before the public as specifics. Newell's Pulmonary Syrup, having stood the test of opposition and prejudice, while on trial at the bar of public opinion, now stands pre eminent as the greatest known remedy for all affections of the chest and lungs. Use it.

For sale by all Druggists : Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

The Empress Eugenie, and all who desire to captivate and charm, should use that delight of the toilet, Davidson's Circassian Bloom, for the complexion and skin.

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco.

Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality.

They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland.

Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Coben, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathon and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldhush & Co., 107 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

TO POOR WRITERS.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Bahbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. PELTON,
Superintendent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more evident merits.
JOHN SWETT, Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the language. The Babbittonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and military at the shortest notice; also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

THE RUSS HOUSE BOWLING SALOON, corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, has reopened under the management of Ferdinand Sbrader. There are Eight Alleys—six for Americans and two for Germans. The finest Wines and Liquors can be had at the bar. All lovers of the health-invigorating game of ten pins are invited to pay a visit to the saloon.—Dramatic Chronicle.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for the best card pictures, and large photographs.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fractional part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of band, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA!

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. F. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press on Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street

SAN FRANCISCO

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store.

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1886. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF
FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTABLISHMENT at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

THE NEW WARM

SWIMMING BATH,

THIRD STREET, OPPOSITE SOUTH PARK,

IS NOW OPEN!

ja6-1m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
se30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery: Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,
oc29-3m 23 Second street, San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of
GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.
S. W. H. WARD & SON,

NEW YORK, 357 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Ca
je30-3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE,
533
CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF
FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

"SHOW THEM UP!"

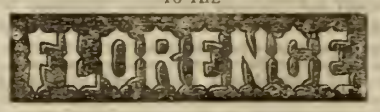
Sewing Machine Premiums

AT THE

FAIRS OF CALIFORNIA AND OREGON, 1865:

MECHANICS' FAIR, SAN FRANCISCO
No premium on Sewing Machines awarded.

STATE FAIR, CALIFORNIA.
In competition, Grover & Baker and Florence.)
First and Highest Premium
TO THE



STATE FAIR, OREGON.
In competition, New England, (single thread,) Wilcox & Gibbs, (single thread,) and Grover & Baker.
First Premium to Grover & Baker.

THE FLORENCE has taken the only First Premium awarded to any First-Class Machine over any other Double Thread Machine at the Fairs held on the Pacific Coast in 1865.

SAMUEL HILL,
AGENT FLORENCE SEWING MACHINES,
111 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
no4

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE
—OF—
Fine Clothing,
TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets,
San Francisco.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
NEW YORK.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 24 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. de30

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

OVERSTOCKED!

AND MUST SELL

Goodwin & Co.,

Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO
UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.

BEDDING AND MIRRORS,

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE
OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD
—AT—
LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,
mh25-tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washington street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET
BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,
SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

do23-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M

jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;
NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;
CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9 3m 305 Montgomery street.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Very few persons, even among physicians, would have been willing upon any terms to have been in the condition of the writer of the following letter on the 14th of February last. I will anticipate somewhat his report of the facts, by saying that on the 15th August, 1865, he made me a visit, "the very picture of health." Time, which tries and proves all things, has sufficiently tested this case, and shown that neither relapse or collapse having followed, the cure is perfect, and can be cited among the scores of similar cases, the result of my improved mode of treating disease without medicine.

G. M. BOURNE,
Water Cure Physician,
No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.
August 27, 1865.

Sacramento, April 30, 1865.

Dr. G. M. Bourne—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure and satisfaction that I now let you know of my good health. Looking back on what I have passed through, it seems as if I was lifted from the grave, and I think it my duty to acknowledge to you and the world the benefit I derived from water treatment as administered by you in your celebrated baths. It was in August, 1864, when disease developed itself with a severe cough. I then took medicines, getting worse, with chills, fevers, loss of strength, and was pronounced consumptive. This set me to thinking, and finally I determined to leave my business and go to the Sandwich Islands, having been informed that I could not be cured here. I went to San Francisco, and while waiting for a ship, called upon Dr. Bourne, who stated that a trip to the Sandwich Islands would probably result disastrously, was wholly unnecessary, as I could then be speedily cured at his establishment. I placed myself under his treatment, and in one week was so much improved that I thought I could risk returning home and to my duty as Engineer on the Central Pacific Railroad. The doctor objected; but I thought I knew better, and returned to my duty. In about two weeks my cough returned, and I kept getting worse, and, contrary to Dr. Bourne's injunction never to take medicine again, committed that folly, and soon was so completely run down that I could scarcely walk; so, as a last resort, I concluded once more to try the Water Cure. I went to San Francisco—few of my friends expected me to return; in fact, I thought my return doubtful. On arriving at Dr. Bourne's establishment (February 14, 1865,) I was not able to get into the bath without assistance, but in a few days I began to gain. I remained with him only six weeks, when I left, "a wiser and a better man," without the aid of medicine. I have now been at work several weeks, and find that I am gaining every day, and at present bid fair to be stouter than ever before. Persons visiting the Doctor's establishment will find it just what it should be, in both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Departments, and I cannot say too much in praise of the Doctor's kind attention to his patients.

This letter I write for the benefit of the afflicted, to be used as the Doctor decides, and should it be the means of directing any one to his care and treatment who (as they assuredly will) find relief, I will be paid for my trouble. Your obedient servant,

JAMES CAMPBELL,
Engineer Central Pacific Railroad.

San Francisco, August 25, 1865.

Advised by the undersigned, Mr. James Campbell, of the Central Pacific Railroad (who was then in a most deplorable state of ill health,) placed himself under the care of Dr. Bourne, the Water Cure Physician. Some six months or more afterward he visited this city, when I accidentally met him at Dr. Bourne's establishment, and, I am happy to say, restored to the enjoyment of good health and in fine spirits. JOHN SULLIVAN.

☞ Dr. Bourne treats all diseases of the throat, chest, and lungs—which includes diptheria, bronchitis, incipient consumption, pleurisy, croup, etc.—with the greatest success. Great relief is afforded in advanced stages of consumption. Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, fever and ague, dropsy, etc., etc., are also cured quickly, pleasantly, and economically. No medicine whatever.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING

Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost,

and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the

California Washing Extract,

simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impurities, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect ROBUST HEALTH. The preparation is called "ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER," and is for sale at wholesale at the

UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco,
AND BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
ja6-1m

THE MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - - $3,500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - - 6,500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - - 1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

☞ No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN,

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No. 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO

PIANO SCHOOL,

ON THE EUROPEAN PLAN,

At the South Park Institute.

MISS FLORENCE JAMES, PRINCIPAL.

IN CONNECTION with this popular and excellent Young Ladies' Seminary there will open, about January 3d, 1866, a Piano School, on the European Plan—for first beginners as well as for advanced players. The great advantage on this plan will be a reduction of about one-half the usual price, and a thorough training, both theoretical and practical. The Musical Department will be under the directorship of Mr. GUSTAVE A. SCOTT, Organist of Cavalry Church, whose long experience in Teaching, both in private and in classes, will secure to pupils a rapid advancement in the study of Music.

The Music Rooms are comfortable and convenient, and the Pianos used from the best manufacturers.

For particulars, call at the Institute, Nos. 55 and South Park. dc30

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, JAN. 20TH,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE:
DAN. SETCHELL,
IN DOMBEY AND SON,
FOR THE LAST TIME.

THIS EVENING, JANUARY 20TH,
DAN SETCHELL,
IN
TURNING THE TABLES;
1,000 MILLINERS WANTED,
AND
THE CENSUS!

MONDAY EVENING.....JAN. 22D,
Last Night of Mr. Setchell!
LIVE INDIAN; JOHN JONES,
AND TOODLES!

TUESDAY EVENING.....JAN. 23D,
FIRST NIGHT OF THE FAREWELL ENGAGEMENT
OF
MR. BANDMANN!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

J. PEIRCE,
Furniture and Bedding
WAREROOMS,

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.
The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.
The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.
J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on
Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.
Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS.

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

This Afternoon and Evening, Jan. 20th,
BEING THE LAST TWO EXHIBITIONS AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

BLAISDELL'S
CELEBRATED PAINTING,
THE HIBERNICON!
OR,
A TOUR THROUGH IRELAND!
THE HIBERNICON AND BELL-RINGERS
Will exhibit one week longer,
AT PLATT'S HALL.

A CARD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 5th, 1866.

W. H BLAISDELL, Esq.—Dear Sir: Having visited your beautiful PANORAMA OF IRELAND, it affords us sincere pleasure to bear testimony to the correctness and excellence of its views, whether representing its Ruined Abbies, its Beautiful Rivers, its Mountains or its Lakes—so close is the resemblance to nature that one might almost imagine himself on the spot. To those who have never visited Ireland, we most cheerfully recommend it as a correct representation of our lovely but unhappy country; while to every Irish heart it will awaken sensations and remembrances which no language of ours can describe. Trusting that your enterprise may be as successful as it deserves, we are, sir, Yours truly,

Dr. I. Rowell, Thomas N. Cazneau,
Joseph K Handy, Cashier Hibernian S. & L. Soc'y; T. J. Broderick, John Kelly, Jr.,
Daniel O'Callaghan, C Desmond,
John O'Brien, James R. Kelly,
Thomas Mooney, President Cal. Build & Loan Soc'y; Thomas Mulrein, John Mann,
Thomas R. Dundas, Philip A. Roach,
J. J. Rogers, R. F Ryan,
M. Flood.

MADAME JULIA BLAISDELL,
SOLO HARPIST;
MISS CLARA,
The interesting IRISH BALLADIST, and the
SWISS BELL-RINGERS,
Will appear in conjunction with the Painting, each evening, with an ELABORATE DESCRIPTIVE LECTURE,
BY J. H. WARWICK, ESQ.

GRAND MATINEE ON SATURDAY NEXT, JAN. 20TH, at 2 o'clock, for Schools and Family Parties.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....75 cents.
Family Circle.....50 cents.
No extra charge for reserved seats. ja13 tf

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children
GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.
TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,
LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
de19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

RELIABLE
AND LIBERAL!
THE BROOKLYN
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends declared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTABLE after five years from their date.
Thirty days grace in payment of premium.
C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.
L. P. GAUTIER, Med. Examiner, San Francisco.
STEPH. T. KING,
General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
712 Montgomery street,
Ja20 tf SAN FRANCISCO.

AMERICAN THEATRE.

Sansome street, corner of Halleck.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - C. TIBBETS
TREASURER, - - - - - W. B. HAMILTON

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, JANUARY 20TH,
Will be presented the Sensation Play of NEIGHBOR JACKWOOD!

Neighbor Jackwood.....L F Beutty
Bimleeh.....Mrs Sedley Brown
Grandmother Rigglesby.....Mrs Judah
Phœbe.....Miss Caroline Chapman
Enos Crumlette, S W Leach; Robert Greenwich, P Thayer; Hector Danbury, F Percy; Dickson, W H Hamilton; Charlotte, Miss Hinckley; Mrs Jackwood, Mrs Julia Gould; Matilda, Mrs Alicia M Thorne; Mrs Greenwich, Mrs. Myers.

The Play will be produced with entirely new Scenery and Mechanical Effects.

MATINEE ON SATURDAY AFTERNOON,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

The management take pleasure in announcing that they have effected an arrangement with the celebrated and favorite actor,
Mr. Chas. Wheatleigh, who will commence his
FAREWELL ENGAGEMENT!
ON MONDAY EVENING, JAN. 22D,
Being his Last Nights in California!
THE WHITEBOY'S BRIDE,
NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND!
and other new Plays, by the
RENOWNED PLAYWRIGHTS,
DION BOURCICAULT, CHARLES READ, and TOM TAYLOR, will be produced, with new Scenery, Properties and Stage Effects, during the engagement of Mr. Wheatleigh.

The Omnibus and Central Railroad Cars run from the front of the Theatre each night, and the North Beach and Mission Cars from the corner of Sansome and California streets, making this Theatre the most easy of access of any in the city.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, FEBUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
ON THURSDAY, - - - - - FEBRUARY 15TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.
☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets.
Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JAN. 30th, - - - - - SACRAMENTO
Captain J. M. Cavarly.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.
Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.
A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.
Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.
The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock.
Seugers are requested to have their baggage on board fore 10 o'clock.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
Corner Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

NEW PIANOS

TO RENT!
AT LOW PRICES,
AT
Kohler's Music Store,
No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.
ja20 1m

HOLT'S MAP
OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.
For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
Ja13 tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.
J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.
George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
F. Schrader, cor. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Gensoul, 311 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.
E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sansome.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
Wm. Brown & Co., 160 Third street.

FURNITURE.
N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.
Slossen & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Roscnblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.

SALOONS.
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J Penrson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr. Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 9. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 27, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- How to Preserve Flowers.—By "Iris."
- Effect of Executions.
- Logic Run Mad.
- Hagar's Vision.

POETRY:
- Epigram.—By an Antiquarian.

NEW BOOKS:
- A Review of Recent Publications.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

SELECTED:
- The Emerald Studs—A Reminiscence of the Circuit.
- The Bone Man of Hostonic—A Legend of Bohemia.
- McArone on Modern Matrimony.
- A Russian Wolf-Hunt.
- The Live Sofa—A Man of Many Vagaries.
- Fun from the "Hub."

POETRY:
- Lines Kimposed on Bored of a Californy War Steemer.

AN INIGOING.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, January 27th, 1866.

ONLY a corner left for me this week, and I don't know that I'm sorry, for a thoughtful...that is to say a lazy...mood is upon me.

"The Mufti" once remarked to me...his voice was husky at the time, and he spoke to me affectionately, and called me "Bleibenicht"...that when he thought much, he could not write at all. To which I did not reply that I was convinced of that fact from a careful perusal of his voluminous writings, for he is a sensitive gentleman, and I would not hurt his feelings for the world. But for all that there was a deal of truth in his remark, and its application is by no means confined to the Mufti.

I have been thinking of several things during the week. First, how unpleasant it is to fall through a trap-door, if a rope happens to be around your neck, the other end of which is tied to a beam.

It is strange to see a man in the full vigor of health standing on the threshold of eternity, and count upon the dial of your watch the very minute at which he will cross it. An ignorant man he is, perhaps, all untaught in schools...and yet, in a second's time, he will become wiser than the wisest of the gray-bearded sages who have spent their lives in study...only to discover that, after a certain limit is reached, they can go no further.

What need of learning astronomy, when we have it in our power to learn in a single breath more about the stars than Galileo and Herschel themselves could teach us in a lifetime.

I have also been thinking how unpleasant it must be to be a United States Circuit Judge, and have friends at home send you a little box by mail which blows you into smithereens when you open it?

The last case of diamond jewelry that was sent me from Spain, where most of my chateaux, vineyards, and other real and unreal estate is located, I did not dare open.

"I know your tricks and your manners," said I, raising it in my arms and bearing it into the court-yard, where I dashed it against one of the castle pillars.

All that it contained was ruined. Now-a-days I open match boxes, and sardine-boxes and dressing-cases in the same way, for there is no telling what a box may bring forth after Judge Field's experience.

Senator Hager is similarly troubled with myself. A box of dry goods and groceries was sent him from the school-mistresses of this city the other day, and he got the Sergeant at Arms to open it with an axe.

He's right enough in taking all such precautions, for if he does not look alive, the irate ladies who preside over the destinies of children will spring an infernal machine, a bundle of tracts, or something else that he couldn't stand upon him.

On the whole I'm glad that I am not the author of the school bill. For may it not be written

> Pelton in office more true comfort feels
> Than Hager with this barking at his heels?

INIGO.

[For the Californian.]

HOW TO PRESERVE FLOWERS.

THERE are many ways in which Cut Flowers may be preserved, both with and without suitable appliances. In springtime, you may delight yourself by culling a few violets from your window-box or garden, and arranging them in a dish in which there is a little wet sand.

The short stems stuck into the sand get sufficient moisture; a glass shade over the whole confines the fragrance, so that whenever you are inclined to inhale a full breath of unadulterated violet perfume, you have but to lift off the glass, and enjoy it to your heart's content. In the same simple way, any short jointed flowers may be preserved for a considerable time; the partial shade and the confinement of moisture secured to them by the glass preserves their beauty and fragrance, sometimes even for a fortnight, but the most fragile will in this way continue fresh and beautiful for at least a week.

An extension of this idea is carried out in an invention called the Elizabethan Vase, but which is, of course, not necessarily made in Elizabethan designs, but may take Grecian, Etruscan, or other forms, according to the fancy of the maker and purchaser. The vase is covered with wire-work or filled with sand, and a glass shade is placed over all; it thus becomes a sort of Wardian case, not for the culture, but for the preservation of flowers. When the flowers have been arranged and the glass shade put on, a little water should be poured into the groove around the edge to exclude the air. The advantage of this arrangement is this: As the flowers do not stand in water at all, they may be safely moved about, whereas, in the ordinary way of sticking them into vessels of water, they fade quickly, the stems putrify, and, instead of enjoying their fragrance, we are nauseated with their putrescent exhalations. A great deal of the success in arranging flowers most certainly depends on acquaintance with the qualities of those which we wish to use. This acquaintance, of course, is only to be gained by a careful course of personal observation, and by a classification which gives each flower a place for which it is really suited. By neglecting these precautions, or by being ignorant of the uses for which special flowers are naturally adapted, we are liable both to waste very many, and often spoil a most charming group by introducing into it one flower that is out of place.

In a knot of flowers to wear in the dress, for instance, what seems more attractive than the graceful Fuchsia? Yet few, after one attempt, would wear them. Round the edge of a brilliant vase they are, however, beautiful.

Helitrope, again—how many groups of flowers has its presence spoilt in less than half an hour? As a general rule, plants that take but little water are those that supply the most lasting flowers—at any rate, for the dress. In crimson flowers, the thing to guard against is a tendency to turn a lilacish blue in fading. In white flowers, generally, the risk is that they may turn yellow. Gardenias do so, for instance.

The use of quickly fading green often ruins many arrangements otherwise good. Young leaves of all kinds flag extremely quick, though older and thicker foliage often lasts very long. Fern leaves, mosses, and grasses, for instance, in vases, last very well, if preserved from the dry air when not in use.

Leaves of the scarlet geranium preserve many flowers freshly by their own velvety texture, which retains so much moisture. Their flowers, also, last perfectly, if small, few-flowered stems are chosen, on which none have yet begun to fade. Flowers of the ivy-leaved kinds of geraniums, cut off short, and a drop of gum dropped into the centre of each, last a long time. Heaths keep beautifully, as almost all flowers do which admit of being gathered on a hard, woody stem.

The beauty and grace that may be displayed in grouping flowers, united with the gaiety of their colors and the harmony of their tints, are objects well worthy the attention of those who were born to render life delightful. This study, in imparting a taste for all that is beautiful in nature, fills the soul with ravishing emotions, and opens before us the enchanted avenues of a world full of wonders. The interpreters of our sweetest sentiments, flowers lend their charms even to love—to that pure and chaste affection which, as Plato observes, is an inspiration from the gods.

The expression of this divine passion ought to be divine also, and it was to illustrate this that flowers were ingeniously made emblematical of our most delicate sentiments. They do, in fact, utter in "silent eloquence" a language better than writing, they are the delicate symbols of the illusions of a tender heart and of a lively and brilliant imagination. In the glorious days of chivalry, the respectful lover oft made use of the sweet language of flowers. Gothic books are full of emblems composed of flowers, and we find in the romance of Perceforét that a garland of roses is the lover's treasure. A charming writer asks:

> "And are not flowers the earliest gift of love?
> Do they not, mutely eloquent, oft speak
> For absent or for trembling hearts, and bear
> Kisses and sighs on their perfumed lips—
> And worlds of thought and fancy in their leaves
> Touched by the rainbow's dyes? Have ye ne'er prized
> Some token-flower—an early rose—a bunch
> Of young Spring's first and sweetest violets, culled
> And given into yours by hands so dear,
> That all flowers seemed grown holier from that time?
> Have ye ne'er hoarded such a simple gift—
> Aye, through long years—e'en when each shrunken leaf
> Bore not a semblance to the thing it was,
> And the soft fragrance that had once been there,
> Had changed from sweet to noisome—and, e'en then,
> For very fondness could not fling away
> Those dim and faded records of the past,
> But laid the frail things in their wonted place,
> To gaze—and dream—and weep upon again?"

The Chinese have an alphabet composed entirely of plants and roots, and we may yet read upon the rocks of Egypt the ancient conquests over that people recorded by foreign plants.

The Greeks, who cherished flowers, never acquired the art of cultivating and improving them. They simply planted them in the fields and received as nature yielded them. The Romans, with the arts of Greece also received a taste for flowers, and such was their passion for floral crowns that in the scarcity of flowers which ensued, they were compelled to confine their use to a favored few. These masters of the world cultivated nothing but roses and violets. The Gauls were long ignorant of every delicacy. Their warlike hands disdained the handle of the plough. With them the garden was under the charge of the mistress of the family, and contained only aromatic plants and such as were useful for culinary purposes. At length their manners became softened, and Charlemagne, who was at the same time the terror of the world and the father of his people, delighted in flowers, and recommended the culture of various kinds.

Foreign flowers were not introduced into Europe until the thirteenth century. During the Crusades, warriors brought many new species from Egypt and Syria, of which the monks at that time were the only cultivators. They were at first the charm of their peaceful retreats; since then they have been scattered over all the earth, and they are become the companions of our pleasures.

FLORAL DIRECTORY FOR THE WEEK.

21st. St. Agnes, Christmas Rose, (Helleborus niger.)
22d. St. Vincent, Early Witlow Grass, (Draba verna.)
23d. St. Raymond, Peziza, (Peziza acetabulum.)
24th. St. Timothy, Stalkless Moss, (Phascum muticum.)
25th. St. Apollo, Winter Helleboro, (Helleborus hyemalis.) 26th. St. Paula, White-Butter-Bur, Tussilago alba.
27th. St. Chrysostom, Earth Moss, (Phascum cuspidatum.)

IRIS.

THE Pacific, a religious paper, heartily commends the idea of transplanting Bible characters from out the sacred pages to figure in cheap books, with execrable illustrations, and any amount of twaddle thrust into their mouths, for the amusement of the young. We submit that this is as much making game of the Patriarchs as the little boy did who always them "Partridges."

THE EMERALD STUDS.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE CIRCUIT.

CHAPTER I.

"HALLO, Tom! Are you not up yet? Why, man, the judges have gone down to the court half an hour ago, escorted by the most ragged regiment of ruffians that ever handled a Lochaber-axe."

Such was my matutinal salutation to my friend Thomas Strachan, as I entered his room on a splendid spring morning. Tom and I were early college allies. We had attended, or rather, to speak more correctly, taken our tickets for the different law classes during the same sessions. We had fulminated together within the walls of the Juridical Society on legal topics which might have broken the heart of Erskine, and rewarded ourselves diligently thereafter with the usual relaxations of a crab and a comfortable tumbler. We had aggravated the same grinder with our deplorable exposition of the Pandects; and finally assumed, on the same day, the full-blown honors of the Advocate's wig and gown. Nor did our fraternal parallel end there: for although we had walked the boards of the Parliament House with praiseworthy diligence for a couple of sessions, neither of us had experienced the dulcet sensation which is communicated to the palm by the contact of the first professional guinea. In vain did we attempt to insinuate ourselves into the good graces of the agents, and coin our intellects into such jocular remarks as are supposed to find most favor in the eyes of facetious practitioners. In vain did I carry about with me, for a whole week, an artificial process most skilfully made up; and in vain did Tom compound and circulate a delectable ditty, entitled, "The Song of the Multiplepoinding." Not a single solicitor would listen to our wooing, or even intrust us with the task of making the simplest motion. I believe they thought me too fast, and Tom too much of a genius; and, therefore, both of us were left among the ranks of the briefless army of the stove. This would not do. Our souls burned within us with a noble thirst for legal fame and fees. We held a consultation (without an agent) at the Rainbow, and finally determined that since Edinburgh would not hear us, Jedburgh should have the privilege of monopolizing our maiden eloquence at the ensuing justiciary circuit. Jedburgh presents a capital field to the ambition of a youthful candidate. Very few counsel go that way; the cases are usually trifling, and the juries easily bamboozled. It has besides this immense advantage—that should you by any accident happen to break down, nobody will in all probability be the wiser for it, provided you have the good sense to ingratiate yourself with the circuit clerk.

Tom and I arrived at Jedburgh the afternoon before the circuit began. I was not acquainted with a human being within the parliamentary boundaries of that respectable borough, and therefore experienced but a slight spasm of disappointment, when informed by the waiter at the inn, that no inquiries had yet been made after me, on the part of writers desirous of professional assistance. Strachan had been wiser. Somehow or other, he had got a letter of introduction to one Bailie Beeric, a notable civic dignitary of the place; and accordingly, on presenting his credentials, was invited by that functionary to dinner, with a hint that he "might maybe see a wheen real leddies in the evening." This pointed so plainly to a white choker and dress boots, that Strachan durst not take the liberty of volunteering the attendance of his friend; and accordingly I had been left alone to wile away, as I best might, the tedium of a sluggish evening. Before starting, however, Tom pledged himself to return in time for supper; as he entertained a painful conviction that the party would be excessively slow.

So long as it was light, I amused myself pretty well, by strolling along the banks of the river, and enunciating a splendid speech for the pannel in an imaginary case of murder. However, before I reached the peroration (which was to consist of a vivid picture of the death-bed of a despairing juryman, conscience-stricken by the recollection of an erroneous verdict,) the shades of evening began to close in; the trouts ceased to leap in the pool, and the rooks desisted from their cawing. I returned to discuss my solitary mutton at the inn; and then, having nothing to do, sat down to a moderate libation, and an odd number of the Temperance Magazine, which valuable tract had been left for the reformation of the traveller by some peripatetic disciple of Father Matthew.

Nine o'clock came, but so did not Strachan. I began to wax wroth, muttered anathemas against my faithless friend, rang for the waiter, and—having ascertained the fact that a Masonic Lodge was that evening engaged in celebrating the festival of its peculiar patron—I set out for the purpose of assisting in the pious and mystic labors of the Brethren of the Jedburgh St. Jeremy. At twelve, when I returned to my quarters, escorted by the junior deacon, I was informed that Strachan had not made his appearance, and accordingly I went to bed.

Next morning I found Tom, as already mentioned, in his couch. There was a fine air of negligence in the manner in which his habiliments were scattered over the room. One glazed boot lay within the fender, whilst the other had been chucked into a coal-scuttle; and there were evident marks of mud on the surface of his glossy kerseymeres. Strachan himself looked excessively pale, and the sole rejoinder he made to my preliminary remark was, a request for soda-water.

"Tom," said I, inexpressibly shocked at the implied confession of the nature of his vespers—"I wonder you are not ashamed of yourself! Have you no higher regard for the dignity of the bar you represent, than to expose yourself before a Jedburgh Bailie?"

"Dignity be hanged!" replied the incorrigible Strachan. "Bailie Beerie is a brick, and I won't hear a word against him. But, O Fred! if you only knew what you missed last night! Such a splendid woman—by Jove, sir, a thoroughbred angel. A bust like one of Titian's beauties, and the voice of a lovelorn nightingale!"

"One of the Misses Beeric, I presume. Come, Tom, I think I can fill up your portrait. Hair of the auburn complexion, slightly running into the carrot—skin fair, but freckled—greenish eyes—red elbows—culpable ankles—elephantine waist—and sentiments savoring of the Secession."

"Ring the bell for the waiter, and hold your impious tongue. You never were further from the mark in your life. The wing of the raven is not more glossy than her hair—and oh, the depth and melting lustre of those dark unfathomable eyes! Waiter! a bottle of soda-water, and you may put in a thimbleful of cognac."

"Come, Tom! none of your ravings. Is this an actual Armida, or a new freak of your own imagination?"

"Bona fide—an angel in everything, barring the wings."

"Then how the deuce did such a phenomenon happen to emerge at the Bailie's?"

"That's the very question I was asking myself during the whole time of dinner. She was clearly not a Scotswoman. When she spoke, it was in the sweet low accents of a southern clime; and she waved away the proffered haggis with an air of the prettiest disgust!"

"But the Bailie knew her?"

"Of course he did. I got the whole story out of him after dinner, and, upon my honor, I think it is the most romantic one I ever heard. About a week ago, the lady arrived here without attendants. Some say she came in the mail-coach—others in a dark travelling chariot and pair. However, what matters it? the jewel can derive no lustre or value from the casket!"

"Yes—but one always likes to have some kind of idea of the setting. Get on."

"She seemed in great distress, and inquired whether there were any letters at the post-office addressed to the Honorable Dorothea Percy. No such epistle was to be found. She then interrogated the landlord, whether an elderly lady, whose appearance she minutely described, had been seen in the neighborhood of Jedburgh; but except old Mrs. Slimmingham of Summertrees, who has been bed-ridden for years, there was nobody in the county who at all answered to the description. On hearing this, the lady seemed profoundly agitated—shut herself up in a private parlor, and refused all sustenance."

"Had she not a reticule with sandwiches, Tom?"

"Do not tempt me to commit justifiable homicide—you see I am in the act of shaving. At last the landlady, who is a most respectable person, and who felt deeply interested at the desolate situation of the poor young lady, ventured to solicit an interview. She was admitted. There are moments when the sympathy of even the humblest friend is precious. Miss Percy felt grateful for the interest so displayed, and confided the tale of her griefs to the matronly bosom of the hostess."

"And she told you?"

"No—but she told Bailie Beerie. That active magistrate thought it his duty to interfere. He waited upon Miss Percy, and from her lips he gathered the full particulars of her history. Percy is not her real name, but she is the daughter of an English peer of very ancient family. Her father having married a second time, Dorothea was exposed to the persecutions of a low-minded vulgar woman, whose whole ideas were of that mean and mercenary description which characterize the Caucasian race. Naomi Shekels was the offspring of a Jew, and she hated, whilst she envied, the superior charms of the noble Norman maiden. But she had gained an enormous supremacy over the wavering intellect of the elderly Viscount; and Dorothea was commanded to receive, with submission, the addresses of a loathsome apostate, who had made a prodigious fortune in the railways."

"One of the tribe of Issachar?"

"Exactly. A miscreant whose natural function was the vending of cast habiliments. Conceive, Fred, what the fair young creature must have felt at the bare idea of such shocking spousals! She besought, prayed, implored—but all in vain. Mammon had taken too deep a root in the paternal heart—the old coronet had been furbished up by means of Israelitish gold, and the father could not see any degradation in forcing upon his child an alliance similar to his own."

"You interest me excessively."

"Is it not a strange tale?" continued Thomas, adjusting a false collar round his neck. "I knew you would agree with me when I came to the pathetic part. Well, Fred, the altar was decked, the ornaments ready, the Rabbi bespoke—"

"Do you mean to say, Strachan, that Lady Dorothea was to have been married after the fashion of the Jews?"

"I don't know exactly. I think Beerie said it was a Rabbi; but that may have been a flight of his own imagination. However, somebody was ready to have tied the nuptial knot, and all the joys of existence, and its hopes, were about to fade forever from the vision of my poor Dorothea!"

"Your Dorothea!" cried I in amazement. "Why, Tom—you don't mean to insinuate that you have gone that length already?"

"Did I say mine?" repeated Strachan, looking somewhat embarrassed. "It was a mere figure of speech: you always take me up so uncommonly short. Nothing remained for her but flight, or submission to the cruel mandate. Like a heroic girl, in whose veins the blood of the old crusaders was bounding, she preferred the former alternative. The only relation to whom she could apply in so delicate a juncture, was an aged aunt, residing somewhere in the north of Scotland. To her she wrote, beseeching her, as she regarded the memory of her buried sister, to receive her miserable child; and she appointed this town, Jedburgh, as the place of meeting."

"But where's the aunt?"

"That's just the mysterious part of the business. The crisis was so imminent that Dorothea could not wait for a reply. She disguised herself—packed up a few jewels which had been bequeathed to her by her mother—and, at the dead of night, escaped from her father's mansion. Judge of her terror when, on arriving here, panting and perhaps pursued, she could obtain no trace whatever of her venerable relative. Alone, inexperienced, and unfriended, I tremble to think what might have been her fate, had it not been for the kind humanity of Beerie."

"And what was the Bailie's line of conduct?"

"He behaved to her, Fred, like a parent. He supplied her wants, and invited her to make his house her home, at least, until the aunt should appear. But the noble creature would not subject herself to the weight of so many obligations. She accepted, indeed, his assistance, but preferred remaining here, until she could place herself beneath legitimate guardianship. And doubtless," continued Strachan with fervor, "her good angel is watching over her."

"And this is the whole story?"

"The whole."

"Do you know, Tom, it looks uncommonly like a piece of deliberate humbug!"

"Your ignorance misleads you, Fred. You would not say so had you seen her. So sweet—so gentle—with such a tinge of melancholy resignation in her eye, like that of a virgin martyr about to suffer at the stake! No one could look upon her for a moment, and doubt her purity and truth."

"Perhaps. But you must allow that we are not living exactly in the age of romance. An elopement with an officer of dragoons is about the furthest extent of legitimate enterprise which is left to a modern damsel; and, upon my word, I think the story would have told better, had some such hero been inserted as a sort of counterpoise to the Jew. But what's the matter? Have you lost anything?"

"It is very odd!" said Strachan. "I am perfectly certain that I had on my emerald studs last night. I recollect that Dorothea admired them exceedingly. Where on earth can I have put them?"

"I don't know, I'm sure. I suspect, Tom, you and the Bailie were rather convivial after supper. Is your watch wound up?"

"Of course it is. I assure you you are quite wrong. It was a mere matter of four or five tumblers. Very odd this! Why—I can't find my watch neither!"

"Hallo! what the deuce! Have we fallen into a den of thieves? This is a nice beginning to our circuit practice."

"I could swear, Fred, that I put it below my pillow before I went to sleep. I remember, now, that it was some time before I could fit in the key. What can have become of it?"

"And have you not left your room since?"

"No, on my word of honor."

"Pooh—pooh! Then it can't possibly be gone. Look beneath the bolster."

But in vain did we search beneath bolster, mattress, and blankets; yea, even downwards to the fundamental straw. Not a trace was to be seen of Cox Savory's horizontal lever, jewelled, as Tom pathetically remarked, in four special holes, and warranted to go for a year without more than a minute's deviation. Neither were the emerald studs, the pride of Strachan's heart, forthcoming. Boots, chambermaid, and waiter, were collectively summoned—all assisted in the search, and all asseverated their own integrity.

"Are ye sure, sir, that ye brocht them hame?" said the waiter, an acute lad, who had served his apprenticeship at a commercial tavern in the Gorbals; "ye was gey and fou' when ye cam in here yestreen."

"What do you mean, you rascal?"

"Ye ken ye wadna gang to bed till ye had anither tumber."

"Don't talk trash! It was the weakest cold-without in the creation."

"And then ye had a sair feeht on politics wi' anither man in the coffee-room."

"Ha! I remember now—the bagman, who is a member of the League! Where is the commercial villain?"

"He gaed off at sax preceesely, this morning, in his gig, to Kelso."

"Then, by the head of Thistlewood!" cried Strachan, frantically, "my ticker will be turned into tracts against the corn-laws!"

"Hoot na!" said the waiter. "I cana thiuk that. He looked an unco respectable-like man."

"No man can be respectable," replied the aristocratic Thomas, "who sports such infernal opinions as I heard him utter last night. My poor studs! Fred—they were a gift from Mary Rivers before we quarrelled, and I would not have lost them for the universe! Only think of them being exposed for sale at a free-trade bazaar!"

"Come, Tom—they may turn up yet."

"Never in this world, exeept at a pawnbroker's. I could go mad to think that my last memorial of Mary is in all probability glittering in the unclean shirt of a bagman!"

"Had you not better apply to Fiscal?"

"For what purpose? Doubtless the scoundrel has driven off to the nearest railway, and is triumphantly counting the mile posts as he steams to his native Leeds. No, Fred. Both watch and studs are gone beyond the hope of redemption."

"The loss is certainly a serious one."

"No doubt of it: but a thought strikes me. You recollect the edict, nautæ, caupones, stabularii? I have not studied the civil law for nothing, and am clearly of opinion, that in such a case the landlord is liable."

"By Jove! I believe you are right. But it would be as well to turn up Shaw and Dunlop for a precedent before you make any more row about it. Besides, it may be rather difficult to establish that you lost them at the inn."

"If they only refer the matter to my oath, I can easily settle that point," replied Strachan. "Besides, now that I think of it, Miss Percy can speak to the watch. She asked me what o'clock it was just before we parted on the stairs."

"Eh, what! Is the lady in this house?"

"To be sure—did I not tell you so?"

"I say, Tom—couldn't you contrive to let one have a peep at this angel of yours?"

"Quite impossible. She is the shyest creature in the world, and would shrink from the sight of a stranger."

"But, my dear Tom—"

"I can't do it, I tell you; so it's no use asking me."

"Well, I must say you are abominably selfish. But what on earth are you going to do with that red and blue Joinville? You can't go down to court without a white neckcloth."

"I am not going down to court."

"Why, my good fellow! what on earth is the meaning of this?"

"I am not going down to court, that's all. I say, Fred, how do I look in this sort of thing?"

"Uncommonly like a cock-pheasant in full plumage. But tell me what you mean?"

"Well, since you must needs know, I am going up stairs to breakfast with Miss Percy."

So saying, Mr. Strachan made me a polite bow, and left the apartment. I took my solitary way to the court house, marvelling at the extreme rapidity of the effect which is produced by the envenomed darts of Cupid.

CHAPTER II.

On entering the court, I found that the business had commenced. An enormous raw-boned fellow, with a shock of the fieriest hair, and hands of such dimensions that a mere glimpse of them excited unpleasant sensations at your windpipe, was stationed at the bar, to which from previous practice, he had acquired a sort of prescriptive right.

"James M'Wilkin, or Wilkinson, or Wilson," said the presiding judge, in a tone of disgust which heightened with each successive alias, "attend to the indictment which is about to be preferred against you."

And certainly, if the indictment contained a true statement of the facts, James M'Wilkin, or Wilkinson, or Wilson, was about as thorough-paced a marauder as ever perambulated a common. He was charged with sheep-stealing and assault; inasmuch as, on a certain night subsequent to the Kelso fair, he, the said individual with the plural denominations, did wickedly and feloniously steal, uplift, and away take from a field adjoining to the Northumberland road, six wethers, the property, or in the lawful possession of Jacob Gubbins, grazier, then and now or lately residing in Morpeth; and moreover, on being followed by the said Gubbins, who demanded restitution of his property, he, the said M'Wilkin, etc., had, in the most brutal manner, struck, knocked down, and lavished divers kicks upon the corporality of the Northumbrian bumpkin, to the fracture of three of his ribs, and otherwise to the injury of his person.

During the perusal of this formidable document by the clerk, M'Wilkin stood scratching his poll, and leering about him as though he considered the whole ceremony as a sort of solemn joke. I never in the whole course of my life cast eyes on a more nonchalant or unmitigated ruffian.

"How do you say, M'Wilkin," asked the judge; "are you guilty or not guilty?"

"Not guilty, aff course. D'ye tak me for a fule?" and M'Wilkin flounced down upon his seat, as though he had been an ornament to society.

"Have you a counsel?" asked the judge.

"De'il ane—nor a bawbee," replied the freebooter.

Acting upon the noble principle of Scottish jurisprudence, that no man shall undergo his trial without sufficient legal advice, his lordship in the kindest manner asked me to take charge of the fortunes of the forlorn M'Wilkin. Of course I made no scruples; for, so long as it was matter of practice, I should have felt no hesitation in undertaking the defence of Beelzebub. I therefore leaned across the dock, and exchanged a few hurried sentences with my first client.

"Why don't you plead guilty?"

"What for? I've been here before. Man, I'm thinkiug ye're a saft ane!"

"Did you not steal the sheep?"

"Aye—that's just the question. Let them find that out."

"But the grazier saw you!"

"I blackened his e'es."

"You'll be transported, to a dead certainty."

"Deevil a fears, if ye're worth the price o' half a mutchkin. I'm saying—get me a Hawick jury, and it's a' right. They ken me gey and weel thereabouts."

Although I was by no means satisfied in my own mind that an intimate acquaintance with M'Wilkin and his previous pursuits would be a strong recommendation in his favor to any possible assize, I thought it best to follow his instructions, and managed my challenges so well that I secured a majority of Hawickers. The jury being sworn in, the cause proceeded; and certainly, before three witnesses had been examined, it appeared to me beyond all manner of doubt that my unfortunate client was as a permanent addition to that cultivated and Patigonian population. The grazier stood to his story like a man, and all efforts to break him down by cross-examination were fruitless. There was another hawbuck, who swore to the sheep, and was witness to the assault; so that, in fact, the evidence was legally complete.

"Doom'd the long coves of Sydney isle to see,"

Whilst I was occupied in the vain attempt to make Gubbins contradict himself, there had been a slight commotion in the court-room. On looking round afterwards, I was astonished to behold my friend Strachan seated in the magistrate's box, next to a very pretty and showily-dressed woman, to whom he was paying the most marked and deliberate attention. On the other side of her was an individual in a civic chain, whose fat, pursy, apoplectic appearance, and nose of the color of an Orleans plum, thoroughly realized my mental picture of the Bailie. His small, blood-shot eyes twinkled with magisterial dignity and importance; and he looked, beside Miss Percy—for I could not doubt that it was she—like a satyr in charge of Florimel.

The last witness for the Crown, a very noted police officer from Glasgow, was then put into the box to prove a previous conviction against my friend M'Wilkin. This man bore a high reputation in his calling, and was, indeed, esteemed as a sort of Scottish Vidocq, who knew by headmark every filcher of a handkerchief between Caithness and the Border. He met the bold broad stare of the prisoner with a kind of nod, as much as to assure him that his time was very nearly up; and then deliberately proceeded to take a hawk's-eye view of the assembly. I noticed a sort of quiet sneer as he glanced at the magistrate's box.

"Poor Strachan!" thought I. "His infatuation must indeed be palpable, since even a common officer can read his secret in a moment."

I might just as well have tried to shake Ailsa Craig as to make an impression upon this witness; however, heroically devoted to my trust, I hazarded the attempt, and ended by bringing out several additional tales of turpitude in the life and times of M'Wilkin.

"Make room there in the passage! The lady has fainted," cried the macer.

I started to my feet, and was just in time to see Miss Percy conveyed from the court in an apparently inanimate state, by the Bailie and the agitated Strachan.

"Devilish fine-looking woman that!" observed the Advocate-Deputy across the table. "Where did your friend Mr. Strachan get hold of her?"

"I really don't know. I say—are you going to address the jury for the crown?"

"It is quite immaterial. The case is distinctly proved, and I presume you don't intend to speak?"

"I'm not so sure of that."

"Oh, well—in that case I suppose I must say a word or two. This closes the evidence for the crown, my lord," and the Deputy began to turn over his papers preparatory to a short harangue.

He had just commenced his speech, when I felt a hand laid upon my shoulder. I looked around: Strachan was behind me, pale and almost breathless with excitement.

"Fred—can I depend upon your friendship?"

"Of course you can. What's the row?"

"Have you ten pounds about you?"

"Yes—but what do you mean to do with them? Surely you are not going to make a blockhead of yourself by bolting?"

"No—no! give me the money—quick!"

"On your word of honor, Tom?"

On my sacred word of honor! That's a good fellow—thank you, Fred;" and Strachan pocketed the currency. "Now," said he, "I have just one other request to make."

"What's that?"

"Speak against time, there's a dear fellow! Spin out the case as long as you can, and don't let the jury retire for at least three-quarters of an hour. I know you can do it better than any other man at the bar."

"Are you in earnest, Tom?"

"Most solemnly. My whole future happiness—nay, perhaps, the life of a human being depends upon it."

"In that case I think I shall tip them an hour."

"Heaven reward you, Fred! I never can forget your kindness!"

"But where shall I see you afterwards?"

"At the hotel. Now, my dear boy, be sure that you pitch it in, and, if possible, get the judge to charge after you. Time's all that's wanted—adieu!" and Tom disappeared in a twinkling.

I had little leisure to turn over the meaning of this interview in my mind, for the address of my learned opponent was short and pithy. He merely pointed out the clear facts, as substantiated by evidence, and brought home to the unhappy M'Wilkin; and concluded by demanding a verdict on both charges contained in the indictment against the prisoner.

"Do you wish to say anything, sir?" said the judge to me, with a kind of tone which indicated his hope that I was going to say nothing. Doubtless, his lordship thought that, as a very young counsel, I would take the hint; but he was considerably mistaken in his man. I came to the bar for practice—I went on the circuit with the solemn determination to speak in every case, however desperate; and it needed not the admonition of Strachan to make me carry my purpose into execution. What did I care about occupying the time of the court? His lordship was paid to listen, and could very well afford to hear the man who was pleading for M'Wilkin without a fee. I must say, however, that he looked somewhat disgusted when I rose.

A first appearance is a nervous thing, but there is nothing like going boldly at your subject. "Fiat experimentum in corpore villi," is a capital maxim in the Justiciary Court. The worse your case, the less chance you have to spoil it; and I never had a worse than M'Wilkin's.

I began by buttering the jury on their evident intelligence and the high functions they had to discharge, which of course were magnified to the skies. I then went slap-dash at the evidence; and, as I could say nothing in favor of my client, directed a tremendous battery of abuse and insinuation against his accuser.

"And who is this Gubbins, gentlemen, that you should believe this most incredible, most atrocious, and most clumsy apocrypha of his? I will tell you. He is an English butcher—a dealer in cattle and in bestial—one of those men who derive their whole subsistence from the profits realized by the sale of our native Scottish produce. This is the way in which our hills are depopulated, and our glens converted into solitudes. It is for him and his confederates—not for us—that our shepherds watch and toil, that our herds and flocks are reared, that the richness of the land is absorbed! And who speaks to the character of this Gubbins? You have heard the pointless remarks made by my learned friend upon the character of my unfortunate client; but he has not dared to adduce in this court one single witness in behalf of the character of his witness. Gentlemen, he durst not do it! Gubbins has deponed to you that he bought these sheep at the fair of Kelso, from a person of the name of Shiells, and that he paid the money for them. Where is the evidence of that? Where is Shiells to tell us whether he actually sold these sheep, or whether on the contrary they were not stolen from him? Has it been proved to you, gentlemen, that M'Wilkin is not a friend of Shiells—that he did not receive notice of the theft—that he did not pursue the robber, and, recognizing the stolen property by their mark, seize them for the benefit of their owner? No such proof at least has been led upon the part of the Crown, and in the absence of it, I ask you fearlessly, whether you can possibly violate your consciences by returning a verdict of guilty? Is it not possible—nay, is it not extremely probable—that Gubbins was the actual thief? Was it not his interest, far more than McWilkin's, to abstract those poor unhappy sheep, because it is avowedly his trade to fill the insatiable maw of the Southron?

And in that case, who should be at the bar? Gubbins! Gubbins, I say, who this day has the unparalleled audacity to appear before an enlightened Scottish jury, and to give evidence which, in former times, might have led to the awful consequence of the execution of an innocent man! Evideuce to condemn a fellow-countryman, gentlemen? No—not to condemn a dog!"

Having thus summarily disposed of Gubbins, I turned my artillery against the attendant drover and the policeman. The first I indignantly denounced as either an accomplice or a a tool: the second I smote more severely. Policemen are not popular in Hawick; and, knowing this, I contrived to blacken the Scottish Vidocq as a bloodhound.

But by far the finest flight of fancy in which I indulged was reserved for the peroration. I was not quite sure of the effect of my commentary on the evidence, and therefore thought it might be advisable to touch upon a national raw.

"And now, gentlemen," said I, "assuming for one moment that all my learned friend has said to you is true—that the sheep really belonged to this Gubbins, and were taken from him by M'Wilkin—let us calmly and deliberately consider how far such a proceeding can be construed into a crime. What has my unfortunate client done that he should be condemned by a jury of his countrymen? What he stands charged with is simply this—that he has prevented an Englishman from driving away the produce of our native hills. And is this a crime? It may be so, for aught I know, by statute; but sure I am, that in the intention, to which you must look, there lies a far deeper element of patriotism than of deliberate guilt. Think for one moment, gentlemen, of the annals of which we are so proud—of the ballads still chanted in the hall and in the hamlet—of the lonely graves and headstones that are scattered all along the surface of the southern muirs. Do not these annals tell us how the princes and the nobles of the land were wont to think it neither crime nor degradation to march with their retainers across the Borders, and to harry with fire and sword the fields of Northumberland and Durham? Randolph and the Bruce have done it, and yet no one dares to attach the stigma of dishonor to their names. Do not our ballads tell how at Lammas-tide,

> "The doughty Earl of Douglas rade
> Into England to fetch a prey?"

And who shall venture to impeach the honor of the hero who fell upon the field of Otterbourne? Need I remind you of those who have died in their country's cause, and whose graves are still made the object of many a pious pilgrimage? Need I speak of Flodden, that woful place where the Flowers of the Forest were left lying in one ghastly heap around their king? Ah, gentlemen! have I touched you now? True, it was in the olden time that these things were done and celebrated; but remember this, that society may change its place. states and empires may rise and be consolidated, but patriotism still lives enduring and undying as of yore! And who shall dare to say that patriotism was not the motive of M'Wilkin? Who shall presume to analyze or to blame the instinct which may have driven him to the deed? Call him not a felon—call him rather a poet; for over his kindling imagination fell the mighty shadow of the past. Old thoughts, old feelings, old impulses, were burning in his soul. He saw Gubbins, not the grazier, but the lawless spoiler of his country; and he rose, as a Borderer should, to viudicate the honor of his race. He may have been mistaken in what he did, but the motive, at least, was pure. Honor it then, gentlemen, for it is the same motive which is at all times the best safeguard of a nation's independence; and do honor likewise to yourselves by pronouncing a unanimous verdict of acquittal in favor of the prisoner at the bar!"

By the time I had finished this haraugue, I was wrought up to such a pitch of enthusiasm, that I really cousidered M'Wilkin in the light of an extremely ill-used individual, and the tears stood in my eyes as I recapitulated the history of his wrongs. Several of the jury, too, began to get extremely excited, and looked as fierce as falcons when I reminded them of the field of Flodden. But my hopes were considerably damped when I heard the charge of his lordship With all respect for the eminent senator who that day presided on the bench, I think he went rather too far when he designated my maiden-effort a rhapsody which could only be excused on account of the inexperience of the gentleman who uttered it. Passing from that unpleasant style of stricture, he went seriatim over all the crimes of M'Wilkin, and very distinctly indicated his opinion that a more consummate ruffian had seldom figured in the dock. When he concluded, however, there was a good deal of whispering in the jury-box, and at last the gentlemen of the assize requested permission to retire.

"That was a fine flare-up of yours, Freddy," said Anthony Whaup, the only other counsel for the prisoners upon the circuit. "You came it rather strong, though, in the national line. I don't think our venerable frieud overhead half likes your ideas on international law."

"Why, yes—I confess he gave me a tolerable wigging But what would you have me do? I must have said something."

"Oh, by Jove, you were perfectly right! I always make a point of speaking myself; and I can assure you that you did remarkably well. It was a novel view, but decidedly ingenious, and may lead to great results. If that fellow gets off, you may rely upon it there will be some bloodshed again upon the Border.'

"And a jolly calendar, of course, for next circuit. I say, Anthony—how many cases have you got!"

"Two thefts with habit and repute, a hame-sucken, rather a good forgery, and an assault with intent to commit."

"Long?"

"Rather—but poor pay. I haven't sacked more than nine guineas altogether. Gad!" continued Anthony, stretching himself, "this is slow work. I'd rather by a great deal be rowing on the canal."

"Hush! here come the jury."

They entered, took their seats, and each man in succession answered to his name. M'Wilkin looked as leouine as ever, and kept winking perseveringly to the Hawickers.

"Now, gentlemeu," said the clerk of court, what is your verdict?"

The foreman rose. "The jury, by a majority, find the charges against the prisoner NOT PROVEN."

"Hurrah!" shouted M'Wilkin, reckless of all authority. "Hurrah!" I say—you counsellor in the wig—ye shanna want a sheep's head thae three years, if there's ane to be had on the Border!"

And in this way I gained my first acquittal.

CHAPTER III.

I FOUND Strachan in his room with his face buried in the bed-clothes. He was kicking his legs as though he suffered under a violent fit of the toothache.

"I say, Tom, what's the matter? Look up, man! Do you know I've got that scoundrel off?"

No answer.

"Tom, I say! Tom, you dunderhead—what do you mean by making an ass of yourself this way? Get up, for shame, and answer me!"

Poor Strachan raised his head from the coverlet. His eyes were absolutely pink, and his cheeks of the tint of a lemon.

"O Fred, Fred!" said he, with a series of interjectional gasps, "I am the most unfortunate wretch in the universe. All the hopes I had fondly cherished are blighted at once in the bud! She is gone, my friend—gone away from me, and alas! I fear forever!"

"The deuce she has! and how?"

"Oh what madness tempted me to lead her to the court? what infatuation it was to expose those angelic features to the risk of recognition! Who that ever saw those dove-like eyes could forget them?"

"I have no objection to the eyes—they were really very passable. But who twigged her?"

"An emissary of her father's—that odious miscreant who was giving evidence at the trial."

"The policeman? Whew! Tom! I don't like that."

"He was formerly the land-steward of the Viscount—a callous, cruel wretch, who was more than suspected of having made away with his wife."

"And did he recognize her?"

"Dorothea says that she felt fascinated by the glitter of his cold gray eye. A shuddering sensation passed through her frame, just as the poor warbler of the woods quivers at the approach of the rattiesnake. A dark mist gathered before her sight, and she saw no more until she awoke to consciousness within my arms."

"Very pretty work, truly! And what then?"

"In great agitation, she told me that she durst tarry no longer here. She was certain that the officer would make it his business to track her, and communicate her hiding-place to her family; and she shook with horror when she thought of the odious Israelitish bridegroom. 'The caverns of the deep green sea—the high Tarpeian rock—the Leucadian cliff of Sappho;' she said, 'all would be preferable to that! And yet, O Thomas, to think that we should have met so suddenly, and that to part forever!' 'Pon my soul, Fred, I am the most miserable of created beings."

"Why, what on earth has become of her?"

"Gone—and I don't know whither. She would not even apprise the Bailie of her departure, lest she might leave some clue for discovery. She desired me to see him, to thank him, and to pay him for her; all of which I promised to do. With one kiss—one deep, burning, agonized kiss, which I shall carry with me to my grave—she tore herself away, sprang into the post-chaise, and in another moment was lost to me forever!"

"And my ten pounds?" said I, in a tone of considerable emotion.

"Would you have had me think twice," asked Strachan indignantly, "before I tendered my assistance to a forlorn angel in distress, even though she possessed no deeper claims on my sympathy? I thought, Frederick, you had more chivalry in your nature. You need not be uneasy about that trifle; I shall be in funds some time about Christmas."

"Humph! I thought it was a P. P. transaction; but no matter. And is this all the clue you have got to the future residence of the lady?"

"No; she is to write me from the nearest post town. You will see, Fred, when the letter arrives, how well worthy she is my adoration."

To be concluded next week.

THE BONE MAN OF HOSTONIC.

IN a recess beside the great west door of the church of Hostonic, in Bohemia, stood for many generations a gaunt skeleton, its skull drooping on the breast, and the hands folded as though in prayer. Immediately before it was the tomb of a noble family once residing in the neighborhood, but now extinct.

The strange attitude of the skeleton fixed the idea in the popular mind that the Bone Man prayed without ceasing to a dead woman, who lay in the vault before him. Several times was the skeleton removed from its niche, and buried under a green sod in the churchyard, but on the following morning, those who came to early mass saw the grave open, and the turf folded back, and within the sacred building stood, as before, the white Bone Man with drooping head, and folded hands, at the vault door. And well might he be condemned by the judgment of God to stand thus year by year, before the tomb, for long ago he had been a lawless knight, fearing not God, nor regarding man, and he had come in his wanderings to Hostonic, where he hae seen the Lily of Hostonic, the only daughter of the nobleman who then inhabited the castle whose ruins are now the haunt of the owl, and he had brought the Lily to shame, and to an early death. When the old lord in anger slew him, his corpse would not rest in its grave, but rose, and stationed itself at the head of the tomb, with the dim eyes fixed on the sepulchral stone which hid the Lily, and there he awaited his release. The corpse became a skeleton, centuries rolled by, and still that release had not been effected. But one morning, those who went to church found the niche empty, and the skeleton had crumbled into a little heap of gray dust. How this was effected I will relate, as the Bohemian peasantry tell the tale.

One night there was an uproar in the tavern of Hostonic; three brothers, with their pockets full of money, had been drinking and gambling all day, and proposed continuing the same amusements all night. Their drunken shouts and laughter continued till long after every house in the village was closed, and every light extinguished.

They were waited upon by a servant girl who had been deserted by her husband, and who had but lately, for the first time, become a mother. By her poverty she had been driven into service. Many a rude and ugly joke at her expense was made by the tipsy men, but she remained silent, modestly and patiently waiting on them without speaking more than was necessary.

As she came out of the cellar with full pitcher, one of the brothers said to her, laughing:

"Well, my girl! I suppose you are busy making clothes for the baby, eh?"

"Ah, sir!" she replied, "I have not the materials of which to make them; would that I had. The poor little lamb will need them, indeed!"

"I'll tell you what," said the second brother, shaking his head drunkenly; "you must earn the money to buy them, and the cradle, too."

"Only too willingly, sir!"

"Well, I don't mind giving you the money," continued the thoughtless fellow; "if you will do something for it."

"Anything which is not beyond my strength," said the girl eagerly, as her cheek flushed with hope; "tell me what I am to do, and I will do it."

"Nothing very difficult, my girl, no-thing ve-ry dif-fi-cult," quoth the intoxicated man; and then, with a burst of laughter, he said, looking round to his brothers for applause, "you shall fetch me the skeleton which stands at the church door! Eh, lads, she shall do that, shan't she; and we will pay her?"

The maid recoiled in horror, and her cheek blanched.

"Oh, sir!" she said faintly, "do not make a mock of me in my misery, and tempt God with such profanities!"

But the other brothers praised him who had made the offer, and, drawing their purses from their pockets, they poured out thalers and groschens, and made of them a small pile in the middle of the table.

"There," shouted they; "fetch us the Bone Man, and you shall have this as a baptismal gift for your brat."

The poor girl trembled in every limb; she looked at the money, and then at the red, heated faces of the drunken men, and she knew not what to say. That little pile of silver would, indeed, be a godsend to her; but at what a cost was it to be won? She thought of the gloomy churchyard, and the solemn church, shrouded in darkness, and of the skeleton standing in the wall niche before the tomb.

"Come, you must not be long making up your mind," said the eldest of the brothers; "we do not make such offers more than once."

"Let me have two minutes to decide," she begged, looking once more at the money, and then, flying to her chamber, she bent over her little one and kissed it. "Anything for thee, my poor one!" she sighed; "and if it be a sin, may God in His mercy pardon me." Then, after having crossed herself, she returned to the parlor, and agreed to do what the three men required.

As she left the tavern, all was dark, a keen wind blew over the country, beneath a still, star-spangled, cloudless sky; it wailed among the eaves of the houses, and tossed the autumn leaves about in the square of the little town. The church stood on a rise; as the young woman approached it, her heart beat faster.

She opened the churchyard gate as the evening bell tinkled; she stood still, and recited her "Ave Maria" with fervor, then stepped out of sight, to allow the sexton to return without observing her. The old man, bent double with age, went coughing from the graveyard to his bed, and she remained alone among the dead. For some moments a struggle raged within her; she shuddered at the prospect of what she had to do, and felt disposed to return to the inn, but love for her babe prevailed, and she walked up the path leading to the church door.

And now there was a feeble glimmer in the east, and the new moon peeped above the horizon; and she shuddered as she stepped into the shadow of a mulberry-tree which grew in the churchyard.

She turned the handle of the door, and the latch flew up with a noise which was echoed through the vaults and aisles of the church. A feeble, rosy glow from the lamp burning before the Blessed Sacrament gleamed on the altar, but a white moonbeam through a low window fell along the west wall, bringing out the skull and folded hands as frosted silver, in strong relief against the ebon gloom of the recess in which stood the Bone Man of Hostonic. As the frightened girl looked on the skeleton, it seemed to her as though the fleshless mouth moved in prayer, and as though a blue flame flickered in the eye-cavities.

The girl summoned up all her courage, grasped the skeleton, flung it upon her back, and ran through the churchyard, passed the gate, flew with her rattling load across the market-place, dashed into the tavern, cast the Bone Man on the table, and sinking on a bench, burst into a flood of tears.

A silence fell upon those in the room; all looked with a shudder at the heap of bones, and then with astonishment at the girl. Even the three brothers recoiled from the skeleton as it was flung before them; the courage of the maid amazed them; they had reckoned on her turning back at the churchyard gate, and had calculated on joking her on the failure of her courage.

But the eldest, staggering to his feet, said, "I tell you all, the lass has well earned her money. She shall have it, and sit down by us and have a drop of something to warm her, too."

In the meanwhile the girl had somewhat recovered herself, and she was called to the table to give an account of her expedition. But she, still pale with fear, only replied to their questions with——

"God saved me from anything very terrible; but, as I carried the skeleton, it seemed to me as though some one were following. Not for any money would I do it again."

"But what is to be done with the Bone Man?" asked one of the brothers; "he cannot remain here, and I dare'n't take him back." "Nor I," said the second.

"And I am quite sure," hiccoughed the third, "that I couldn't walk as far."

"The skeleton must go back, that is positive," said the first: "We shall get into trouble if it is found."

"Then let her who brought it take it back," thundered out the second with an oath.

The maid, shuddering at the thought of having to make the horrible expedition again, exclaimed, "That was not part of our agreement. I have kept my portion of the contract, and you have said yourself that I have earned the money.

"So you have, my girl; so you have, undoubtedly," said the fellow; "but, hang it! we don't want to have a skeleton lying amongst our glasses, and under our very noses, whilst we are making merry. I'd take it myself to its proper place, were my legs steady enough, and my conscience clear. We will give you more money, if you will replace the Bone Man in his old position in Hostonic Church."

"Oh, sir!" gasped the maid; "I cannot! indeed! I swore I never would tempt God like this again for the love of gold."

"Nor shall you," quoth the toper; "not a groschen shall you get from any of us, if you do as we bid you; but this will I promise—I have no children of my own, and I will pay for the education of your little babe when it is old enough to go to school, and I call these comrades here to witness, that the lad shall not be unremembered in my will."

The maid looked with trembling at the hideous object which spraddled across the table. Her breast heaved; she folded her hands in prayer and closed her eyes. The agitation of her feelings, and the battle of conflicting passions, were clearly traceable on her countenance. Suddenly her face became calm.

"As you wish," she said, resolutely; "it is God's will. Yours be the sin, and you will have to answer for it."

As she spoke she lifted the clickering frame of bones, and slung it on her back. Firmly grasping her load, she went forth into the night, and none ventured to follow her.

Would you know the cause of the girl's courage? As she had prayed, an idea shot into her brain, as an inspiration from God, that she should dedicate her child to the church: she took the thought as a revelation of Divine will, and vowed there and then to offer her little one to God, if he would protect her on her expedition.

She traversed the market-place with her clattering burden, and began to ascend the hill, scarcely hearing the rattle made by the bones, for she had become used to the sound.

But as she neared the graveyard, the weight of her load became greater and greater, and the burden bowed her down. This she did not observe at first, as her senses were in a whirl of confusion, but, at the lych gate, it became so evident, that she was filled with overwhelming horror. In crossing the churchyard she sank repeatedly to her knees, all but prostrated beneath the load which seemed to weigh a hundredweight. It was with a desperate effort that she scrambled into the church, reached the niche, and tried to shake off her awful burden. With unspeakable horror she found that this was now beyond her power, for the fingers had interlaced upon her bosom, and the arms held her as in a vice.

A voice, like the moaning of wind through distant trees, rushed into her ear, and a chill breath stirred over her cheek.

"I will not let thee go until thou swearest to obtain pardon for me from her below. Descend into the vault and pray for me."

Every hair on the poor girl's head stiffened, and a cold sweat broke out upon her brow. She shivered as a leaf in the wind, and was unable to articulate a word in reply.

"Wilt thou do my will?" asked the voice, and the maid felt the hands tightening their grasp, and heard the creaking of the bone fingers against each other.

"I will," gasped she in her deadly fear. The fingers fell apart with a click, and the burden slipped from her shoulders. She turned and looked at the skeleton. A dim and phantom life seemed to animate its countenance, there was an expression of unutterable eagerness in the fleshless face, and a shiver of anxiety vibrating through the bony limbs. The jaws stirred, and the same strange voice rushed into the girl's ear.

"Lift the stone from the vault door, and go down the steps. You will find at the bottom a woman in black, sitting in her coffin, by lamplight reading a book. Plead with her for pardon. Till she pardons me, I can find no forgiveness with God."

The maid obeyed. She lifted the slab from its place by the iron ring which was riveted into it; it rose at her touch, and disclosed a steep flight of stone steps.

With swimming brain the girl descended into the vault. At the further end burned a dim flame. A soft cool air breathed over her cheek. As she reached the lowest step she looked round. The vault was capacious, with groined roof supported by huge drums of Romanesque pillars. A feeble glimmer irradiated it. On all sides were stone coffins with armorial bearings sculptured upon them. On some lay withered wreaths of flowers, on others corroded swords or helmets. The light by which all this was rendered visible proceeded from the small saffron flame of a lamp suspended in the centre of the vault over an open sarcophagus. There, draped in black, in her stone coffin, with her pale face supported on her hand, her head surrounded with a garland of faded roses, sat a woman reading out of a large book which lay open on her lap. The maid approached her with vacillating steps, and bent the knee before her. Not a motion in the solemn reading figure. The white face was not raised, nor the shadowed eyes lifted from the pages of the book.

With faltering voice the girl besought forgiveness for the Bone Man. No answer. The woman in her coffin seemed to be unconscious of the presence of a living being before her. More earnestly pleaded the maid, her heart beating, and a deep anxiety to obtain the knight's release filling her compassionate bosom. She called to the woman's remembrance her old love for the knight, the deep sorrow which he had endured for so many ages, standing deprived of rest before her tomb.

The reading woman shook her head without raising her eyes.

With heavy heart the girl retraced her steps, despairing of obtaining anything from the lady in the vault. At the top of the stair stood the Bone Man bathed in pure moonlight, an expression of agonizing expectation on his face, every bone clickering with emotion.—"Am I forgiven?"

"She has not forgiven you," answered the maid in a scarcely audible voice.

"Back, back into the vault, and plead till you have obtained my pardon."

The maid would have spoken, but the skeleton raised its hand and pointed peremptorily towards the vault, and the girl felt constrained to obey. Fear now disappeared, and she felt the warm blood flow into her cheek as evenly as though she were at home rocking the babe.

Again she knelt to the woman in black, and prayed with fervor for the Bone Man. She pleaded by the hopes of salvation, the mercy of God, the Redeemer's wounds; her tears fell on the sepulchre floor; she wrung her hands, and sobs broke the thread of her prayer. Still the pale woman remained unmoved, still did she read in the great book without raising her eyes to the weeping petitioner before her, and only at intervals shook her head. An hour passed thus; the girl clasped the rim of the sarcophagus, and writhed in the vehemence of her supplication on the pavement. There was no change in the pallid woman, save that the wreath about her temples had shed its withered leaves, and had broken into tiny fresh buds.

Faint and weary, despairing of success, the poor girl again retraced her steps to the upper world. The skeleton was at the top, leaning forward in breathless eagerness, and gray fear spread over its ghastly face.—"Has she forgiven me?"

The maid sadly shook her head.

"Back again," moaned the strange voice; "without you I cannot obtain pardon. If you cannot procure my release, I am accursed for ever. Quick! midnight is long past, and all must be decided before cockcrow."

The trembling bony hands were wrung in bitterness of distress.

Once more the maid descended. The same scene was re-enacted. Again she supplicated, and again, for all the answer she obtained was the shake of the pale woman's head. The girl had pleaded by the name of everything sacred and had failed, she seemed to have nothing left by which to plead; but, with her head on the cold floor in the exhaustion of her hope, she asked for pardon for the knight in the name of her own little new-born babe.

At the word the great book was closed, the pale woman looked up, and a flush ran over her face, the wreath of roses around her head burst into a glorious white flower, filling the vault with exquisite fragrance.

"For the sake of thy little babe he is pardoned," said the woman. Then she sank back in her coffin, the great book fell closed on her breast, the lid shut down with a clash, and the lamp went out.

The maid hurried above with joyous heart, guided by the patch of silver which the moon cast on the topmost step.

"She has pardoned you!" she cried, as she saw the white face gleaming down to her.

The voice which replied was soft as the murmur of a summer breeze among the corn.

"You have done well in asking in behalf of an innocent child. I in my life spared not innocence, and God sentenced me to find no rest till in the name of an innocent child I could obtain release.

The skeleton knelt towards the Blessed Sacrament, before which burned the sanctuary lamp.

"Glory to be God!" he said, and extended his fleshless arms, and his jaws moved in prayer and thanksgiving.

The girl looked at him, kneeling in the glory of the moon, and a sweetness and calm settled over the face, divesting it of all that was dreadful. Softly and almost imperceptibly he seemed to melt away, with the peaceful and beautiful expression on the uplifted countenance steadily brightening, and when the crowing of the cock rang out sharply through the night air, the Bone Man of Hostonic was a little heap of dust.

DRYING WILD FLOWERS.—Procure a large stock of blotting-paper. The thin red kind is the best, at least for succulent plants. If you have not got a napkin-press, you will require two nice smooth pieces of board about the size of half a sheet of the blotting-paper, and four rather heavy square stones, which, for convenience and appearance sake, may be incased in gray linen bags, the strings of which should form loops. The plants must be spread out in the most natural manner. Small plants of those whose roots are remarkable, like the wood-sorrel, and many species of birches, are best dried whole if the roots are well cleaned, and quite free from moisture. It is often necessary to remove some of the leaves and flowers when they are too much crowded. Light weights are useful for keeping parts of refractory plants in position, while the other parts are being settled.

The blotting-paper, when folded in two, will form pages about twenty-four inches in length, and fifteen in breadth. Place the plants on the sixth page of the blotting-book, which, however, should not be stitched at the back; then turn over to the twelfth page (soft, moist plants, like the blue-bell, require more paper over them than this for the first few days, and hard, dry ones, such as ferns, require less,) arrange more plants on it, and so on, till the stock of blotting-paper, flowers, or patience is exhausted. Then place the pile of plants and papers between the boards, and lay on one or two of the weights. Leave them undisturbed till the next day; then dry the papers well, replace the plants, and add an additional stone. Repeat the same process for the next two days. After that time it will be sufficient to dry them once or twice a week. When quite dry, the specimens have to be fastened down with strips of paper, and classified. The herbarium must always be kept in a dry, warm room, and under a light weight.

LINES,

KIMPOSED A BORED OF A CALIFORNY MALE STEEMER.

BY A PARSINGER.

WAL! of all the cussèd kinveyances,
Ef this isn't ahont the wust!
Nothin but rockin and rollin
An pitchin, from the verry fust—
The ingine a groanin, and the biler
Lyable enny minnit to bust.

Fust wnn side, dnm it, and then tnther!
Till Ime dogged ef I no wot to du—
Rock away, yu darned old kradle!
I was a baby wen I got inter you!

None on em seems to keer 6¼ cents
How bad a feller may feel,
Nur to talk to him—not even the sailer
Foolin away his time on a wheel.

Thar's the capting! aint it provokin
To see that critter, all threw the trip,
Continoually drinkin and smokin,
Wen he orter he a mindin on his ship.

It's enuf to aggervait a body,
And it aint manners, I think,
To set thar takin down his toddy,
And never askin nary parsinger to drink.

And the purser, all he keers fur,
Is fur to hev a time with his pals.
I say, darn sech a purser! jest heer him
Flurtin and carrin on among the gals!

And wen he's tired o' that, wot follers?
In his litle cabbing thar he sets
Like a spyder, among hernils o' dollers—
Enuf to pay a feller's dets.

That's all they keers for parsingers,
Is, to git the two-hunder-
'N-fifty-dolers out of his pockit inter theirn,
And then he may go to thnnder.

Ef a feller's driv to distraxion
In a blo, and axes wot to du,
He cant git no sort o' sattisfaxion
Out o' none on em—cupting, mait, nur crew.

Wnn day I clim inter their blamed riggin,
Jest to see wot thar wos, and in hopes
To kepe shet of em wnn spell—but dog it!
I see 2 on em comin up the ropes.

Wnn on em ketcht me and hilt hold on me,
While tother miserable cuss
Tide me up with a nasty, sticky cloze-line,
Smellin o' tar or sumthin wuss.

Thar they kep me—darn their picturs!
And nobody done nothin but larf,
Till I'd forkt out fur a bottle o' brandy—
It come to $2½.

That's the last $2½
They'll ever git out o' me,
Fur Ile travvil in a durned top-waggin,
Afore Ile be ketched agin to sea.

[H. H. Brownell.

THE LIVE SOFA.

A MAN OF MANY VAGARIES.

MR. LUNDY was a peculiar looking man, with a thin face, and long straight hair, that he fancied never needed cutting. He had, at one time, been very unfortunate in his business; but, though made rich since by a large legacy, he was not in a condition to enjoy it. The fact is, Mr. Lundy was a confirmed hypochondriac.

For many years Mrs. L. had staid at home, and humored his whims, but one season her pretty daughter wanted to go to a watering-place, not for any disease in particular, but to see the world, and the young folks in it.

Behold them, then, comfortably established in a sea-side hotel. For two days Mr. Lundy had been all right; but one morning his poor wife knew what was coming, by the peculiarity of his looks and motions. Her book fell from her hand; Minnie turned pale.

"He's been flighty all the morning," said Mrs. L. "Dear, dear, see him whirl—what is it, Lundy?"

"A feather, my dear—a feather; catch me—hold me. Don't you see the wind is blowing me everywhere? It will take me out to sea, and I shall get saturated—yes, wet through, Mrs. Lundy. I beg you to catch me; pin me to your bonnet: I shall be safe there. Just see how frightfully I ruffle; the slightest puff of air agitates me throughout. I'd rather be anything than this; do put me in your bonnet, my dear."

"I'll put you in a mad-house before long," muttered the exasperated wife, "if you cut up such capers. Come into the hotel, Mr. Lundy."

"Come into the hotel, madam; you talk as if I had legs. Did you ever see a feather walk? Why, I'm lighter than a snow-drift; I wish I had a brick in my hat to keep me down. Ah! I envy everything stationary. Observe how I quiver; stick a pin in me, my dear, and fasten me to the floor. Is there enough of me for a pen? Am I a hen-feather, or a duck-feather, or what?"

"Goose-feather, if anything, you tiresome mortal," cried his wife. "I'm sick of your vagaries. First, you're a cat on the roof, mewing and keeping everybody awake; then you're a glass bottle, full of water, freezing and snapping; you're anything and everything but a reasonable man. I'm tired of it."

"Mrs. Lundy, will you have the goodness to put me in your pocket; squeeze me in your hand, anything, that I may feel safe in your protecting care. I'm floating—(singing.)

"'I'm afloat, I'm afloat!'—ah—what's that?"

"Nothing, Mr. Lundy, but Joe's whip. I called him from the coach-house; lay on, Joe."

"But, my love, my legs."

"Nonsense, Mr. Lundy; lay on, Joe. Feathers haven't got legs."

"True, Mrs. L., but they have marrow, and that's what feels. Pray, beg Joe to stop."

Just then, up ran little Tom—the only male hope of the Lundy family—and, strange to say, in his hand a handsome hen's feather. A triumphant smile illumined the face of Lundy the elder.

"Now, my dear," he said, gravely taking the feather in his hand, "I hope you'll believe me. My child, look on that feather, and be thankful; that was me."

And little Tom, chuckling at the idea, ran up and down the piazza, repeating merrily—

"Pa was a hen, once; dear me, how funny."

Minnie Lundy was captivating; there is no doubt about that. In pink, blue, white, or green she looked equally charming. There were rich men there who would have been glad to charm her, and nice men, and silly men—silly to that extent that they were fools, and didn't know it. But it happened that a young physician was luckier than them all, and poorer. "I must have that girl," he said, sotto voice, a dozen times a day, and then heartily wished that she had a fever. He was very handsome. Probably he saw Minnie through the back of his head, for he was always looking out of the window when she came in, and always blushed violently.

One day Minnie followed her mother into the parlor. As usual, Dr. Stag was there.

"My dear," cried Mrs. Lundy, who had just come from the garden; "you look excited."

"O! mamma!"—and her voice was so sweetly low—so softly agitated—"we shall have to leave this place—indeed we shall. Father is taking on terribly; some of the boarders are laughing; others are shocked."

"And what is the freak now, my dear?"

"O! he's a rooster, and crows till he is black in the face."

"A rooster!—horrible! And here we are—not a doctor we know——"

Somebody wheeled round from the window.

"Madam—I heard you speaking of—the—ahem—need of a doctor. Excuse my forwardness—but I am a physician."

Of course Minnie was more beautiful than ever in her confusion.

"My poor husband has an unfortunate tendency that annoys everybody near him."

"Perhaps he is a hypochondriac. I think I have seen him. Where is he, madam?"

"On the north porch," said Minnie.

"And I am sure we are very much obliged," added the mother, "if you can only help him."

The first sound that struck their ears, as they issued from the door, was a grand and sonorous "cock a-doo-dle-do-o!"

"John—Mr. Lundy," cried his wife, "what a sad spectacle you are making of yourself."

"I'm not a spectacle, good woman: I'm a rooster. Get out of my way—do you not notice the expanse of my wings? Cock-a-doo-dle-do!"

"What shall we do?" cried the poor wife, turning to the doctor, "O, sir, can you stop this ridiculous exhibition?"

"Trust me, madam," said the young man, biting his lip, for the sight was almost too ridiculous for his gravity.

"Upon my word," he continued, addressing the deluded man, "what a magnificent creature! Why, his feathers are a yard long. Where did you get such a splendid specimen? Is he imported?"

"Cock-a-doo-dle-do!" yelled the human biped, strutting more than ever. "That woman has nothing to do with me, sir—nothing at all. I'm a rooster on my own account—cock-a-doo-dle-do."

Here the doctor gave orders in an aside to one of the servants, who went away grinning. Then, turning to the rooster, who was by this time red in the face with exertion, he said:

"I declare it makes my mouth water to think what a capital dinner that bird would furnish. May I wring his neck, madam? It will take but a few seconds!"

"No, you don't," cried the other; "I'm tough—I'm very tough—I'm an old bird, sir—not to be caught with chaff."

"But you are a rooster; what else are you good for?"

"Good to crow, sir; good to crow," and forthwith ensued the loudest screech of all, succeeded by a somersault and a sensation of suffocation. Another moment and the servant reappeared with a dead fowl in his arms.

"I assure you, sir, it had to be done," said the doctor, gravely, as Mr. Lundy rubbed his face and pinched his throat.

"Did you really ring my neck sir?" the hypochondriac asked gravely.

"When you were a rooster, certainly."

"Did I die game?" asked the other, with a manner of solemn importance.

"You did—particularly game," replied the doctor.

"Thank you, sir. If I should happen to turn into a rooster again, I shall know where to go."

"I shall be most happy to—to wring your neck for you, sir, on any such interesting occasion."

"Very kind, I'm sure. If you should ever get into trouble, John Lundy will stand your friend."

"Don you promise me that, sir?"

"I do, and I never break my word."

After that, Minnie walked in the garden sometimes; and Minnie was not alone—not she.

"I love violets best," said the doctor to her one day.

"And I roses." So Minnie, being the least bit sentimental, quoted Pope on roses—something about dew. And the doctor went on Shakspeare, very bad, indeed, till somehow, in some way—he never could tell how or in what way (neither could she) he had said it.

See dictionary for "it."

"Indeed, I must not listen to this," murmured Minnie, dying to hear it again. "My father, if he knew—"

"Would disapprove, perhaps," cried the young doctor "And why? Because I am poor. And you, too, perhaps—"

"No, no; I—I—you know I—love you—but—"

"Hark! Who calls?"

Enter Tommy.

"Oh, sis, pa's took again, and he's going it awful!"

"What is it now, dear?" asked Minnie, with the face of an angel; but perhaps she wasn't a little cross at the interruption.

"Oh, he's a sofa, and 'ma says please somebody come and smash him all to bits."

"What shall we do?" sighed Minnie; "that is the most ridiculous freak of all."

"Don't be frightened, my love," said the doctor. "Tommy, run right home and tell your mother I will be there in a few minutes. Now, Minnie, there is but one way I know of to cure your father, at once and for all, and that is by giving him a shock."

"What! of electricity?"

"No, dear—far more powerful than that. You must go to the little brown house over there, and be married."

"Oh, never; my father would kill me."

"Does he ever break his word?"

"I never knew him to."

"All right. He promised me that if I should ever get into trouble he would help me out."

"Did he, really? Then he will."

"But it is necessary that we give him the shock first. Delay not, my darling; you shall never regret it."

Of course she went.

"All I ask is that nobody'll sit on me, for I'm cracked. Besides, I'm just varnished, and not quite dry yet. Do, my dear, stand at the door and tell people as they come in that I cannot be sat on, or in any way meddled with, I'm so flimsily fastened together."

This was the speech that greeted Doctor Stag as he entered Mr. Lundy's parlor with Minnie. Mrs. L. was in tears.

"Doctor, as soon as ever I get home I'll have that ridiculous man carried directly to the hospital; indeed I will," cried the poor woman. "I've borne it long enough, and I'm completely worn out."

"So am I, my dear," piped up her husband. "I expect I'm second-hand; shouldn't wonder in the least, my legs feel so shaky. Pray don't touch me, unless you get a soft rag and clean me carefully. Isn't one roller gone, my dear?"

"Roller gone—your wits are gone. I wish I was a man. I'd varnish you in such a way that you'd never want to be a sofa again, or any other piece of furniture."

The doctor stood near, gravely considering.

"My dear, you are better as you are, for I see in the last five minutes you have come out a beautiful washbowl and pitcher. But isn't your nose a little cracked, or do I see awry? I shouldn't wonder, for my head is full of brass tacks. I think I've snuffed them up my nose. It's worse than influenza."

"Was ever poor creature so afflicted?" murmured Mrs. Sofa—I mean Mrs. Lundy.

"Never, my love. I protest that if I could be anything else I would—but a sofa I am, and a poor one at that."

At that moment the doctor sprang forward and planted himself upon the prostrate body of Mr. Lundy.

"Capital sofa this," he said, keeping his position in spite of his victim's struggles.

"Get up—I'm cracking in six places. Good heavens! you'll ruin me—you'll break my back! Get up till I'm properly mended, for pity's sake."

"Upon my word," said the doctor calmly, "this piece of furniture acts as if it was alive. It kicks and wriggles, and makes me laugh at its antics. What a ridiculous sofa!"

"I tell you I'm second-hand," cried the hypochondriac more faintly than before, for a hundred and thirty pounds, dead weight, was no light infliction. "I'm brass-tacked—old—very old—full of cracks—one roller gone. O! pray don't lean your weight on me."

The doctor lifted himself cautiously. The sofa gave one deep inspiration.

The doctor looked serious.

"Are you sure you're a sofa?"

"Of course I am."

"Then you're no longer Mr. Lundy?"

"I am no longer Mr. Lundy."

"Can you keep a secret?"

"Certainly I can."

"Do you know old Lundy's daughter?"

"I guess I do."

"Won't you let on to the old fellow if I tell you something?"

"Not if you say no."

"Well, I've just married her. She's my wife."

Off went the sofa like a gun.

"What! You villian!"

"Take care—you'll break," cried the doctor.

"You young rascal!"

"You old sofa!"

"You desperate young thief!"

"You ricketty sofa, with your head full of brass tacks, I tell you," cried the doctor, still evading him; "if you had not been a feather, and a rooster, and a sofa, and the cats know what—you'd looked after your daughter better than you have. But come, let's be friends, and thank me for curing you. You will never be a hypochondriac again—I'll take good care of that—for you see its a nice thing to have a medical adviser in the family. Besides, you promised me once that if I was in trouble you'd help me through. Come, come, let's be quits."

"I see I can't help myself," said the old man gravely; "but I tell you what, I shall consider you a thief until you are able to support your wife in the style she is accustomed to."

"And I, sir, shall consider you a sofa until you revoke that decision."

It is needless to add, that was the last of the trouble.

A RUSSIAN WOLF-HUNT.

WHILE connected with the American legation in Russia, I received a very pressing invitation from Count Potowski to visit him at his castle in the country, about twenty leagues from St. Petersburgh, where he promised me some rare sport in hunting wolves.

We started off, one clear, cold afternoon, in a troika (drawn by three horses abreast, and large enough to give ample room to three persons besides the driver,) for the scene of our exploits, carrying with us a half-grown hog, which was to serve us for bait. We reached our first destination just as the sun was sinking in his snowy bed, and the full round moon was rising to silver over the scene. Then the hog was taken out and attached to the troika by an iron chain, from four to six feet long, and the horses started forward at a brisk pace over the level, glistening plain. The hog began to squeal, and the Count turned to me with a laugh

"How do you like the sport, Mr. Kingston?" he said.

"I think I shall like it better when I see something to shoot, and this screeching brute gets his sharp tones a little modified!" I replied, half-stopping my ears.

"You will have other noises to take off your attention presently," said the Count.

"Do you think we shall be fortunate enough to draw out any wolves in this way?" I asked.

"Give me half an hour," rejoined the Count, "and if I don't show you more wolves than you would care to face afoot, then consider me your debtor for what you please."

After going some distance, our hog, greatly to my relief, changed his tune from his shrill, ear-piercing squeal, into something resembling a mournful whine. The sun went down, and the moon rose in full splendor, pouring over the white, polished snow a brilliant light, that, by refraction, was rendered almost dazzling.

"Hark!" cried the Count, as a long, low, peculiar howl came sweeping over the plain, "did I not tell you so? There is our first answer to our complaining friend behind. And there again! do you hear? there is another, and another! we shall soon have work before us. See!" he almost immediately added, pointing away to the left, "there they come!"

I looked in the direction indicated, and saw, dimly in the distance, what appeared to be two or three small, moving shadows; I looked to the right, and beheld more of the same kind; and on all sides we now heard those long, dismal howls by which one wolf calls to another, and I knew they were gathering in force, and would soon be around us.

Our chained hog continued his plaintive cries, and the wolves fell in behind, and pressed forward, till they came up within fifty yards, where, for a time, their timidity seemed to hold them. As their numbers increased, which they did every minute—the beasts at times appearing to spring from the earth in a mysterious way—their boldness increased also; and they gradually drew nearer and nearer, snapping, snarling, and growling, and so frightened our horses that the driver had much difficulty in holding them down to a reasonable pace.

"Now then, gentlemen," said the Count, "let us begin our sport, and Heaven send us a safe deliverance from its perils!"

With this he fired two shots at the row of fiery eyes behind us. A sharp yelp followed, and one of the animals began to limp and fall back; whereupon the others, perhaps smelling and getting a taste of his blood, sprang furiously upon him, tore him to pieces, and devoured him in almost the time it takes me to tell it. In two minutes more the hungry beasts were pressing forward more eagerly than ever. I fired next, and brought down another, which was also torn to pieces and devoured in less than a minute, and then the furious beasts again drew nearer, and in still larger numbers.

From this moment the animals increased with startling rapidity. For more than an hour we loaded and fired as fast as we could, and for every one we shot, it appeared to me as if there were half-a-dozen to take its place. Emboldened by numbers and a taste of blood, they pressed up closer and closer, till we could almost reach them, the foremost bounding around and snapping at the poor hog, which was now terrified almost to death, and exerted itself to the utmost to escape from their sharp fangs.

Up to this moment I had been so busily engaged, and so excited with the sport, as to give no thought to our own danger; but now, I confess, I began to feel very uneasy, not to say alarmed. Where had all these beasts come from? and what was to be the end of the gathering? It seemed as if all Russia had poured them out on one spot. There must have been a thousand—perhaps five times that number—for I could not count them. They had arranged themselves in the form of a crescent, the centre of the arc resting on the hog, and the two wings reaching forward to the rear of the horses, which snorted with fear, and required all the skill of the driver to hold them. It was a wild, impressive sight, with just enough danger to make it sublime. The heavens were clear, the moon round and full, the plain almost a dead level, the snow as white as milk, bright and glistening, with here and there a thin, light covering, over a hard crust, that flew up in fleecy clouds, like the fine spray of a waterfall, and over this we were dashing, with three fiery horses abreast, and a black, rolling cloud of wolves to the right, left, and rear of us, in the form of a crescent, their keen eyes looking like so many little balls of fire. We were all standing up, loading and firing, the Count directly to the rear, and his friend and myself to the right and to the left.

As I have said, I had begun to feel somewhat alarmed—for I saw that, should any accident happen, such as the fall of one of the horses, or the upsetting of the troika, we could scarcely hope to get off with life, but I did not like to mention my fears to persons who had had so much experience as my companions.

At last, seeing that matters were steadily becoming worse instead of better, and that, great as was the number of our foes, they were still increasing, I ventured to say—

"Count, these ravenous beasts are pressing up very close!"

"Indeed they are!" he replied, taking a quick, keen survey of the whole scene. "They are getting pretty well forward, too!" he pursued, with an anxious glance toward the horses. "I confess I don't like that. What do you say, Paul?" he added, addressing the driver.

"My lord, I find it very difficult to manage the horses."

"Do you think we are in any serious danger now, Paul?"

"I don't like to see the beasts creeping so far forward, my lord."

"Nor I, and I think we had better knock over a few of the foremost."

We now, by the count's advice, directed our fire at the two horns of the crescent; but though we shot down the foremost with great rapidity, and continued to do so till our guns became heated, I could not perceive that it thinned them in the least, or had any good effect. It broke their regularity and threw them into some confusion, it is true; but this, so far from being an advantage to us, I fancied worked against us, by causing them to become bolder and press up around us still closer.

"By my faith!" at length exclaimed the Count, in a tone that betrayed some degree of alarm, "we must get out of this soon, or the beasts will be upon us! I never saw so many before in my life, and I have shot till I am tired. Let me see! We must have fired some three hundred times apiece; and, allowing that only every other shot has been effectual, we must have brought down, say, five hundred wolves; and yet they are here, closing up around us, more numerous than ever, a countless legion! One trip, one tumble, one tilt, and we are gone! How now, Paul, my brave lad—how are you going to get out of this?"

"By giving the horses their heads and letting them take a steady turn to the left, so as to change the position of the whole body of pursuers at once."

"Are you sure of the animals?"

"I think I can trust them."

"And the troika, Paul?"

"I shall do my best, trusting to Heaven, my lord! I think the risk far less than riding as we are."

"Then save us at your will, Paul, and look to me for a handsome reward when you have put us safe within the castle gates!"

The next few minutes were exciting beyond anything I had ever experienced in my life. The driver shook the reins, gave a peculiar chirp and whistle, and our noble steeds, as anxious to escape as ourselves, sped away like the wind. I fairly held my breath, feeling that a crisis had come involving life and death. Away, away we flew, the keen air cutting our faces, the light snow blinding our eyes, and the little troika bounding over the glistening surface like a gallant boat on the foam-crested billows. I watched the dark rolling cloud of living animals, with their lolling tongues and eyes of fire, and saw with a feeling of joy that I cannot express, that they were slowly but perceptibly falling behind; that we were gaining on them—inch by inch, it was true—but still gaining on them. If the noble horses could but hold at this speed and no accident should befall us! We were all breathless with intensity of feeling—the single chirp or sharp whistle of our driver being the only human sound that issued from our party.

Gradually the horses began to turn, slowly turn, in a broad circle to the left, so as to flank that horn of the crescent. As we came gracefully round, so as in a measure to face our snarling pursuers, surprise and fear for the moment threw them into confusion. Impulsively they parted and suffered us to pass through their dense ranks and gain a homeward start before getting a clear comprehension that we were actually escaping and leaving them behind. Then, with loud, angry yells, they laid down to the chase, but were no match for our fleet coursers, that every moment widened the space between them and their foes. Oh, how I loved the noble brutes that were so gallantly saving us!

"Bravo!" at length burst in a wild yell from the excited Count; "bravo, my noble steeds, and bravo, gallant driver! this night's work shall be remembered to you all!"

His words of rejoicing were instantly changed to a cry of dismay, as one of the horses stumbled, staggered, pitched forward, and came down upon his knees, checking up his companions and almost hurling them upon their backs. The noble brute, as if he knew that death to all of us was threatened through him, made a tremendous struggle to regain his footing and pace; and with success, thank God! or this tale had never been told.

In another half hour the ravenous wolves were far behind us, and an hour saw us safe within the castle gates, uttering prayers of thanksgiving.

The next day we rode out upon the snowy plain, and found it strewn for miles with the bones of the wolves we had slain on that to me ever memorable night.

WINDING UP A STEAMBOAT.—It is seldom that one sees a more forcible instance of the "pursuit of knowledge under difficulties," than is recorded in the following sketch of a verdant Connecticut youth's first voyage in a steamboat:

His curiosity was unbounded. He examined here, and he scrutinized there; he wormed from the engineer a compulsory lecture on the steam engine and mechanics in general; and from the fireman an essay on the power of "white heat," and the average consumption of pine wood, etc.

At length his "inquiring mind" was checked in the investigations. He had mounted on the wheelhouse, and was asking the pilot:

"What you doin' that for, Mister! what good does it do?"

He was here observed by the Capatain, who said in a gruff voice:

"Go away from there. Don't you see the sign? No talking to the man at the helm! Go 'way?"

"Oh, certain—ye-es; but I only wanted to know—"

"Well, you do know that you can't talk to him—so just go away."

With unwitting willingness the verdant youth came down; and as it was soon dark, he presently went below; but four or five times before he "turned in," he was on deck and near the wheelhouse, eyeing it with a thoughful curiosity; but with the Captain's rebuff still in his ears ventured to ask no question.

In the first gray of morning he was up and out on deck; and after some hesitation, perceiving nobody near save the pilot, who was turning the wheel as when he last saw him, he asked his suppressed question in an oblique style, somewhat characteristic of his region:

"Wal—goin' it yet, ha? Been at it all night, ha?—a screwin' on her up?"

What vague ideas of "screwin' up" to make her "go ahead" must have bothered the poor fellow's brain during the night!

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1866.

HAGAR'S VISION.

SENATOR HAGER, having thrust his bill into the Common School System, stands very much in the attitude that a pelican might that had thrust its bill into a hornet's nest. The position can scarcely be called an enviable one. Admitting that the system needed "stirring up," very few at the present juncture of affairs would choose to be the spoon. His name may be viewed as a propheey. But Sarah's handmaiden had an easy time of it compared to that which is being visited upon the Senator, for his afflictions are at once those of both Hagar and Ishmael combined. Originally driven forth into the wilderness of Sacramento, he now finds that the hand of every school-master, school-mistress and child is against him, while his is commonly supposed to be against them.

The press are yet undecided exactly what grounds to take upon the question. The Bulletin, so far, has only delivered itself of weak generalities and truisms; the Flag is too busy arranging the currency business to attend to anything else; the Alta is waiting to see which way the cat is likely to jump; with singular indiscretion, Calls rush in where Altas fear to tread.

while the Examiner, evidently with a vague idea that the Democratic party will be benefitted by the bill and "Abolitionists" abolished, endorses it to the letter. A greater popular interest, evinced in the circulation of petitions and inditement of letters to the different journals, has not been seen in this city since the agitation of the Bulkhead bill.

The salient points of Senator Hagar's bill may briefly be enumerated as follows: Limiting the powers of the Board of Education; the cost of school-buildings; amount of taxation for school purposes; the years in which children may avail themselves of school privileges, and the course of study to be pursued.

So on the whole we do not know that it may not very properly set up as a rival to the Statute of Limitations.

We have no apprehension that it will pass. The only element of popularity which it possesses is the proposed limitation of taxes for school purposes to three and a-half mills on the dollar. This will be held in the common estimation as providing a sufficient revenue. The idea of making the Board of Education subordinate to the Board of Supervisors is absurd. It might quite as well be demanded that the Board of Supervisors have to submit their plans for street grading, outside ditching, and all expenditures over five hundred dollars, for the sanction of the Board of Education. As to the cost of school buildings, the larger, roomier, and better constructed they are, the better. Children multiply in this climate very fast. We are not building merely for to-day, but for all time; we want school buildings which will be a credit to the city when it has reached that larger growth which may confidently be predicted for it. As for the age at which children may be received, seven years is generally young enough for school discipline to commence; but, if parents feel that the little ones will be under a better influence at school than at home, open the doors to them. And, as for limiting the course of study—limit the water that our children may drink, the air that they may breathe, but do not limit that. It may be argued that but few young men, educated at college, carry their classics with them very far beyond the gates at leaving it; that three years after closing their curriculum, they pant and perspire and grow red in the face over a simple Latin line, and scarcely know the letters of the Greek alphabet by sight, let alone being able to call them by name. This proves nothing. The boy who achieves learning, and does not have it thrust upon him, will remember better. After struggling through Homer and Virgil by the light of a tallow candle in an attic bed chamber, he will not easily let go his grasp on the languages in which they are written. Talk of educating a boy or girl "above their station!" Who in this country can determine what that station may be to-morrow? Depend upon it that the youth who is ambitious enough to acquire an education "above his station," will yet make that station his own. That very education is the ladder by which he will mount to it.

No; we cannot endorse Senator Hager's school bill, and we are surprised to see the excitement raised about it when the Legislature could not pass it without feeling that they provoked the flood which dashes around the Capitol and afforded it an excellent excuse for rushing in and drowning them. If there are more children in the city than can be accommodated in the present school houses—build more. If economy must be practiced, cut off Fourth of July appropriations, and the thousand and one needless and useless expenses which the city daily incurs. But do not cut down a single school privilege. That is economy which lasts longest and works the most good in the end, and economy in education well deserves to be called by a harsher name.

EFFECT OF EXECUTIONS.

ON Monday last, Barney Olwell was made to suffer the extreme penalty of the law, his offence being murder in the first degree. The execution took place within the walls of the jail, and was conducted in a seemly and solemn manner. Very few were present save those who are commonly supposed to have a right to go everywhere, from the fact that the public look to their facile pens for a broad blazonry in newspaper print of every event to which interest can be supposed legitimately or illegitimately to attach, whether that event be a wedding, a hanging, a funeral, or the birth of a royal baby.

To capital punishment we are not opposed. The man who takes the life of another premeditatedly, does so with a full knowledge of the consequences, and tacitly agrees to forfeit his own. On the same principle that the tiger which has once tasted human blood is slain, the man who has taken the life of a fellow being proves himself by that action to be too dangerous to the community to be permitted to remain a member of it—and there is no way of removing him from it so effectual as that one which divine law suggests and human law commands and enforces. The more certain and the more terrible the punishment of crime, the less is the encouragement offered for its committal. Did retribution always follow crime as swiftly and unfailingly as thunder does the lightning's flash, the red calendar which is on every side outspread until humanity sickens and turns away with pallid cheeks, would be very materially lessened.

What we do object to is the manner in which executions are conducted. We object to giving the condemned even a select audience before which he can indulge in any theatrical display to the gratification of his own vanity. We protest against allowing him to go to the gallows with a consciousness that he will be the hero of the hour, that his every motion will be watched with hungry eyes, that his every syllable will be caught by avid ears, and that every particular of his dress and demeanor will an hour thence be spread before the great public by eager pens. It has long since been decided that one public execution begets a countless number of murders, in the ambition of ill-trained minds to enjoy the sensation of attracting the attention of a mob as the hero even of a tragedy in which themselves are the victims, and putting upon record the praise, echoed around the foot of the gallows by sympathetic lips, of having died game. As well, we maintain, have public executions as permit the details of them to be made public in print. Yes—better, if the tongue of the press were to be tied as a set off, for while in the former case only a few in the immediate vicinity of the gallows could see or hear what was going on, in the latter thousands at the antipodes become familiar with every detail, and the terror which should be produced in their minds is very often seasoned if not overshadowed by an admiration for the victim's deportment and a vague ambition to exhibit their own fortitude under such trying circumstances. The halter as administered in the western world has an attraction which the Oriental bowstring has not. A silence and mystery surround the latter which do not at all induce men to woo its embrace. And without importing the bowstring we may at least learn a lesson from its teachings, and by making our executions so private that no details of them can be spread before the morbid minds of the multitude, effectually repress all attitudinizing on the part of the doomed in the presence of death, and all desire of the criminal to have it recorded of him that a jest from his lips and the drop fell at the same moment. Gentlemen of the press might object to a deprivation of the accustomed spectacle, but as the privilege would not be denied them of being present at their own executions if events made it necessary, they could not very well complain.

THE Brooklyn Life has appointed Mr. Stephen King general agent for this coast. The "Brooklyn" is a liberal company, and the fact that it has chosen a liberal and popular man for its representative is a favorable augery for its local business success.

LOGIC RUN MAD.

IN an editorial article, last week, we expressed, in a general way, a disbelief of the popular theory, that steamboat companies, captains, and engineers, are constantly plotting against the lives of their passengers. It seemed to us quite as sensible to suppose that stage companies would put rotten axles under their coaches, to save the trifling difference between their value and the cost of sound ones, as to assume that a steamboat company, after spending two or three hundred thousand dollars in building a boat, would put a cheap and rotten boiler into its hold, cocked and primed to go off with a touch, while the employees of the boat who stood around it, were never easy until they pulled the trigger. Assuming as premises what very few will deny, that all their interests lie in the prevention of accidents, the conclusion that they will do all in their power to guard against them can fairly enough be reached, if there is anything in inductive reasoning. But the Morning Call, which never permits an opportunity to pass of waging war upon Whately, or manifesting a contempt for Bacon, only equalled by the feeling of a Jew towards a flitch of pork, continues the argument for us, and pushes it to an ultimatum scarcely warranted by the premises, and which we, unassisted, could never have reached. Thus:

"Would a captain be guilty of carelessness that would endanger his own life? Of course not. Ergo, captains are not culpable; companies are not responsible. Like Jack Bunsby's remark, 'the bearings of this 'ere observation lies in the application on it.' Murderers are not responsible, because, first, they take heavy risks from the victim, then from the law. Highway robbers are not responsible, and why? Do they not run the risk of being shot, in the first place, and secondly, are they not amenable to justice?"

We cannot permit the Call to avail itself of our premises for the purpose of building up even an illogical defence for murderers. Because we assume that a man would not very likely be guilty of cutting his own throat, it does not exactly follow that he is not culpable for horse-stealing, and that murderers are not responsible for cutting throats in a miscellaneous way. Though we asserted that a man would not be apt intentionally to upset his own mutton chop in the coals, we should still dispute that he had a right to steal his neighbor's sheep. If we printed the very simple fact: Mushrooms are not harmful, would the Call adopt it as a major proposition, supply the minor: The mushroom is a fungus; and come in, like the First Grave Digger in Hamlet, with an ergo: All fungi are wholesome? The Call thinks that the editor of THE CALIFORNIAN is better "in making a poem than an argument." Really, we would like to repay the compliment in kind, but, with the article from which the above extract is made before us, we can but express the opinion that the writer thereof is incapable of "making" either. However apt he may be in constructing "star notices," he certainly does not shine in syllogisms.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, Mr Setchell opened the week and closed his engagement with Ici on Parle Francais, 1000 Milliners, and Toodles. Stormy as the evening was, he had an excellent house, proving, as he modestly remarked in a pathetic speech consequent upon a call before the curtain, that he was indeed destined to continue a raining star to the end. On Tuesday, Mr. Bandmann commenced his farewell engagement, so it may be said that the transition was from gay to grave, and as Mr. Jackson appeared on Thursday evening, it may also be added that it was then "from lively to severe." Tuesday evening Mr. Bandmann played his great character-part in what the Bulletin calls the "historial drama" of Narcisse. Wednesday evening he appeared as "Shylock" in The Merchant of Venice. We have before expressed the opinion that Bandmann's Shylock is not "the Jew that Shakspeare drew." On neither occasion were the houses very good. The Jacksons filled the interregnum on Thursday with Rip Van Winkle, Mr. Bandmann resuming last evening with The Old Corporal—an adaptation from the French—of which, by the way, the critic of the N. Y. Leader positively asserts that Mr. House is not the author, and that "the California advertisement is a gross mistake." Says the critic: "It is well known here that Edward H. House was not the author of the Winter Garden play, and he told me himself that George Arnold had written Bandmann's version." This afternoon, the weather having shut off the promised matinée last Saturday, Mr. Setchell will appear in Dombey and Son—"by request of numerous friends." In the evening Bandmann comes upon the boards, when The Beauforts, dramatized from Bulwer's Night and Morning, will be brought out for the first time in California.

The Metropolitan opened on Monday evening, with the company that lately held possession of the American—reminding one of the abandonment of Pickens and the occupation of Sumter by the Anderson troupe. Mr. Noah's Love's Disguises ruled until Wednesday evening, when Neighbor Jackwood was put on. On Thursday evening, Mr. Wheatleigh inaugurated his farewell engagement with The Whiteboy's Bride—said to be by Tom Taylor. This drama draws upon a number of others for material, but upon none so much as Arrah-na-Pogue. We have "Redmond O'Hara," corresponding to "Shaun the Post," "Grace Dwyer" to "Arrah Meelish," "Paddy McKew" to "Michael Feeny," "Capt. Trevor" to "Beamish McCoul," and "Grace Moriarty" to "Fanny Power." In a good portion of the plot, and many of the scenes, it is Arrah-na-Pogue inverted. Capt. Trevor gives Grace Dwyer bank notes, and Redmond O'Hara comes to know of it, but, instead of taking it sensibly, as Shaun did, he gets jealous and angry, enlists, and attempts to do murder upon the Captain, only being prevented by a timely eclaircissement of the misunderstanding. For the rest there are the elements which enter into all of Lever's novels—an irrascible old Irish gentleman, an English attorney to furnish at once a backing and a butt, a cockney sergeant, and any number of sportive, frolicsome Irishmen, who shoot custom-house officers for occasional relaxation, and stick innocent travellers into bogs for a regular business—all of which is doubtless very funny for the boys, but death on the men who find themselves thus made frogs of. Mr. Wheatleigh appeared as Redmond O'Hara. The fault of this gentleman's Irish personations—and it is a very grave one—is stripping them of all that rollicking humor, so essentially Irish as to have become recognized as part and parcel of the National character. This was the noticeable defect of his Shaun the Post, as which, instead of the light-hearted boy who drove the car, he gave us a prematurely grave and thoughtful person, who might have been a student of Kant, or occupied with the vagaries of Descartes. Mr. Wheatleigh is a careful and finished actor—his Danny Mann is an excellent piece of acting, but he must divest himself of his Danny Mannerisms, and acquire a richer brogue, before he can hope to achieve real success in other Irish parts. The honors of Thursday evening were divided between Miss Chapman—who appeared as "Paudreen," a dumb boy, known to the peasantry as "The Innocent"—and Mr. Leach, who personated "Cicero Rabbits," an English attorney. Miss Chapman's pantomime was excellent, the grace and expression of her gestures receiving such aid from the play of her features, as she communicated her messages, that deaf people must regret that all are not born dumb. Mr. Leach did Cicero Rabbits in a con amore way; it seemed to fit him exactly; and a better piece of acting—if so natural a delineation can be called acting—even our exacting public will not ask for. In the scene with Mr. Moriarty—to whom he comes to loan fifteen thousand pounds, but is eventually kicked out of doors by that irrascible gentleman's orders—and in the enlistment scene, he is especially good. Of Mr. Percy's Mr. Moriarty we cannot say as much; he does not make up well for the character. Mrs. Sedley Brown was good; but why do the fates persist in casting a soubrette for sentimental parts? As Grace Moriarty, Mrs. Alicia Mandeville Thorne was easy and natural, and looked pretty as a pink—there was little else to do, it being a skeleton part at best. Mr. Beatty's Paddy McKew—the inevitable villain of the plot—scarcely made the hit that crowned Thompson's companion part of Michael Feeny, in the sister drama. Roundy, as Micky Magrath, had little to do, but he did that little so excellently well as to merit promotion in the ranks. Hamilton sank himself in "Sergeant Sidebottom" quite creditably; as Capt. Trevor, Mr. Thayer made no special point. As for the play itself, it went off very well, with the exception of the first act, which is too talky and bare of situations, and needs cutting. A small investment, too, in appropriate scenery would have paid. It will be repeated until further notice. Sam is underlined as the next novelty.

The Hiberuicon has done very well during the week. Thursday evening there was no exhibition, the hall being engaged for a ball; nor will there be any on Monday, for the same reason; but this afternoon and evening Ireland will be represented as a rolling country. Madam Blaisdell, the solo harpist, will have a benefit on Thursday evening next. The ensuing week is the last one of the exhibition here.

In the corridor of the Pacific Anatomical Museum—if we can class that which instructs under the head of amusements—the wise virgins in white still continue to hold their flambeaux, kept constantly trimmed and burning, and equally shining waxen lights inside permit man to take an internal view of himself and discover how he is put together and how suddenly and completely he can be taken down, or apart, and divided into small conic sections. On Sunday afternoons and evenings, Dr. Jordan lectures upon topics which undoubtedly have interest for a good proportion of the population.

On Wednesday evening, Brambilla opened her opera season at the Academy of Music with Lucia di Lammermoor. She was in excellent voice, and the mad scene, in the third act, was so well rendered that we came very near leaving a carte blanche of compliments for her friends to fill up at leisure. Morley also, was in good voice, and made his clear tenor tell.

Arrah-na-Pogue was produced in Sacramento on Tuesday night to an immense house. A slight delay occurred in opening, owing to the cellar's being full of water—a contretemps which suggested the expediency of changing the play to the Colleen Bawn, with real water in the cave scene. Certainly nothing could more interfere with the dry humor of the piece than a cellar full of water. But after awhile it was pumped out and the curtain rose on a highly excited audience. The Union—we like the criticisms of that paper for the critic always writes as though he knew what he was writing about—chronicles a success for Harry Wall's "Shaun the Post," but states that the "Wearin of the Green" which used to enthuse our Metropolitan audiences to such a dangerous degree, does not produce such an excitement there as to call for legislative interference. Miss Thorne receives a compliment; Thompson's "Michael Feeny" of course elicits warm praise; and Pauncefort's "O'Grady" receives an endorsement. Miss Goodrich is spoken of as playing "Fanny Power" "with more than her usual vim; Miss Yeamans is represented as causing "uproarious merriment" in the jig and trial scene, and Pardy, Thayer, and Anderson all get mention. Arrah-na-Pogue will be continued for another week—the waters willing.

NEW BOOKS.

THE books which Roman makes no end of sending, have accumulated upon our table with each successive week until we are really at a loss where to begin in the multitude that lie before us. Pluuging in medias res is sometimes an excellent way of solving similar difficulties, and thus we find Alexander Smith's Summer in Skye open in our hands. Where but in skye should we look for the poet who was so often in the clouds? It can by no means be assumed that the writer of good poetry will also write good prose, but our author furnishes at least one argument in favor of such a conclusion. He reproduces the scenery of Skye in crisp and sparkling language, and, while he tells all he saw, wearies the reader with very few details about himself, and in this respect he may well be held up as a model to tourists and travellers.

Had we been guided by the beauty of the books in deciding which one to begin with, Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn, illustrated, would have claimed precedence. For it really seems as though the excellence of typographer's art could not much further go. The contents of the volume are too well known to require criticism, and we prefer to entrust the lately discovered duty of proving that Longfellow is no poet to other pens. But the completeness of the work is somewhat marred we think by the grotesqueness, not to say incongruity, of the author's fancy in making such a company of men as the Student, the Spanish Jew, the Sicilian, the Poet, the Theologian, and the Musician meet under the roof of such a Wayside Inn, presided over by such a Landlord. Had the scene been laid in Utopia it were all well enough, but as it is the consistency which forms so great a charm in the Canterbury Tales is lacking.

The Life and Letters of Frederick W. Robertson furnish an excellent and instructive commentary upon his sermons, and will add greatly to the interest of the latter. The same noble truthfulness and courageous sincerity which characterize his sermons will be found to underlie his private life, and we also discover that tenderness of thought which so won upon his hearers from the pulpit pervading all his intercourse with his fellow men.

The vicissitudes of a single life are told in A Spinster's Story. The plot is rather complicated, and at times the story is told with a minuteness approaching to tediousness, but it is a fair representation of a certain class of modern novels.

In Country Love vs. City Flirtation, Mr. H. T. Sperry, the author, makes out a very good case in favor of the plaintiff, but, as we are unaware that any one has ever appeared for the defendant, it suggests itself as almost a pity that he had not availed himself of the default, and husbanded an amount of argument in verse which is mainly useful as bringing up memories of Hood, Saxe, and William Allen Butler.

In Richard Cobden, we have a reprint of an English work, telling the story of the life of that eminent apostle of free trade and of his philanthropic public services, as nearly as possible in the very words of the subject of biography. Such a work deserves a more extended mention than it is possible to give it in this column of brief notices.

In Golden Hair, intended to be a tale of the Pilgrim Fathers, we have very much the book which one would suppose Sir Lascelles Wraxall Bunt would write—after being already familiar with his mutilated translation of Les Miserables. It is intended to be a book for boys, but any little fellow who has ever made sail on a wherry, or navigated a raft across a pond in quest of lilies, will laugh at the Baronet's ideas of sea life and sailor phrases, and the story is very bunglingly told.

The honors of the authorship of The Ordeal for Wives, lie between Mrs. S. C. Hall and Edmund Yates, but we imagine that an event of very little importance is involved in the decision of the mooted point. It was originally published in a serial form in an English magazine—St. James we believe—fair in plot and not inelegantly written, it serves to convey a trite moral, and is a very good novel of modern society.

That political economy is not so dry a science as the common estimation holds it, is amply demonstrated in Elements of Political Economy, by Arthur Latham Perry. This work is really an excellent medium for diffusing a very necessary species of information—one with which not alone the masses, but also many who pass for well-read men, are unfortunately very little acquainted. Without verbiage, or a bewildering use of technical terms, Mr. Perry explains and analyses the principles upon which the science is built, and the reader, charmed by the freshness and conciseness of the style, is led along, page by page, until he becomes a student. The work has a special timeliness for our population, in view of the currency question now being so earnestly discussed on all sides, inasmuch as the chapters which treat upon this subject are full, clear, and logical. Few will dispute the conclusion with which the chapter "on currency in the United States" ends: "The most that can be said of any paper money is that it approximates in value and steadiness to gold and silver money. The closer the approximation the better the paper."

There was a time when we were willing to endorse, almost without reading, any book which the Harpers added to their brown-paper-covered series of "select novels," but that time is past. Latterly, they have got to occasionally printing some very stupid stories, though we must do them the justice to say that they seldom reproduce any to which exception can be taken upon the score of immoral tendencies. Miss Carew, by Amelia B. Edwards, fresh from their press, is a very good novel, natural and sensible in plot, and well written. Among the collection of stories which are introduced, by means of some waste paper which fell into the hands of one of the characters, we recognize one very thrilling one which we think we remember to have seen published some four or five years since in one of Dickens' Christmas books.

